The MINAS AND RIO RAILWAY, 106 miles long, will commence at Lavrinhas by a junction with the Dom Pedro Segundo Railway (which terminates at Rio de Janeiro, the Capital of the Empire), and will end at Tres Coracoes, near Campanha, the principal city of Southern Minas, thus placing the Province in railway communication with Rio de Janeiro, and by means of the San Paulo and Rio de Janeiro Railway with the Port of Santos.

The Act of Concession for the construction and working of this Railway was granted to Brigadier-General Couto de Magalhaes, and with subsequent Provincial and Imperial Decrees, provides amongst other conditions of minor importance as follows :—

> That the Imperial Government guarantees 7 per cent. interest per annum on the authorised capital of the Company for 30 years, payable half-yearly. That the guaranteed interest is payable during construction from the date of each portion of such capital, sufficient for each year's expenditure being deposited with the Company's bankers.
>
> That failure to complete the whole line within the time prescribed by the concession shall not involve the loss of the guarantee on the portion of the railway duly completed in the prescribed time.
>
> That one-half of surplus dividends beyond 8 per cent. per annum shall be paid by the Company to the Imperial Government, in reimbursement of advances made by them on account of guaranteed interest, until the same have been repaid.
>
> That the Government allow to be charged to the working expenses of the Railway, until the dividends exceed 7 per cent., the sum of £4,542 per annum, to form a reserve fund up to the sum of £22,500 for the Use of the Company to meet contingencies.
> That the Government may purchase the Railway at or at any time after thirty years, and before the expiration of ninety years, from its completion, at a price to be regulated (failing an agreement) by the net earnings of the previous five years, but not being less than the amount of the capital of the Company on which the interest is guaranteed, and after the expiration of ninety years, for the amount of the guaranteed capital, and in each case the price may be paid in 6 per cent. Imperial Government Obligations.
> That during ninety years no Railway be constructed in competition, within a zone of 30 kilometres on each side of the Railway.

The Province of Minas is the most populous, and one of the richest in the Empire, and enjoys a healthy climate. It contains over 2,000,000 inhabitants, and produces Coffee, Cotton, Tobacco, Wool, Hides, and Cattle (of which latter 100,000 are annually driven from the Province to Rio de Janeiro), besides other live stock. The goods which the Province requires, consisting of manufactured articles of every description, and of salt (whereof many thousand tons are annually consumed), are now conveyed chiefly on the backs of mules from the Dom Pedro Railway at a cost of £10 per ton, but will be carried by this Railway when completed.

The portion of the Province traversed by the Railway contains a population of 400,000. It already attracts, owing to its altitude and salubrity, and to its famous mineral springs of Campanha, Caldas, and Caxambu, numbers of visitors from the Metropolis and the low-lying and more tropical Provinces of the Empire. This will produce an important and greatly increasing source of traffic for the Railway.

The adjoining Province of San Paulo, with sources of traffic similar to those of Minas, is served mainly by the San Paulo Railway. This Railway, notwithstanding its cost of £32,000 per mile (as against £17,000 per mile of the Minas and Rio Railway) has paid dividends of 9 and 10 per cent. per annum, after dividing with the Government all profits exceeding 8 per cent. Its Ordinary £20 Stock is quoted on the London Stock Exchange at £34½, and its 5½ per cent. Bonds sell at £119.

The entire group of Railways of the [Southern provinces of Brazil, of which the Minas and Rio Railway will form one, earn good profits apart from the Government guarantees, viz., besides the San Paulo above referred to :—

The Dom Pedro Segundo (of which the Minas and Rio Railway is practically an extension)	earns	8½	per cent	per annum.
The Western of San Paulo	—	9½	—	—
The San Paulo and Rio (only three years open)	—	4½	—	—
The Mogyana of San Paulo	—	10½	—	—
The Leopoldina of Minas	—	7	—	—
The Valenciana Union	—	7½	—	—

By the success which the above and other Railways have attained, the annual burthen on the State arising out of the guarantee of existing Railways amounts to about £150,000 only, and is yearly decreasing.

The large earnings of the San Paulo Railway are mainly owing to the fact that the line crosses a Serra or mountain range into a fertile Province, and thus forms the only channel of traffic to the nearest sea-board of a large extent of fertile country. The Minas and Rio Railway will pass over another mountain range, and will, by its connection with the Dom Pedro Segundo Railway, form a similar channel of communication for another and adjoining Province, and therefore similar results may be expected.

The traffic of the Southern Provinces of Brazil admits of a very high tariff, not only because of the valuable character of the goods carried, but also because of the absence of competition. Hence the working expenses will be a comparatively small proportion of the gross receipts, as they have proved to be in the other Southern Railways.

The above facts seem to warrant the belief that the Minas and Rio Railway will earn good dividends independent of the guaranteed interest of seven per cent., and the probability that an additional dividend will be secured after the traffic of the Railway shall have been developed.

Complete studies of the whole Railway, with the detailed plans, sections, and drawings, and specifications and estimates of the cost of the works and rolling stock, have been approved and sanctioned by the Imperial Government of Brazil.

The value of the shares now offered for subscription may be estimated by reference to the following list of securities guaranteed by the Brazilian Government, and their present prices on the Londo Stock Exchange :—

The San Paulo Railway £20 Share (guaranteed 7 per cent.) ...	£34½
The Bahia and San Francisco Railway £20 Share (guaranteed 7 per cent.)...	24½
The Great Western of Brazil Railway £20 Share (guaranteed 7 per cent.)...	23½
The San Paulo and Rio Janeiro six per cent. £100 Bonds ...	103
The San Paulo five and a half per cent. Bonds	119

The Concessionaire's rights were recently purchased by Mr. Waring, and this Company is formed for raising the Capital authorised by the Government for carrying out the undertaking.

The Concession has been assigned to the Company, and a contract made with Messrs. Waring Brothers for the construction, completion, and equipment of the entire Railway to the satisfaction of the Imperial Government (and so as to entitle the Company to the payment of the guaranteed interest) within the time prescribed by the Concession, and in conformity with the terms thereof, for the proceeds of the bonds and shares, subject to the deduction therefrom of the administration and other expenses of the Company up to the opening of the Railway, and of a substantial sum to be employed as working capital thereafter.

Besides the above-mentioned deeds of assignment and contract, both dated October 12, 1880, and made, the first between Charles Waring of the one part and the Company of the other part, and the second between Waring Brothers of the one part and the Company of the other part; a deed dated May 11, 1880, and an Agreement of the same date with a Memorandum dated June 11, 1880, endorsed thereon, respectively made between Brigadier-General Jose Vieira Couto de Magalhaes and Charles Waring, have been executed, all of which, as well as duly authenticated copies and English translations of the Concession and Estimates, and of the Provincial and Imperial Decrees on which the Concession is based, as also copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company, can be seen at the Offices of the Solicitors.

Brazilian Legation, London, May 29, 1880.

"SIR,

"In reply to the communication which you have made me, that the Directors of the Minas and Rio Railway Company propose to raise the sum of £450,000, being the first issue of the maximum guaranteed capital of £1,816,875 (16,150 contos de reis) as authorised by the Imperial Decree No. 6,683 of September 12, 1877, I have to state that such issue will be in accordance with the terms of the said Decree, and that the interest of 7 per cent. guaranteed thereby, is payable half-yearly in London, reckoning from the dates of the deposit of the whole or any portion of such amount with the Company's Bankers, and the Certificates thereof being lodged with the Delegate of the Imperial Treasury in London.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
PENDO."

THE MINAS AND RIO RAILWAY COMPANY."

Applications may be made in the enclosed form, accompanied by a payment of £1 per Share on the number of Shares applied for, and be forwarded to the Bankers, The National Provincial Bank of England, Threadneedle Street, London, E.C. (or any of its Branches), and Messrs. C. Hopkinson and Sons, 3 Regent Street.

If no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full.

In default of payment of the sum due on allotment, or of any of the subsequent instalments, the allotment and all payments will be liable to forfeiture.

If in any case a less number of shares than are applied for be allotted, the surplus of the deposit on application will be applied towards the amount payable on allotment.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be be obtained of the Bankers; of Messrs. Helbert, Wagg, and Campbell, the Brokers of the Company; and of the Secretary, at the Temporary Offices, 51 Threadneedle Street, London, E.C.

The Subscription will be Opened on Monday, the 18th, and Closed on or before Saturday, the 23rd October instant.

London, October 15, 1880.

In Mr. BROUGH SMYTH'S Report to the Government will be found, page 83, the following extract from Report made by Lieutenant NICOLSON, who was appointed to search for Gold Mines, wherein he refers to this district :—" No fear can reasonably be entertained of the Mines failing or becoming exhausted, since the whole country for a circle of nearly 50 miles immediately under the Ghats, contains Gold." And at page 79, referring to the quantity of Gold sent with his Report, states that he sends from " the Kakatode and Cherrumpoya Rivers, under the Moorkooty Hills, one ingot weighing thirteen new gold fanams (touch 9½)." And, again, at page 79, Lieutenant Nicolson, in suggesting certain improved methods of washing for Gold, calculated to lead to the discovery of many mines, writes—" Particularly in the Loomdah and Moorkooty Hills, to which we have fairly traced the strata which contains gold in that direction." And finally, upon reference to the Appendix G. in Mr. BROUGH SMYTH'S Report, the following marked and significant paragraph will be found :—" The more important districts or localities in the Madras Presidency where Auriferous Quartz Veins occur, or where there are abandoned Gold Workings, or where Gold Mining operations are now carried on are as follows:—Amongst those specially mentioned—The Toodakull River, the Arnakyem River, the Carcatode Stream, the Carumpoya (Kareempoyah), and Poonapoya."

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is established for the purpose of purchasing the Freehold and Leasehold Property, known as the Kareempoyah Estates, comprising about 500 acres of land, situate under the Moorkooty and Koondah Hills, in the Madras Presidency, and adjacent to the Neilgherries.

The Estates comprise 339 acres (or thereabouts) of Freehold Land, the title to which has been submitted to the late Advocate-General of Madras, and his opinion leaves no doubt that it carries the mining rights.

The Estate also comprises 180 acres (or thereabouts) of Leasehold land, held for 99 years from January 1, 1875, at a rent of 50 Rupees (£5) per annum, with such mining rights as the lessee has or can obtain.

The Estate stands at an elevation varying from 3,000 to 4,000 feet above the level of the sea, with the celebrated Toodakull River running through the property,

This river, which is not dependent upon the mousoon rains for its supply, provides abundant and constant water-power all the year round, and forms the boundary of the Estate on the east, is about 3,500 feet above the level of the sea, whilst the average slope of the land belonging to this Company down to the river is an angle of 45 degrees.

To the west of the ridge there are steep descents into the Plains or Low-country of Malabar, where the Natives wash for Gold.

This elevation above the Sea Level gives a healthy and bracing climate, and enables Mining operations to be carried on throughout the year.

The accompanying Map shows the position of the property relatively to the "Glenrock" and other well-known Gold-bearing Estates in the Devála district, as well as the Koondah and Moorkooty Hills.

The facilities for mining on these Estates, both as regards water and timber, and cheapness of labour, are unsurpassed.

Transport to and from the Estates can easily and cheaply be accomplished over the Government road running between Ootacamund and Calicut, the port of shipment shown in Lieutenant Nicolson's Government Map.

The prospects in the districts in which these Estates are situated for Gold Mining operations are fully reported and commented upon in the accompanying extract of letter from the Principal Collector at Malabar to the Government of India, and also in Lieutenant Nicolson's Report, both published in a recent Report of Mr. Brough Smyth, the Mining Engineer, when in the service of the Government.

"The places and streams which afford the largest supply of gold dust are the following :—

"The Toodakull River, which rises in the Koondah Mountains, and after dividing the Walawynád Taluk from the Taluk of Neringanaad, falls into the great Ponáni River at Moochickul, about two miles North East of Turtullah.

"The Aliparambur, a rivulet which flows through Walawynád and part of Neringanaad, and joins the Toodakull River about two miles of Cherpalcheri.

"The Arnakyem River, which has its source in the Moorkooty and Koondah Mountains, and forming the boundary between the Ernád and the Walawynád Taluks, and passing the towns of Malupuram and Tirurangadi, it meets the sea at Caraloondy.

"The Carcatode stream, which rises in the Moorkooty Valley, and joins the Arnakyem River, near Pynaad, in Ernád Taluk.

With reference to the anticipated yield, Lieutenant Nicolson, in the same Report, says, at page 78 :—" It will at once appear evident that when 500 or 600 men can find it worth their while to work with the miserable and slovenly apparatus they possess, and with which the very least each man can possibly find is the weight of the third of a gold fanam per day, which trifling day's work very seldom happens, as the quantity found by one man daily varies from that just mentioned to the weight of ten gold fanams, on which occasion the mud is always taken from the deepest shaft, it will then, as above mentioned, appear evident that, were these Mines systematically worked on the European principle, the quantity of Gold to be had would be very considerable."

As to native primitive workings, he says (page 83): —" A little machinery would greatly increase the quantity to be procured ; for instance, their present mode of crushing ore is by breaking one piece against another until there is sufficient quantity of dust to fill a tray, which slow mode of working does not allow them to wash more than three or four trays' full per man in the course of the day, whereas with pumps and stamping mills they might probably wash ten times that number."

The Directors will, under the advice of their Consulting Engineer, Mr. William Vazie Simons, whose recent experience in the Wynaad gives him great advantages, proceed to develop the resources of the property:—

1st.—By an immediate arrangement for working, upon an efficient scale, any alluvial washings of the Moorkooty Hills on the streams running through the Property. This should at once yield immediate dividends, the system of alluvial washings by box and ground sluicing operations can, it is believed, be adopted on this Property with even greater success than at other estates, there being a plentiful supply of timber and water, and the average price of labour being four annas (sixpence) per day.

2nd.—By the erection of the necessary stamping, crushing, and amalgamating machinery, &c.; which it was estimated by Mr. Brough Smyth, at the meeting of the Devála-Moyar Gold Mining Company, Limited, held on Sept. 28, 1880, would yield, upon the erection of one hundred stamp heads crushing only 2½ tons per diem, giving say 10 dwts. to the ton, £68,000 per annum, a sufficiently remunerative prospect for any Gold Mining venture.

The Vendor is the promoter of the Company, by whom the purchase-money has been fixed at £20,000 in cash, and 15,000 fully paid £1 shares.

The expenses incidental to its formation will be borne by the Company, but are not to exceed 2 per cent. upon the Capital, which includes advertising, printing, legal, brokerage, and other charges.

The following Agreements have been entered into, viz., one dated October 5, 1880, between Thomas James Ferguson and John Townshend Fowler, of the one part; and George Garratt, of the other part, and one dated October 12, 1880, between the said George Garratt, on the one part, and William Edwards, acting as Trustee on behalf of the Company, of the other part.

All applications to be made on the enclosed form, and remitted to the Bankers, the Capital and Counties Bank, Threadneedle Street, or to the Secretary, at the Offices of the Company.

Should no allotments be made, the deposits will be returned in full.

On the Richmond and Eureka Mineral Belt.

Capital, £100,000, in Shares of £1 each.

Payment, 5s per share on application, 5s per share on allotment, 5s per share November 1, and 5s per share on December 1, 1880.

Mr. R. Rickard, the eminent Mining Engineer, of Eureka, Superintendent of the Richmond Consolidated Mining Company (Limited), and through whose hands hundreds of tons of ore from the Eagle Mines have passed, says, in his report on these mines :—" July 2[illegible], 1880.—I have no hesitation in recommending the 'Bald Eagle' series of claims as one of the best mining prospects in the district. I have always been favourably impressed with the nature of the ground, and have no doubt that it will become a valuable property. The mine is on the same mineral belt as 'The Eureka Consolidated' and 'Richmond Consolidated,' and other productive mines, and the character of the ore is identical with that found in the Richmond."

In reference to the " Williamsburg " mines, Mr. Richard has endorsed Mr. Prideaux's Report, from which it appears that 7,000 tons of rich ore have been extracted. On the 20th July last a telegram was received (confirmed by letter) from the mine, advising that a 12 ft. ledge in the bottom had been struck.

DIRECTORS.

W. A. Malcolm, Esq., Chairman, } Ruby and Dunderberg Consolidated Mining Company, (Ltd.)
George Heiron, Esq., Director, }
James Macfarlane, Esq., Director Wheal Crebor Mining Company.
Major Fortescue, J.P., Director West Frontino and Bolivia Gold Company (Limited).
H. S. Wilde, Esq., Chairman London and District Omnibus Company (Limited).
Bankers—The Imperial Bank (Limited), Lothbury, London, E.C.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to acquire, work, and develop certain well-known silver and gold mines in the celebrated Eureka (Nevada) District, namely, the " Bald Eagle " series of mines near Ruby Hill, Eureka (Nevada), United States of America, consisting of the " Bald Eagle " Mine, the " White Eagle " Mine, the " Eagle's Nest " Mine, and the " Williamsburg " series of mines; also near Ruby Hill, consisting of the " Williamsburg " Mine, the " Williamsburg " I. Mine, the " Williamsburg " II. Mine.

1. The Company is entering into possession of properties earning immediate profits, and of others in a forward state of development. 2. The ores extracted have proved of high grade, and ample in quantity. 3. The properties are on the same mineral belt as "The Richmond Consolidated," "The Eureka Consolidated," and other rich mines, and the character of the ores is identical. 4. The mines have been thoroughly proved to be highly valuable. 5. The purchase consideration is very reasonable, and a large proportion is taken in shares. Ample provision has been made for a working capital. 6. The mines comprise the large total area of 1,234,200 square feet.

To forecast profits in mines may be illusory, and productive of much mischief ; in this instance, however, as the " Williamsburg " series has paid large profits, and the " Bald Eagle " group are in a forward state of development, a return of the capital in the first year, from profits, is not improbable.

The preliminary expenses up to allotment will be borne by the vendors.

Application for shares may be made on the form annexed to the prospectus.

Prospectuses and forms of application may be obtained at Bankers', Brokers', Solicitor's, and at the Offices of the Company.

The Mining Journal of Oct. 9 says :—" It would be difficult to find a more legitimate mining enterprise, and the formation of the company would appear to be based on sound commercial principles. It is an important feature that the working of these properties is under the control of a strong company, whose directors are representative and practical men."

ARMY and NAVY HOTEL (Limited).—Established upon the principle of Co-operation. Shareholders of five Shares and upwards will be entitled to a reduction of 10 per cent. off the hotel tariff. Capital £100,000, in 20,000 Shares of £5 each, payable £1 on application, £2 on allotment, and £2 three months after.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The want of comfortable accommodation in London, with living on an equality with that of a regimental mess and at economical rates, has always been felt by officers of the Services. This it is now intended to supply, both for temporary use and also in the style of a residential club, so that Shareholders may retain private rooms or suites of rooms with good attendance, and the use of general dining, drawing, club, smoking, and other rooms, while they may be either boarded at very moderate rates or obtain their meals as required in club fashion.

The Army and Navy Hotel is established for the purpose of these requirements, and is intended for the use of the public as well as of the Shareholders, priority being in all cases given to the latter.

Baths of every description, including salt water, will be obtainable in the hotel.

Shareholders will be allowed the use of the smoking, reading, and writing rooms, thus providing all the accommodation of a club without any annual subscription, and, whilst bachelors will find all the advantages of a mess, married officers will not miss the comforts of home.

Visitors who may wish to make the Hotel their home during their stay will be received at a fixed and very moderate tariff. It is intended to fix the tariff at as low a rate as is compatible with the declaration of a dividend, and it is confidently anticipated that board and lodging can be provided for about the same cost as is now charged by other hotels for rooms alone.

Suites of residential chambers, for bachelors as well as married people, will form a distinctive feature in the Hotel.

Application for Shares can be made in writing to the Secretary, by giving name, address, rank, or occupation, and the number of Shares required, accompanied by deposit.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—INDIGESTION AND LIVER COMPLAINTS.—The digestion cannot be long or seriously disordered without the derangement being perceptible on the countenance. These Pills prevent both unpleasant consequences ; they improve the appetite, and with the increase of the desire for food, they augment the powers of digestion and assimilation in the stomach. Holloway's Pills deal most satisfactorily with deranged or diseased conditions of the many organs engaged in extracting nourishment for our bodies from our various diets—as the liver, stomach, and bowels, over all of which they exercise the most salutary control. By resorting at an early stage of this malady to these purifying and laxative Pills, the dyspeptic is speedily restored to health and strength, and his sallowness gradually vanishes.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—WATCHES.

The Rev. Robt. Cass, Settle, Yorkshire, writes, February 19, 1880:—"The Ladies' Gold Lever Watch received from you for 70s in size, workmanship, and beautiful appearance, resembles a watch usually sold at £10. It gives entire satisfaction."

The Rev. James Arthur Kemp, Lew Down, North Devon, also writes, March 8, 1880:—"The watch I ordered of you at 25s, for my servant, arrived quite safely, and I am exceedingly well pleased with it in every way. It is an excellent timekeeper, very neat and handsome in appearance, and in my opinion worth far more than those that cost treble the money. I do not think anybody should be without a watch, when they can obtain from you such an excellent article at so reasonable a price."

From Mr. J. J. HARRIS, Schoolmaster, 2nd-18th the Royal Irish Regiment, Aldershot, Sept. 22, 1880.

"I am very much pleased with everything I have had from your Company. The watch (25s) has proved to be an excellent one, and is a marvel of cheapness. It is fully equal to, or indeed superior to, many I have seen purchased by regimental clubs for treble the money. I am positive your Company will prove itself a boon to Army men at home and abroad, particularly the latter, who are often compelled to pay enormous prices for very inferior articles indeed. Your Company is deserving of every success, and I deem it a duty, to you and the Army, to become an amateur agent, unpaid."

THE MIDLAND COUNTIES WATCH COMPANY supply their celebrated Watches direct to wearers, at very lowest wholesale cash prices. They guarantee watches supplied by them to be most perfect timekeepers, and honestly assert their price to be under one-half those charged by watchmakers; and as a guarantee of good-faith they undertake to return the full amount paid for any Watch if not to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

The Company's chief manufacture are their celebrated Crystal Glasses, which dispense with all risk of breakage. Their LADIES' and GENTLEMEN'S SILVER WATCHES, at 25s, and their LADIES' GOLD LEVERS, at 70s, are acknowledged to be the cheapest Watches in the world.

Catalogues, containing list of testimonials, and beautifully illustrated descriptions of more expensive watches, gold and silver jewellery, electro-plate, &c. are sent gratis on application. We may safely assert that the prices in same will be a surprise to all who see them.

GENTLEMEN'S FINE SILVER, flat crystal glass, heavy cased, superior movement, 25s.

LADIES' very heavy cased GOLD LEVERS, in exquisitely chased cases, with highly-finished extra-jewelled movements, 70s.

Mr. S. HISSEY, Vyse Street, Birmingham.

On receipt of which any watch will be registered post free to any part of the United Kingdom, and for 2s 6d per watch extra to any part of the postal world.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' 'Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

A BRIEF HISTORY of the 13th REGIMENT in SOUTH AFRICA. By Private McTOY, 13th Regiment.

"'A Brief History of the 13th Regiment in South Africa" (Devonport: A. H. Swiss).—"This is a remarkable book. It is written by Private McToy, 1st Battalion 13th Foot, and in it there is a most reliable account of the doings of that regiment, as well as of the other regiments that were in South Africa during the Zulu and Sekukuni campaigns. Private McToy describes the march through Natal, the annexation of the Transvaal, the entry into Pretoria, the march to the north-east frontier, the expedition against Sekukuni, the battle of Tolyana, the fighting at Zlobanne, as well as other episodes of campaigning in South Africa. His book well deserves attentive perusal."—Broad Arrow, October 2, 1880.

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE can be obtained in Paris of our Agent, Mr. J. W. S. NEAL, English Stationer, 248 Rue de Rivoli, to whom Advertisements and Orders for the Paper may be sent.

THERE is reason to believe that Mr. Childers is anxiously considering how he may improve the efficiency of the British Army. To nothing is his attention more needed to be directed than to the combined and connected subjects, the Intelligence Department and the training of Staff Officers. Of the zeal, energy, and, generally speaking, natural aptitude, of the latter, little that is adverse can fairly be said. So much, however, often depends on the fitness of even a single Staff officer for his duties, that we ought not to be content with the knowledge that the average of excellence is good. There have been some undoubted failures among the graduates of the Staff College, yet it is hard to refuse employment to those who have succeeded in earning the certificate. The failures are conscientious, zealous, and rather clever, or through downright hard work have mastered a large number of facts, figures, and formulæ. Yet, from some mental, moral, or physical defect, they make bad Staff officers, or at best are not fitted for the particular Staff appointments which they fill. This should not, need not, be the case. There can be little difficulty in, first, selecting those officers who are primâ facie likely to turn out qualified for the Staff; second, in eliminating, during the process of training, those concerning whom mistakes have originally been made. The Duke of Cambridge, recognising the fact that there are occasional failures, attributes the latter to the Staff College system. We are no fanatic admirers of the Staff College. We are quite aware that many who have gained a large number of marks at that institution are, for practical purposes of the Staff, not men in whom confidence can be placed. It is absurd, however, to lay the blame of this on the Staff College, as some people do. It must be obvious to any person of ordinary intelligence, not biassed by prejudice, that, caeteris paribus, an officer who has been educated at the Staff College must be superior to one who has not gone through the course. The explanation of the failures among the Staff College graduates is as follows:—Ostensibly, no officer is allowed to compete for admission unless he has been declared by his Commanding Officer and General to be likely to make a good Staff officer. This is, however, a system of rejection, instead of one of selection. Practically, only officers very decidedly unfit are refused permission to compete. The second elimination takes place at the examination itself, which only tests educational attainments. The third elimination takes place during the course of study at the Staff College, but it is questionable whether sufficient opportunities are afforded to the Authorities to ascertain the existence of certain defects which would be fatal to success as a Staff officer. The third and final elimination is supposed to occur during the subsequent few months' probation when attached to the Staff. We have not heard of any officer having been at this stage rejected, and we can easily understand that the Authorities are very averse to nullify all the time and trouble previously taken by the candidate. It must seem hard to them, at this stage, to say to an officer, "You are professionally well educated, you have shown yourself industrious; but from certain defects, you are not fitted for the Staff." The officer thus relegated to his regiment might plausibly argue, "You have had plenty of opportunities of finding out whether I was or was not suited for the Staff, and it is cruel to reject me at this, the final stage, save for some crying defect, which you might have found out before." What is needed is,—first, that there should be absolute selection, and and not mere rejection in the original stage; second, that in order to give a wide field for selection, a mere pass, not a competitive examination, for admission should take place, and that the obligatory subjects should be limited to one foreign language and purely military subjects; third, that at the Staff College the compulsory course should be purely practical, with the exception of military history, facilities and encouragement, however, being given to the study of mathematics, science, and foreign languages; fourth, that a severe, practical test of fitness for Staff duties should be applied, before allowing an officer to present himself for the entrance examination to the Staff College. A large number of good, practical officers would like to join the Staff College, but are deterred by the necessity of devoting many months to getting up military history and mathematics, and also by dislike to incurring the risk of failure at a competitive examination. As to military history, it would be better studied after than previous to admission; while with regard to mathematics, we should like to know what proportion of Staff Officers have ever found it necessary to apply to practical purposes more than the most elementary knowledge of that science. Again, with respect to military topography, comparatively few Staff Officers are called upon to execute more than a rough sketch of ground. Almost any man can acquire sufficient skill with his pencil to be able to accomplish that much, but few, without an amount of toil which might be better devoted to other subjects, are capable of executing a highly-finished sketch. It seems, therefore, folly to exclude a man from the Staff because he is not a good military draughtsman. How many Adjutant-Generals and Brigade-Majors, for instance, can be spared from their ordinary duties to sketch ground, or are, indeed, required to make a survey? Military draughtsmen are, of course, needed, but there is always a sufficiency of officers who have a natural turn for surveying. These should be encouraged to develope their talent, and from them the Quartermaster-General's Department should be chiefly — not entirely — recruited. In short, the example of the Jesuits should be followed, and Staff Officers should be employed according to their special gifts. We now come to a part of the training of Staff Officers which is intimately connected with the Intelligence Department. That Department has been doing good work of late, but it is still starved as regards the funds placed at its disposal, its freedom of action, and the number of officers employed by it. Moreover, a large number of the officers temporarily attached to it are, we have reason to believe, set to merely mechanical work, in which their great abilities and high training are, to a great extent, wasted. The scheme which we propose, while not curing existing defects, would greatly increase the usefulness of the Department, at a very slight additional cost, and would largely augment the efficiency of the Staff generally. We suggest that as soon as an officer has passed the final examination at the Staff College, he should be told off to some foreign country or region. As far as possible, the wishes of officers should be consulted, and they should be assigned to the country with whose language and geography they are best acquainted. They should be given leave for one year, and while furnished with recommendations to our Ambassadors and Consular Agents, should assume the rôle of private travellers. Of course, care should be taken that the majority of officers so sent should not be assigned to France and Germany, or even to Europe, for concerning European countries we are already pretty well informed. They should also be instructed not to limit their observations or confine their residence to the capital. If these officers were to cover their real objects by being ostensibly engaged in shooting, geological explorations, &c., they should make all their journeys on foot, or on horseback, mix with the peasantry, and acquire the patois. The Government should give each such officer an allowance of from £100 to £150 a year, according to the cost of living in the particular country, and should, on their return at the end of a year, a satisfactory report be presented, an additional £100 should be granted. This report should be a complete general reconnaissance of the country or region, with a detailed sketch and reconnaissance of some particular district. If, as we propose, only one year was previously passed at the Staff College, it would be easy, without straining the resources of that institution, to send abroad annually some thirty officers. Thus, in the course of ten years, we should possess—allowing for deaths—at least 280 officers each of whom would be specially well informed regarding some region which might become a theatre of war. These officers would be invaluable to the Intelligence and Quartermaster-General's Department, not only from the personal knowledge of the officers in question, but also from the vast amount of detail and resulting information furnished by them to the Intelligence Department. They might also from time to time be encouraged by some small allowance to add to and correct their information, by short leave of absence to visit the countries assigned to them. Let us suppose that the Government deemed it desirable to possess the fullest information regarding Greece, Turkey, Servia, Bulgaria, Roumania, and Southern Russia, by sending ten officers annually to that part of the world, a thorough knowledge would be obtained of every province in the course of four or five years. To facilitate exploration, these officers might be appointed supernumerary Vice-Consuls. Other officers not on or candidates for the Staff might also be encouraged to make similar exploring expeditions. It should be arranged as follows:—An officer submitting an application from his colonel to go to Wallachia, with a certificate that he possessed some knowledge of the language of the country, and was likely to turn his exploration to effect, might be granted six months' leave of absence, and a free passage in a man-of-war to and from the nearest port, the expense to be refunded, should he not send in a satisfactory report. Hundreds of officers would gladly embrace this opportunity of travelling. Again, the Intelligence Department should invite information regarding little-known districts from civilians, and should keep a register of all such persons, specially indicating in the register those willing to act as interpreters and guides. Such persons would comprise couriers, merchants, travellers, native-bred foreigners, ex-servants of travellers, residents, &c. Thus, should it be resolved to send an expeditionary force to Armenia, the Intelligence Department, on being asked what they could do, would be able to say, "We send you herewith a general report of the country, accompanied by detached reports of each district, and the names of such officers and civilians as are fully acquainted with the languages, resources, and geography of the proposed theatre of war." An expenditure of only a few thousands a year, say £5,000, would accomplish much in the direction which we have indicated; and to expend it would, we are sure, prove in the long-run, highly economical, for intelligence previous to and during a war is worth any money.

Lord Northbrook, First Lord of the Admiralty, Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay, C.B., Rear-Admiral A. Hoskins, C.B., Mr. Brassey, M.P., Civil Lord, and Mr. Shaw Lefevre, Secretary to the Admiralty, reached Devonport on Monday evening, and immediately upon their arrival proceeded on board the Enchantress, where they entertained the captains of the ships in port. During the week they have inspected the Yard and Naval establishments. Major-General C. W. Adair, C.B., Deputy-Adjutant-General, Royal Marines, has also arrived at Devonport.

The Detached Squadron has certainly been most rightly named, for few commands could be more scattered than that of Lord Clanwilliam. With one at Sheerness, another either at Devonport or having a trial cruise, two on their way to Vigo, and another ship already there waiting for the Flag, the detached nature of this squadron is most apparent. It is intended, however, that they shall all be at Vigo in the course of next week, and will then leave for Madeira, where they will be due on November 1. The following is the intended programme of the cruise of the Squadron, viz. :—Leaves Madeira on November 5, arrives at St. Vincent on the 15th; leaves St. Vincent on the 18th, arrives at Bahia on December 6; leaves Bahia on the 9th, arrives at Monte Video on the 26th; leaves Monte Video on January 9, 1881, arrives at the Falkland Islands on the 18th; leaves on the 24th, arrives at Valparaiso on February 15; leaves on March 5, arrives at Coquimbo on the 7th; leaves on the 17th, arrives at Callao on the 26th; leaves on the 30th, arrives at Guayaquil on April 4; leaves on the 11th, arrives at Galapagos on the 16th; leaves on the 20th, arrives at Vancouver's on June 5; leaves on the 26th, arrives at the Sandwich Islands on July 18; leaves on August 1, arrives at Yokohama on September 3; leaves on the 10th, arrives at Kobe on the 14th; leaves on the 21st, arrives at Nagasaki on the 25th; leaves on October 2, arrives at Loo-Choo on the 7th; leaves on November 6, arrives at Shanghai on the 14th; leaves on the 21st, arrives at Hong Kong on the 27th; leaves on December 12, arrives at Singapore on the 21st; leaves on January 7, 1882, arrives at the Cape of Good Hope on March 5; leaves on the 19th, arrives at St. Helena on April 2; leaves on the 5th, and arrives at Portsmouth on May 21, 1882.

Vice-Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock was at Halifax in the Northampton on the 5th inst., but after November 11 letters should be sent to Bermuda, viâ New York.

According to an interesting account of the movements of the Wolverene, which will be found under the name of the ship, it will be noticed that the reef upon which she recently grounded was not marked on the chart. This is not surprising, seeing how constantly volcanic disturbances and the formation of reefs are taking place in those seas. But a more serious matter for the consideration of the Admiralty is the statement that the islet of Goro, on which the ship struck, is incorrectly placed on the chart, the true position being different to that laid down. This is another point for the Hydrographic Department to look to and explain, if possible.

The first of the breech-loading guns of 43 tons (the type of gun with which it is intended to arm the Colossus) is now being rifled, and will be ready for trial at the proof butts in the Government Marshes, Woolwich, in December. In comparison with the 38-ton muzzle-loaders, it is of remarkable length. It has been decided to adopt the same system of breech action for the larger guns as for the smaller experimental guns, it being thought that the recent accident with a breech-piece was due not to any defect of the screw, but to the safety-indicator having become disabled.

We stated sometime ago that the Peter the Great was found to be useless unless new engines were placed on board, and we now learn that the Russian Ministry of Marine have concluded a contract with Messrs. John Elder and Co. for the supply of these engines, which are to be of 7,000 indicated horse-power. Those now on board the Peter the Great were supplied from Baird's works, St. Petersburg.

The intention of allowing the Minotaur to proceed to sea, on her forthcoming cruise with the Channel Squadron, without her Nordenfelt equipment has been suddenly changed, and the flagship is to receive this important portion of her armament before sailing. As "the Eastern crisis" appears to have cooled down, there is no shadow of reason for suspecting that she might shortly be called on for active service or that she could not be spared to return to Portsmouth for Christmas leave. But the Admiralty, considering the very long time the ship has remained in the hands of Portsmouth Yard on this occasion, determined that she should have her work completed out of hand this time; and this, we apprehend, lessens the chances of the Squadron returning to the Home ports for Christmas, as they are so late in leaving for another cruise.

Directions have been received at the Yards, that in future broadside ships are to be supplied with a newly approved fitting for directing guns by electricity, in addition to the usual electrical fittings for broadside firing.

It is intended, in future, to arm the cruisers of the Coastguard service with 9-pounder, and in some cases 7-pounder, muzzle-loading rifled guns.

Admiral M'Hardy, Chief Constable of Essex, is about to tender his resignation, and will probably be awarded a pension of £450 per annum. The Admiral is in his 77th year, and was the first chief constable appointed under the Rural Police Act in England, and has held the office for forty-one years.

The question of throwing open Naval cadetships to competition is still under consideration at the Admiralty, but their Lordships hesitate to take so important a step, or to sanction so radical a change, without having the advantage of the opinion of those experienced in the examinations and early training of boys. Still, from what we hear, the Board shows no desire to retain for the sons of officers who have served well and faithfully any advantages over the general public, and we find that officers who have made applications for Naval cadetships for their sons or relatives, have met with no more encouragement than if they had been entirely unconnected with, or had no shadow of claim on, the Service. Indeed, we fully believe that any influential tradesman who might have been a member of the election committee of one of the Parliamentary Lords would receive more attention and be given more reason to hope that his request would be considered, than has been doled out to some officers who are on the Retired List, but who are anxious that their sons should follow them in the Navy.

Sir E. J. Reed, K.C.B., and Mr. Waymouth, who has been employed on the Atalanta Committee, have been appointed commissioners to inquire into tonnage measurement. A General officer has also been appointed, but no Naval officer!

Owing to the scarcity of artificers at the Ports, the Steam Reserve officers have been called upon to report what, in their opinion, would be the best course to be taken to supply this want. Increase of pay, which would bring the Naval artificer on an equality with skilled workers in civil life, would soon cause the existing vacancies to be filled; but that cure will not be resorted to until everything else has failed.

On the recommendation of the Training Regulations Committee, it has been decided to prepare a revised edition of "The Boys' Manual of Seamanship and Gunnery," prepared some years since by Commander Burney, of Greenwich Hospital School. No further issue of the present edition will be made, as alterations in drills, &c., have made it incorrect in certain particulars.

The work of making an index to the new edition of the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions has been placed by the Admiralty in the hands of one versed in the art, the present index having been found not sufficiently copious.

A steel paddle-steamer named the Maipu was launched on Monday, from the yard of Messrs. Elder, for the Argentine Republic. The vessel is specially adapted for torpedo warfare. Her dimensions are—length, 240 ft.; breadth, 30 ft.; depth, 14 ft. 3 in.; tonnage, B.M. 1,062 tons. She will carry one 40-pounder Armstrong gun and three machine guns. The engines are capable of driving the vessel at a speed of 15 knots. She is schooner-rigged, and has a ram bow, the store and shell rooms being below water-mark. In addition to her above-mentioned armament, she will be fitted for using both "Spar" and "Whitehead" torpedoes.

We are pleased to learn that our efforts on behalf of hydrography have been attended with success, Captain Evans having been at last persuaded to cancel Chart No. 1,588, Dulcigno Road, to the errors in which we have more than once called attention. Let us hope that the fancy for antique hydrography has now received a wholesome check.

On the recommendation of the Prince of Wales, the silver medal of the Royal Humane Society has been awarded to Lieutenant Charles Graham, R.N., of the royal yacht Osborne, for the following act of gallantry. At midnight on the 14th ult., Lieutenant Graham jumped overboard, fully dressed in his uniform, to save the life of a waterman named Harvey, whose boat had capsized at Portsmouth, and who was fast drifting out to sea. It was raining and blowing hard at the time, intensely dark, and very cold. The ship being alongside the yard, there was no boat ready immediately, as boats have to be kept at the landing-place some distance from the ship, and the man must have been drowned, but for the gallantry of Lieutenant Graham, who rescued the man, after great exertion and with considerable difficulty, the risk incurred being much enhanced by being encumbered with his uniform.

Targets representing portions of the sides of unarmoured vessels-of-war are shortly to be constructed, for experimental practice with the new Nordenfelt shell gun and the Hotchkiss gun, with which competitive trials will be made, as recommended by Captain Hopkins. Another recommendation contained in that officer's report on the recent competitive trials is also to be carried out, by degrees, in providing her Majesty's ships with a large number of Nordenfelt guns, so as to give them efficient protection against torpedo boats. With this view, an additional fifty of these guns have been ordered this week, so that the number now appropriated to the Naval Service is close upon two hundred. But to carry out the complete armament of the Service, as recommended by Captain Hopkins, nearly one thousand would be requisite.

The Chinese cruising squadron, consisting of the frigate Nu-yue and gunboats Wei-ching, Chow-wo, Dimeo, Ching-yue, Yu-kai, and Tun-yen-chow, left Woosung on August 27.

The French Detached Sailing Squadron, consisting of the Flore, Amorique, Favourite, and Résolue, which calls at Lisbon and Tangiers, is to be at Teneriffe about the middle of November, whence the ships proceed to the Cape de Verde Islands, and will be at Hyères at the end of February. Two of the ships will then return to Toulon and change their complements, and then resume cruising until April.

It has been found necessary to reduce the standard of recruits for the Royal Marines by half-an-inch, owing to the small number of eligible candidates who have recently offered themselves for enlistment.

The vacancy created by the retirement of Major J. M. W. Silver, R.M.L.I., promotes Captain E. O. B. Gray to his majority. This officer is at present paymaster of the Royal Marine battalion in Ireland, and is with the head-quarters at Kinsale. He will be relieved in his duties on the 1st prox. by Captain W. T. Miller, who in his turn is be relieved on board the Penelope by Captain Campbell, of the Plymouth Division.

The good-service pension of £200 a year become vacant through the death of General Sir F. Graham, K.C.B., Retired List, R.M., has been awarded to General Hayes Marriott, R.M. (retired).

Prior to 1870, Generals of Marines held the appointment of Colonels of Divisions, with an additional emolument of £200 a year, and were appointed by seniority; but an Order in Council of February, 1870, abolished the divisional colonelcies, and allowed the then holders to retain their payments, under the head of good-service pensions. As these rewards have fallen in, they have not necessarily been given to the next senior; but selection has been made, and thus the good-service pension that has become vacant by the death of Sir Fortescue Graham may not go to the next senior on the list, but may be awarded by selection.

It is earnestly to be hoped that the Horse Guards may be induced to reconsider the decision they have arrived at in declining to sanction the appointment of an officer of Marines to the Staff of the Army. The War Department are glad to avail themselves of the services of Marine battalions when hard pressed for troops, and their application is invariably acceded to by the Admiralty when the supply can be given. Surely, then, if an officer of the Marine Corps, who is in every respect eligible, receives the offer of an appointment on the staff of a General of the Army, it would be a matter of courtesy on the part of the Horse Guards towards the Admiralty to sanction it.

General Order No. 130, of October 1, 1880, relating to the instruction and examination of officers, to take effect from January 1 next, considerably raises the standard of examination required from each rank up to that of major, and will be felt most by the senior captains, who may well be supposed to have grown rusty in many of the subjects in which they will now be called upon to pass. This order applies equally to the Royal Marines, and as the officers of this corps usually muster pretty strongly at their several head-quarters, we would suggest the desirability of their having the advantage of a properly qualified military instructor, who could take officers, either singly or by classes, for lectures and instruction in the subjects required. An Order in Council of August 4, 1873, provides that a "Staff College officer (captain or lieutenant) be appointed military instructor for the Artillery and Infantry at Portsmouth." This officer is in lieu of one of the adjutants, and we presume, therefore, that he also carries out some of the duties previously performed by the adjutant whose place he fills. Classes have been held by him from time to time, and new commissions from the Light Infantry Divisions have been sent to Eastney to go through a course of instruction; but, now the examinations have been so far expanded, it would not only be a serious cost, but a great inconvenience, both to officers and to the Service, if senior lieutenants and captains had no other source of instruction to fall back upon than that at Eastney. To meet this want, we would suggest the desirability of an appointment at each of the Light Infantry Divisions similar to that to which we have referred at Portsmouth, viz., an officer who has passed the Staff College, who shall be styled a military instructor, and take the place, if necessary, of one of the adjutants. This would be an economical measure in every respect, and we have no doubt many officers would come forward to qualify for the appointments.

The latest intelligence from the Cape is dated October 20. We learn that Lieutenant-Colonel Carrington destroyed the enemy's position at Mafeteng during the night of the 15th inst., and that the Colonial forces subsequently had an engagement with a body of the insurgent Basutos, about 1,000 strong, and completely defeated them. It is further stated that Colonel Clarke, with the Colonial forces, has relieved Mafeteng after heavy fighting with the rebels. Our loss is reported to be 26 killed and 10 wounded, chiefly belonging to the 2nd Yeomanry. The Basutos are said to have had 300 of their men killed.

We have over and over again called upon the nation to put down the vulgar insolence of those who treat a soldier in uniform as a social pariah, and refuse him admission to places of public entertainment for the paradoxical reason that he wears the garb of a pre-eminently honourable profession. We are, therefore, glad to find that General Brownrigg has set a good example, and given a lead which we hope will be extensively followed. At the close of the sitting of the Middlesex magistrates on Thursday for the renewal of music and dancing licenses, he, addressing those present, said, "It not unfrequently occurred that soldiers wearing her Majesty's uniform were excluded from places of public refreshment and entertainment." In terms strong, indeed, but not stronger than the occasion warranted, General Brownrigg condemned this practice, and stated that he should oppose to the utmost of his power the granting of renewed licences to those who had insulted the Queen's uniform. His brother-magistrates warmly applauded his speech, and yesterday the Globe, always a good friend to the soldier, supported General Brownrigg in a vigorous note.

At the recent field-day at Aldershot, two regiments—one of which was the 42nd Highlanders—were only able to turn out 300 strong. Surely this is a matter which ought to be looked into. How many men were left in camp, at recruit drill, in hospital, or as employed? How many men is the 42nd short of its establishment? How many men are medically fit for embarkation? It must be remembered that the 42nd is the feeder of its linked regiment, the 79th, now at Gibraltar; but it is obviously impossible that it can perform its functions. Practically, therefore, as regards active service, the 42nd and 79th Highlanders may be struck off the Roster.

Lieutenant-General the Hon. Leicester Smyth, C.B., accompanied by Mrs. Smyth, Lieutenant-Colonel W. E. Montgomery, Scots Guards, assistant military secretary, and Captain H. E. Colvile, Grenadier Guards, aide-de-camp, left Plymouth on Thursday in the Union Steamship Company's mail steamer Nubian for Cape Town, to assume his command.

At the Quarter-Sessions for Hertfordshire, held at St. Alban's on Thursday, the justices (among whom was the Marquis of Salisbury) elected Major H. S. Daniell, Bombay Cavalry, Divisional Superintendent of Police at Poona, as chief constable, in room of the late Colonel Robertson. There were 67 candidates for the office, the salary of which is £400 per annum, and an additional £100 for horses and travelling expenses.

We are requested to state that the Council of the Army Coffee Taverns will meet on November 4, in the Commandant's office, Woolwich, by the kind permission of Major-General Turner, C.B., to receive the report of the executive committee, and to select a site for the first coffee tavern for the troops. The movement, we are glad to learn, is making rapid progress, and receiving very substantial support. Sir W. Muir, K.C.B., Director-General of the Army Medical Department, and General Gosling, Royal Artillery, have just joined the Council.

It is difficult to understand what rule, if any, governs the arrangements made by the authorities for the seconding of officers who may have relinquished regimental duty for employment as adjutants of Auxiliary Forces. In the Gazette of Friday last the following captains are seconded on appointment as adjutants of Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers, viz.:—Captain H. F. E. Lucas, 3rd Dragoon Guards, from September 12; Captain A. Maclean, 1st Dragoon Guards, from September 30; Captain C. E. Warde, 4th Hussars, from September 9; Captain E. R. de B. Barnett, 4th Foot, from September 22; Captain W. Daly, 7th Foot, from September 10: Captain W. A. Smail, 36th Foot, from October 1; Captain V. R. Biscoe, 47th Foot, from August 12; Captain F. C. Mein, 53rd Foot, from September 23; and Captain D. T. C. Belgrave, 97th Foot, from August 17. Now, the Warrant lays down that an officer shall be seconded after he has been three months away from his regiment. Then how comes it that the following officers have been overlooked and have not also been seconded, seeing that they have completed the three months' service provided for in the Royal Warrant, viz.:—Captain W. S. Whittuck, 16th Foot, appointed adjutant Bedford Militia, June 1; Captain E. O. Grogan, 42nd Foot, appointed adjutant Royal Perth Militia, June 4; Captain W. E. Hilliard, 105th Foot, appointed adjutant 4th West York Militia, June 4; Captain W. K. Matterson, 22nd Foot, appointed adjutant 15th Middlesex Rifle Volunteers, June 10. All these officers have been holding their appointments for four months and more, and this time ought to be sufficient to enable the authorities to decide what steps they intend to take for filling the vacancies. In matters of such plain sailing, there certainly ought to be no delay in giving the promotion in regiments.

With reference to a paragraph which appeared in our issue of last week, it is only right we should point out that it was Lord Camperdown, not Lord Morley, who suggested the abolition of the Madras and Bombay commands.

Great efforts are being made to lighten the kit of the French soldier, and to distribute the weight to greater advantage. As a distinguished officer writes:—"Every one knows that the present knapsack, even when empty, is far too heavy. Up to the present time, it has contained not only all the objects required by a soldier during a campaign, including a tool and other accessories which are strapped on to it, but in addition the cartridge reserve." And this weight is so badly placed, that the foot soldier when fatigued has the greatest difficulty in maintaining his equilibrium. A committee, which has been at work for seven years, has now adopted what is called 'the system Séches.' By this system, the cartridges, instead of being placed inside the knapsack, will be placed outside, on the omoplates, and in this way both the chest and the hips will be relieved. The soldier will also be able to get at his reserve ammunition more readily. This simple change is said to re-establish the equilibrium to a wonderful extent, and the pressure on the chest is reduced to about 20 lb., whereas, under the present system, it is about 35 lb. Great alterations are also proposed with regard to the bag and the cooking tins. At present the batterie de cuisine is carried by half-a-dozen different men, and if one of these men gets knocked over, the rest of the squad has to go without soup. It is calculated that a French company on a war-footing, that is to say, 200 strong, carries no less than 500 pots and kettles, in order to make the national dish, pot-au-feu, in which the beef is sacrificed to the soup. These 500 pots, &c., weigh about 1,000 lb. Under the system Séches, the materiel will be reduced to half the above number of culinary articles, and to half the above weight. The sack, too, in which the provisions are carried is to be water-proof and better suspended than at present, and a new method has been proposed to ease the soldier while marching with sloped arms, by means of a little hook on the right shoulder, which will enable him to attach his rifle and keep it from slipping. Although the Infantry Committee are perfectly satisfied with the excellence of the Séches system, they have determined to put it to a practical test, and twenty-five men have been fully equipped on the new plan, portions of which have already been favourably reported upon, and have given great satisfaction to the troops."

The French War Minister has been under the painful necessity of refusing to accept his predecessor's resignation, and of removing General de Cissey from the command of the 11th Army Corps, and thus may be said to terminate the military career of an officer after 50 years' service, during which he was twice War Minister. In the meantime, the teterrima causa is living in opulence in a villa near Biarritz, and is said to be carrying on her old game of a Prussian spy, under the protection of a certain financier. In French military circles, the stain cast on the uniform is deeply regretted; but none of General de Cissey's old comrades imagine for a moment that he was aware of the profession exercised by Mdlle. de Kaulla, when he was protecting her. Nor has General Farre lent any importance to the wild accusations brought by the Radical Press against the ex-War Minister; he has, therefore, refused a court of inquiry or a court-martial, and has been informed that his proper course will be to bring an action for libel against the journals who have so grossly slandered him. General de Cissey, in fact, is removed from his command for having written two letters, the authenticity of which he does not deny, and which in themselves constitute a serious dereliction of duty. In one, he asked a commanding officer to use pressure in order to force the husband of Mdlle. de Kaulla, or Madame Jung, to sign a document, empowering that lady to receive certain moneys; and in the second, he authorised his mistress to visit her son at a Military College, in spite of a formal order to the contrary given by a civil tribunal. It is admitted in the Army that this offence has only been punished as it deserved. We may add that, during the Franco-German war, Mdlle. de Kaulla was employed in Russia, and when M. Thiers went to St. Petersburg to beseech the aid of the Czar, he granted her frequent interviews, for she had the reputation of being thoroughly French, and he had often met her in Paris. After each interview, a letter conveyed to Berlin all that was passing in the Russian capital. It would have required a Charles XII. to have resisted the fascinations of Mdlle. de Kaulla, and it would be difficult to find a warrior of that type in ancient or modern French history.

The Admiralty has granted the sum of £300 towards the expense of a new organ for the Chatham dockyard chapel, which is now undergoing restoration and some extensive alterations.

THE DRESS REGULATIONS.

"1. At page 4, substitute for the article 'tunic.' Tunic.—Scarlet cloth, with blue cloth collar and cuffs. The collar embroidered in gold. The cuffs round, 3 in. deep, with gold embroidery 2¼ in. deep round the top; a scarlet flap on each sleeve, 6½ in. deep and 2¼ in. wide, embroidered in gold. A similar flap on each skirt behind, ½ in. shorter than the length of the skirt and 2½ in. wide; eight buttons down the front; three on each flap; two at the waist behind. The front, collar, cuffs and flaps edged with white cloth, 3-16 in. wide. An aiguillette of gold wire cord, ¼ in. in diameter, with gilt embossed tags will be worn. The aiguillette is attached to a plaited strap, on the right shoulder of round gold cord 3-16 in. in diameter, intertwined with a small dead gold cord. A similar strap on the left shoulder. On each strap, crossed bâtons of crimson velvet and gold, on a wreath of laurel embroidered in silver, with a crown in silver above, and a small gilt button at the top. Embroidery.—Oak-leaf pattern in dead and bright gold. Substitute for the article 'Sash,' p. 5. Sash.—Gold and crimson silk net, 2¼ in. wide; two crimson stripes ⅜ in. wide, the rest gold; tassels of loose gold bullion fringe, 9 in. long. The sash fastened, with gilt buckles, round the waist, the tassels hanging from the left side. Substitute for the article 'Sword-belt.' Sword-belt.—Russia leather 1½ in. wide, with slings 1 in. wide, gold oak-leaf embroidery on belt and slings. The belt to be worn under the tunic, but over the frock-coat, and in the latter case, under the sash. "General Officers.

"2. Tunic.—As for Field-Marshals, with the following exceptions:—The aiguillette will not be worn, and the badges of rank, in silver, will be as under:—General—Crossed sword and bâton, with crown and star above. Lieutenant-General—Cross sword and bâton, with crown above. Major-General—Cross sword and bâton, with star above. Brigadier-General—Crossed sword and bâton.

"3. Shoulder-straps, with badges, as detailed above, will also be worn by Field-Marshals and General officers on frock-coats, instead of the badges hitherto worn on the collar of these garments.

"4. Five years, from July 1, 1880, will be allowed for the wearing-out of the tunics and sword-belts in possession. Shoulder-straps, with the new distinctions of rank, to be provided, and sashes altered and worn round the waist by Field-Marshals and General officers, at once."

"5. The above noted alterations, except as regards the sash, are also approved for retired General officers, including those of the Indian Army, the provisions of the preceding paragraph being also applicable in their case. The sash, authorised for retired General officers in the Dress Regulations of 1874 (page 76), will be reduced to 2¼ in. in width, and it will be worn round the waist."

"6. There will be no alteration in the dress of departmental officers having the relative rank of General officer, except that the shoulder-straps and badges of rank will conform to those for General officers, and the latter will cease to be worn on collars.

"7. Officers under the rank of brigadier (chaplains excepted; see par. 11) will also wear shoulder-straps as detailed below, on tunics, stable-jacks, and shell-jackets. Badges of rank will cease to be worn on collars (chaplains excepted; see par. 11). Staff officers under the rank of General, universal pattern twisted round gold cord, lined with scarlet; Household Cavalry, pattern as at present worn, both as regards shape and dimensions; Dragoon Guards and Dragoons, plaited flat gold cord, lined with scarlet; Hussars and Cavalry Depôt, plaited gold chain gimp, lined with blue; Lancers, Royal Horse Artillery, and Royal Artillery, plaited gold Russia braid, lined with blue; Royal Engineers, universal pattern, as detailed above; Infantry, except Rifles, ditto; 60th Rifles and Rifle Brigade, Hussar pattern, but in black; departmental officers under the rank of major-general (chaplains excepted; see par. 11), universal pattern, as detailed above; other Services, ditto; unattached, half-pay, and retired officers, ditto.

"8. Shoulder-straps, of the same material as the garments, will also be worn by all officers (chaplains excepted; see par. 11) on patrol-jackets, cloaks, great-coats, and on the frock-coats of all officers under the rank of brigadier (chaplains excepted; see par. 11). These straps, in the case of patrol-jackets and frock-coats, will be edged with ½-in. black mohair braid, except at the base, but without braid edging on cloaks and great-coats. Black netted button at the top, in all cases.

"9. Badges of rank, in silver, for the straps noted in par. 7, and in gold for those noted in par. 8, will be worn as follows:—Field-Marshals, as laid down in par. 1; General officers, as laid down in par. 2; colonel, crown and two stars below; lieutenant-colonel, crown and one sta below; major, crown; captain, two stars; lieutenant, one star; second lieutenant, no badge.

"10. The new distinctions of rank will be worn on saddle-cloths, in gold and silver, as hitherto.

"11. The relative rank of chaplains of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd class will be shown, as laid down in para. 9, but the badges will be in black and gold, and worn on the collar as hitherto.

"12. The above order, as regards shoulder-straps, and the alterations of distinctions of rank, will be carried out without delay.

"14. The above regulations will not apply to General and other officers when employed on the personal staff of the Sovereign and the Royal Family, as aide-de-camp or equerries, or as aides-de-camp to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland and to the Viceroy of India.

"15. The 'Dress Regulations,' ed. 1874, General Orders 94 of 1876, 35 of 1877, 12 and 28 of 1878, 45 of 1879, and 3 of 1880, will be corrected accordingly, and General Orders 82 and 107 of 1880 are hereby cancelled."

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.

"A Captain of Middlesex R.V." writes:—"I quite agree with your correspondent, a 'Proud Lieutenant-Colonel,' when he says that Volunteer officers are themselves greatly to blame in giving such palpable evidence that they shrink from asserting, or are half-ashamed of owning, their rank. It is constantly asserted that they are the 'weak' part of the Force, and I fear this evidences a sign of 'weakness.' Another correspondent, 'X.,' says that society will never accept us on an equality with Regulars. Society does strange things, but although it may declare black is white, it cannot make it so. Personally, I never found amongst those officers who constitute the brains of the Regular Service any desire or wish not to accord their proper rank to Volunteer officers, and though, unfortunately, there may be some among us whose social position is not equal to their rank, it is not peculiar to the youngest of the three Services. The Regular Army itself suffers much in the present day from the same complaint, and so does the Militia. I have relations, relatives, and friends serving in the Regulars, Militia, and Volunteers, and am I, who have served 21 years in the Volunteer Service, to consider myself lower in the social scale than my own son and nephew, who both are about to enter the Regular Service? It is too ridiculous. Have the Dukes of Northumberland, Norfolk, Beaufort, Cleveland, Hamilton, and Westminster, or the Marquises of Lorne and Huntley, or Lords Bury and Elcho, lost caste by accepting Volunteer commissions? My own position has not been raised by the simple title of captain which her Majesty has been pleased to confer on me; but I consider I should show a considerable amount of pusillanimity in not owning it, or in ever excusing myself in a sort of half-apologetic manner that I was 'only a Volunteer,' a sort of pride that apes humility. My rank and regiment appear on my card, and with that rank I have for many years been to Court. For my presentation I am not indebted to any one in or connected with the Volunteer Service, though such presentation should, I consider, have been my right in virtue of my commission; my social position, however, made me independent of it. It is to the authorities that we must look for redress, and not to society, or those gentlemen who appear to think that no one has any social position but themselves. A few A.D.C.'s and C.B.'s distributed among a few of our chiefs, to whom the country is so much indebted for originating and fostering the force in its infancy, the right of presentation at Court, and a few commissions for the Regular Army given annually, on the same terms as those granted to the Militia, would go far to alleviate that feeling of neglect from which we feel we have so long suffered, and this would scarcely fail to attract the sort of young men to whom it would be most desirable to give commissions."

"X." writes:—"No doubt, as 'A Proud Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers' says, a military title is an honour that a man should be proud of, if he has a legitimate right to it; and if the Auxiliaries were soldiers, there would be, perhaps, little to say upon the matter, but I think that the rank and file of the Volunteer Force, when not absolutely engaged in their military exercise, consider themselves as purely civilians. The officers are for the greater part civilians also, and engaged during the greater portion of their lives in civil occupations, and the question arises as to whether they ought at all times to bear their military rank. It is, I suppose, merely a matter of opinion, and by all means let the officers of the Auxiliaries do as 'A Proud Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers' does, namely, assume their rank on all occasions, and put it upon their cards, but let them also place after their names, as I am sure 'A Proud Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers' does, the particular regiment to which they belong, to prevent mistakes and save confusion. Of course, what he says about officers of the Regular Army especially distinguished for ability, as being those most ready to recognise Volunteer rank, only means that those who differ from him must be either prejudiced, or their opinion, for other reasons, is unworthy of consideration. This is a kind of argument one often meets with, but it is not always convincing; and as to 'ungenerous jealousy,' no doubt the Irish Land League think that the landlords display an 'ungenerous jealousy' towards the demands of its members, who probably think that Mr. Parnell is the most distinguished man for ability in the United Kingdom. As to the rank of Volunteer officers, if they are to take it on all occasions, how are we to address a man who happens to be both a doctor and a lieutenant-colonel of Volunteers. Are we to send for Dr. So-and-so or Lieut.-Col. So-and-so? Now, what gives rise to what 'A Proud Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers' calls 'ungenerous jealousy,' and creates a certain amount of ill-feeling, is that if officers of the Auxiliaries take their rank everywhere, it would place the officers of the Regular Army very frequently at a great disadvantage, and what would be the Auxiliary officer's gain would be the Regular officer's loss. For instance, I am a captain of many years' standing, and it is quite within the range of probability for my subaltern, say of two years' standing, to leave the Regular Army and in a few months to be gazetted as colonel of Volunteers. I meet him in society, and he swaggers in to dinner before me, in virtue of his Volunteer rank,—he a subaltern of two years', I a captain of twenty years', service. Would this be right? This is by no means a fanciful case. I have more service as a captain than two-thirds of the Volunteer majors, and more service in that rank than many of the Volunteer colonels, yet are they all to take precedence of me? As your correspondent 'A. V.' justly remarks, there are a great number of officers of Volunteers whose social position is not equal to that of the officers of the Line and Militia, and I know many shopkeepers myself who hold the rank of captain and major; but putting aside all social differences, I ask, would it be right—and I appeal to that spirit of fairness which is inherent in every breast—for even a lieutenant-colonel of Volunteers to take precedence, say of a lieutenant only, who has been all through the recent Afghan campaign? I do not doubt that the Volunteer would acquit himself well, but he is never likely to see a day's real service. Do not think that I wish to detract from the officers of the Auxiliary Forces! I think them a most worthy body of men, deserving well of their country; but I do not think they should be benefited at the expense of the officers of the Regular Army. And suppose they were to get what they so much desire, the result would inevitably be that it would cheapen military rank, and perhaps officers of the Auxiliary Forces would rise in public estimation if it was thought that they served their country from purely disinterested motives. A great deal has been said about the paucity of the right kind of officer in the Volunteer Force; and it is generally thought that young men of good position do not accept commissions on account of the status of the Volunteer officer in society. This, I think, is not the case. The true reason is, I think, to be attributed to the fact that all who are able to do so, go into the Militia, which is the senior service, and which pretty well drains society of all those young men of military instincts whose private affairs will not admit of their entering the Regular Army. Of course, there are many whose circumstances will not allow of their going into the Militia, and these, I think, seek commissions in the Volunteer Force. Your correspondent 'A. V.' is, I think, wrong if he thinks that all military clubs admit Militia officers. I have looked through the rules of five clubs, and I find that three out of the five do not. The remarks of your correspondent, 'Another R.V.,' are very sensible, and I fully endorse what he says about the 'knife-and-fork parades.' My letter is already too long, but if you will allow me, I will say a few words about the recent Volunteer regulation as to efficiency. I think it will be found that there are but few recruits who do not do sixty drills in their first two years. The ones who come up least, and want drills the most, are the old members; and these are let off with seven drills. It would have been better had recruits been made to do sixty drills in two years, and all other Volunteers not less than fourteen."

THE MARTINI-HENRY CARBINE.

A correspondent writing to us from Lahore on Aug. 20 says:—"I read a statement the other day which insinuated that the Martini-Henry carbine, with which our Cavalry are now armed, does not appear to be as perfect a weapon as might be produced, because large scores are seldom made with it, even when used by experienced hands at rifle meetings. This reminded me of a performance I witnessed at the South India Rifle Association Meeting, which took place at Bangalore, Madras Presidency, last September, which struck me as proving the above statement to be very incorrect, I therefore send you an account thereof, hoping you will publish it. The competition I refer to was for the Annesley prize, which is competed for yearly by every cavalry regiment which chooses to send a team, a separate competition being held in India. The conditions are the following, which I copy from the report on the meeting, which I happen to have with me:—1. Each team, consisting of four of each squadron of cavalry or battery of artillery, will be placed under the orders of one of its members, who will give all necessary words of command or directions. 2. The men will be required to ride about three-quarters of a mile, taking two flights of hurdles in the course, and fire dismounted at the two distances, 300 and 400 yards. 3. Each man will load and fire his five rounds at each of the distances, and will use his own carbine. 4. The men not firing may coach the others, using glasses, if they wish it. 5. The horses in rear of the firing-points to be linked or held by alternate files, according to the regulations in force in their corps, or in any manner adapted to the Service. 6. Any sections not completing the course within ten minutes will forfeit eight points per team for each minute over. 7. No section will be considered to have completed the course until the last man shall have passed the post. 8. No person not a member of the section shall be allowed to accompany it on the course, or be permitted to give instructions or assistance at the firing-points. 9. Ties will be decided by division. 10. Martini-Henry carbines to give Snider carbines 10 points per team. Six teams competed at Bangalore, and four at other stations in the Presidency. The winning team, whose performance I am going to quote, was that of the 2nd Squadron 14th King's Hussars, under the command of Lieut. Hamilton, of that regiment. They started at a smart gallop, increasing to full speed, flew the hurdle in capital style, and on arriving at the 300 yards' range, dismounted, and fired their five rounds each, two firing at a time, the other two holding the horses. When the first pair had finished firing, they ran and held the horses whilst the other two fired. They then all mounted and galloped off (not one shot having missed the target), taking another hurdle; and on arriving at the 400 yards' range, they again fired five rounds each in the same manner as before (again every shot being on the target), then jumping on their horses, they galloped to the starting-post, completing the course in nine minutes—one minute under time. The score was 129 out of 160, nine points over an average of centres,—a second-class regulation target being used. (The previous year, the winning score, made by a team of the same regiment, was 147 out of 200, three points less than an average of centres, a Wimbledon target being used; also a good performance.) The performance of which I have given you an account was the smartest and best of its kind I had ever seen, and I have since ascertained that no such large score has ever been made either in England or India at the same competition. Bearing in mind that galloping three-quarters of a mile, taking fences, having to mount and dismount hurriedly, and load and fire rapidly, is calculated to render shooting very wild; the fact of the whole 40 shots being on the targets, not a miss having been made, not only shows the efficiency of the men, but proves that the weapon they used is a most suitable one. The team owed their perfection to the steady system in which they had been trained and their practice, conducted by Lieut. Hamilton (a most excellent young officer), he himself being a very finished horseman and a capital shot. I think this proves that the Martini-Henry carbine, with which our Cavalry are now armed, when in the hands of well-trained men, is good enough for anything it is ever likely to be required for."

CANDIDATES FOR WEST INDIA REGIMENTS.

"Scotus" writes:—"I should be much obliged if you can spare me a corner in your valuable paper, to point out a grievance which might, to the advantage of the Service, easily be rectified. Candidates for the Army who are willing to enter a West Indian regiment are allowed to go to Sandhurst up to the age of twenty-five; why is the same advantage not given to subalterns of Militia, who may, by force of circumstances, have been prevented from deciding to enter the Army at an earlier age? I believe the Army would gain many good officers if the Authorities allowed Militia subalterns to enter the West Indian regiments up to the age of twenty-five, and the cadets would still have one year more, as they are a year at the Royal Military College. This would be a graceful act, and I think would be appreciated."

CAPTAINS AND BREVET LIEUTENANT-COLONELS.

"Umpire" writes:—"In bringing to notice the cases of brevet lieutenant-colonels still in command of companies, you have not mentioned the particular hardship that they alone do not count their time while so serving towards promotion to colonels, while the time of brevet lieutenant-colonels who have gone on half-pay as captains, if holding any appointment, does count; for instance, Capts. (on half-pay) Ussher and Woolfe were appointed Staff Officers of Pensioners, one is retired with the rank of major-general, the other is still serving as a colonel. With respect to the case of Brevet Lieut.-Col. Brockman, 86th Regiment, attention might be called to that of Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Twentyman, 19th Hussars, who is senior as a lieutenant-colonel to Lieut.-Col. Brockman; senior to him as a brevet major, and two years senior as a captain. He is the senior captain in the Army, who is also a brevet lieutenant-colonel. He is senior to all but four lieutenant-colonels commanding Cavalry regiments, senior to his own commanding officer; the senior lieutenant-colonel of the Dublin District, in which he is now serving. The Army List shows his services."

POST-PURCHASE CAPTAINS.

"One of Them" writes:—"The grant of a half-pay majority to post-Purchase captains might benefit perhaps about one in fifty, who happened to hold a Staff-College certificate; as to the remainder, they would receive the half-pay of a major, about £174 a year, instead of a pension of £200, with similar (honorary) rank; or they would lose the eligibility which they would hold as half-pay captains, to enter the Army Pay Department up to the age of 45. As majors are not eligible for appointment to that branch, I scarcely think 'it would be accepted as a substantially fair settlement.'"

ASSISTANT-PAYMASTERS, R.N.

SIR,—The present very unsatisfactory condition of the Assistant-Paymasters of the Royal Navy certainly needs the serious investigation of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty. Promotion to paymasters is virtually at a stand-still, for ten a year taken from a list of assistant-paymasters, clerks, and assistant-clerks numbering over 300, cannot be considered as in a flowing condition; and the assistant-paymaster just promoted (tenth this year) has served fourteen and a half years in that rank, not to mention nearly five years as clerk and assistant-clerk. Thus he has had to serve nearly twenty years, to reach an equivalent rank to that attained by officers of the Executive branch after an average of between eleven and twelve years' total service, and that of medical officers on entry. The hardships of an assistant-paymaster of long service, having no cabin, and no greater comfort or consideration than he had years ago on entry, is bitterly felt. What is wanted is as follows, viz.:—1st. The Paymasters' List to be at once increased to 250, exclusive of those on the Special Secretaries' List. 2nd. The appointment of assistant-paymasters-in-charge abolished, and junior paymasters appointed instead. 3rd. All time served by assistant-paymasters over eight years to count as "senior service." At a time when it is known an Order in Council ameliorating the position (already infinitely above that enjoyed by the neglected Account Branch) of the medical officers is on the eve of promulgation, it cannot be too soon for their Lordships to endeavour to do justice to a loyal, deserving, and useful body of officers. One word more, Sir, and I will cease. Junior paymasters, for no reason that can be discovered outside Whitehall, are of inferior rank to junior chief engineers, until they reach eight years' standing. This should be remedied, and it would cost nothing. I may say that the above is concurred in, nem. con., by those consulted, a large number.—I am, &c.,

JUSTITIA.

The Admiralty requiring an extremely powerful electric light for the use in naval operations, a special apparatus was designed by the Anglo-American Electric Light Company. The light was exhibited experimentally last week from the company's works, Lambeth, and proved to be one of unusual brilliancy and penetration. This light is produced from a "Brush" machine, and is computed to be of 47,000 candle-power, thus constituting, perhaps, the largest and most powerful single light ever produced. The carbon poles used are 1¼ in. in diameter, and to supply it with the current conducting wires half an inch in diameter are required. The Brush machine employed in generating the current is of the same size as that used for producing 16 lights, but it is so constructed as to give in one light an excess of the total amount of illuminating power developed by the 16 lights, thus illustrating the superior power of Brush's system of dynamo-magneto machines. This machine is driven by an engine of eight horse-power, developing 14-horse power, which is that required for driving.

The Army.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). The trial of the petition presented by the Lord Advocate against the return of Capt. Milne Home for Berwick was opened at Berwick on Tuesday before Mr. Justice Hawkins and Mr. Justice Lopes. The Court concluded its labours on Wednesday, when Mr. Justice Hawkins announced that bribery had been proved against three fishermen, and against Joseph Edminson, who had given them money, and that therefore their votes would have to be struck off. This made the numbers stand:—Home, 584; the Lord Advocate, 581. The Judge ordered the Lord Advocate to pay two-thirds of Capt. Home's expenses bill. Capt. Home was loudly cheered.

1st King's Dragoon Guards. The regiment entered Maritzburg on the 17th ult., under the command of Col. Alexander, who rode out to meet them. It was to stay for a short time prior to embarking for India. A correspondent, writing from Pietermaritzburg, says:—"The King's Dragoon Guards performed their march in two days less than laid down in the route, only one man falling sick. The doctors who medically examined all the men gave their opinion 'that they are the finest lot, taking them all round, of any regiment which has come under their examination.'"

4th Dragoon Guards. Capt. G. C. P. Brigstock, late of the regiment, joint lord of the manor of Ashley and Ryde, died suddenly at Ryde on the 13th inst. The deceased had been residing for some years near Ipswich, but went to the Isle of Wight for the benefit of his health, and had taken a house in Ryde. Not rising at his usual hour, his bedroom was entered, and he was discovered dead in his bed. Heart-disease was the cause of death.

5th Dragoon Guards. The promotion of Lieut. Baldry to the troop, vacant by the retirement of Capt. Johnstone, is a well-deserved acknowledgment of the services of an officer of quite exceptional merit. Capt. Baldry has served over a quarter of a century in the regiment, and for the last four years has held the adjutancy. The high reputation which the regiment bears is due in no small degree to exertions he has made, and the support which Col. Marsland has on all occasions received from him. Though the regiment loses his services as adjutant, officers and men are naturally pleased to find that Capt. Baldry's claims have been admitted at the Horse Guards, for it would have been a great injustice to have introduced an outsider whilst so deserving a soldier headed the list of subalterns.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers). This regiment marched into Sealkote on Sept. 25, being a year all but four days since it left Umballa for Afghanistan. The whole of this time was spent under canvas. The march down from Safed Sang was a very trying one, owing to the heat and the unhealthy season of the year. Two fatal cases of cholera occurred on the march. Capt. Burnley accompanied Gen. Roberts's force from Cabul to Candahar, as orderly officer to Brigdr.-Gen. Hugh Gough, and was present at the defeat of Ayoub Khan.

4th Hussars. We are glad to find that the troop vacant by the appointment of Capt. Warde to the adjutancy of the West Kent Yeomanry, has been given in the regiment. Though Lieut. Pearson has not yet completed five years' service, two outsiders have already been brought in to command troops, and it would scarcely have been fair to have robbed the subalterns again of the benefit of promotion, having regard to the good work the regiment has been doing at Aldershot and the excellent name it has earned for itself since its arrival home from India.

6th Dragoons. With eight and a half years' service, the senior subaltern, Lieut. Matheson, may be considered to have a strong claim to promotion, and the troop vacant by the retirement of Capt. Bloomfield ought certainly to be given in the regiment.

9th Lancers. Much satisfaction will be expressed throughout the regiment when the news reaches Candahar of Lieut.-Col. Bushman's promotion. Though brought into the regiment by selection some years ago from the 7th Hussars, Col. Bushman has earned the confidence of all ranks, and having served in Zululand and commanded the regiment on the march from Cabul to Candahar with Gen. Roberts's force, he has fairly earned the step which has been accorded him. The gallant 9th, we may rest assured, will fully maintain its reputation under Col. Bushman's command. The Times says:—"Mrs. Cleland, the mother of Lieut.-Col. Cleland, of the 9th Lancers, who lately died from the effects of wounds received in action before Cabul in December last, has received a letter from the Queen, expressing her Majesty's sympathy and sense of the great loss the country has sustained in being deprived of the services of so gallant a soldier."

10th Hussars. Capt. Spottiswoode has passed the examination qualifying for the General's or personal Staff in India.

12th Lancers. Some sensation has been caused at Poona by the arrest of Lieut. the Hon. G. W. H. Vernon, on a charge of striking a sowar of the Governor's Body-Guard, when returning home from the race-course. The Times of India gives the facts of the case as follows:—"As Sir James Fergusson was returning from the Poona Races, in a carriage drawn by the same spirited horses that lately caused an accident, he was followed by the officer in question, who tried to pass him on the road. His Excellency's horses got frightened at the sound of the carriage behind, and one of the sowars of the Body-Guard was ordered to request the driver to slacken speed a little. The officer, who may, perhaps, have misunderstood the sowar's message, is said to have struck the man with his whip, and to have pursued his course. A collision would, it is said, have been inevitable had not Sir James Fergusson's carriage been promptly pulled to one side of the road. This is the version of the story on which the arrest is supposed to have been made. But the officer denies striking the sowar."

14th Hussars. Lieut. Hamilton is en route to England from India in H.M.S. Himalaya.

16th Lancers. Capt. Howard is about to be seconded from the 1st inst., on appointment as aide-de-camp to Gen. Sir D. Lysons at Aldershot, Lieut. Blair obtaining the troop. Lieut. Aylmer gets his step from the 16th inst., vice Capt. M'Causland, retired.

17th Lancers. Lieut. Wood has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

"H. P. C." writes:—"The Maiwand despatch of Gen. Burrows (or such part of it as has been published) contains the following paragraph:—'The guns were lost because Lieut. Maclaine waited to fire another round, after he had received orders to limber up and retire.' It has struck me that, instead of blame being due to one who is no longer amongst us to defend himself, the gallant young officer referred to may have been sacrificed by his obedience to (instead of being guilty of disobedience of) orders; and that he may only have carried out that order which I am unaware of being cancelled, and which (for obvious reasons) directs that all guns, if loaded, should be discharged before limbering up. I myself recollect the circumstance of a General officer, with far more experience than that of Gen. Burrows's, having to be informed of this order, when he on one occasion attributed blame to the Artillery for endangering the life of his A.D.C., who had galloped in front of a battery in action immediately after carrying the order to cease firing; and until it be known that Lieut. Maclaine loaded his guns after receiving the orders to retire, it will be more just to believe that whatever blame may be due to the General commanding in the disastrous action of Maiwand, none is so to the young officer of Artillery whose loss of guns and subsequent cruel murder all England deplores."

No. 13 Baty. 8th Brig. and No. 16 Baty. 8th Brig. are under orders to embark at Bombay on the 13th prox. in H.M.S. Serapis, with the 62nd Regt., for conveyance to Aden, to relieve No. 14 Baty. 8th Brig. and No. 2 Baty. 9th Brig., ordered to return to England in the Serapis with the 1st Batn. 6th Regt.

Lieut. P. S. Williams, 4th Brig., has been granted leave from India to England for nine months, on urgent private affairs. Lieuts. G. H. W. Beaumont, 8th Brig. R.H.A., J. Temple, C Brig., and E. D. H. Buckley, 8th Brig., have been granted leave to England from India for six months, on medical certificate.

A Singapore correspondent writes:—"On Sept. 10 the community was startled by the sad news that a popular young Artillery officer, Lieut. Coker, had died that morning somewhat suddenly at Fort Canning of jungle fever, which he contracted in Johore. His funeral was held that afternoon, the Artillery, the Buffs, Blue-jackets, Government officials, and a number of residents all being present to show their last respects to the remains of a genial, gallant young fellow, who was loved by his comrades, and greatly respected by the whole community."

Major J. Haughton, 4th Brig., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

Lieut. W. C. Pollard, a probationer for the Indian S.C., has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Lieuts. M. W. Saunders, A Brig. R.H.A.; J. Temple, C Brig., R.H.A.; G. H. W. Beaumont, A Brig. R.H.A.; P. L. Williams, 4th Brig., and E. D. H. Buckley, 8th Brig., are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Times of India says:—"There is something peculiarly melancholy about the death of Col. Ponsonby Cox, the Chairman of the Bombay Port Trust. The appointment he filled was created when the Port Trust was reconstituted, and a considerable amount of criticism was evoked by the way in which a very important and highly-paid office was called into existence by Sir Richard Temple without any reference to the trustees, while the appointment to the office of a military man who had only recently come to India as Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, and who was almost necessarily ignorant of everything appertaining to the trade of this port, gave the new chairman a very unpopular start. The critics, ourselves among the number, were all most agreeably disappointed. On assuming office, Col. Cox at once exhibited the highest administrative talents. His experience as an engineer officer, his subsequent training as an Inspector of the Local Government Board at home, and the energetic manner in which he set to work from the very first enabled him to master the intricacies of a very important business concern at a very important period of its existence. In a few weeks those who had opposed his appointment most honestly were convinced of his fitness; in a few weeks more they were among his friends and admirers; and in a few weeks more they had to regret his loss. We never remember a case in which prejudices, which had appeared quite legitimate at the time, have been so rapidly lived down, and we doubt if any man who has lived so short a time in Bombay has ever left so many friends behind him. To great natural gifts Col. Cox added those charms of manner and address which make an official's life as pleasant to others as to himself. His close attention to the wishes of shipowners and merchants has done much to do away with the unpopularity of the Prince's Dock, and his invariable courtesy endeared him to all who had business relations with him; and not least of all, to his colleagues on the Port Trust, who had felt themselves slighted by Government when he was first appointed. The Port Trust Offices were closed on Thursday on receipt of the intelligence of Col. Cox's death, and several members of the Port Trust proved the esteem in which he was held by starting for Poona immediately to attend his funeral."

Dr. W. Hardwicke, the coroner for Central Middlesex, held an inquiry at the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's Inn Road, on Tuesday, concerning the death of the late Capt. M. S. Whitmore, late of the corps, aged 49, of Little Park, Enfield. The jury, after some consideration, returned the following verdict:—"That the deceased died from injuries caused by his being run over on the line of the Great Northern Railway, the deceased at the time being of unsound mind from drink; but whether the said death arose from accident or otherwise, the evidence was insufficient to show."

Capt. E. M. Larminie and Lieut. W. H. Chippindall are en route to England, from India, in H.M.S. Himalaya.

1st, or Royal Scots. Lieut. Bush is transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn., on promotion, and will join it shortly in England, on its arrival from India.

3rd Buffs. Capt. Kane, 1st Batn., is about to be seconded, with effect from the 24th inst., on appointment as adjutant of the 24th Middlesex R.V. Capt. Spooner is posted to the 2nd Batn. at Singapore, on being brought in from the Half-pay List.

4th King's Own. Col. Bray, C.B., is en route to England from India in H.M.S. Himalaya, on vacating command of the 2nd Batn. Capt. Rowlandson is transferred from the 2nd to the 1st Batn., Lieut. Dolphin remaining with the 2nd Batn., on promotion. Lieut. Shephard, 2nd Batn., has been appointed an extra A.D.C. to Sir James Fergusson, Bart., Governor of Bombay.

5th Fusiliers. Lieut. Heathcote, 2nd Batn., is under orders to return home from India, to join the depôt companies.

6th Regiment. The 1st Batn. is to be stationed at Warley on its arrival home from India early in December. Capt. Grundy, 1st Batn., is about to be seconded from the 30th inst., on appointment as adjutant of the 2nd Warwickshire R.V. 2nd Lieut. Landon, 1st Batn., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

9th Regiment. Capt. Mitchell is transferred from the 2nd to the 1st Batn., on promotion. Lieut. Ommanney remains with the 2nd Batn. 2nd Lieut. Lugard, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya.

11th Regiment. Capt. Skill completes his period of service as adjt. of the 1st Devon Militia on the 30th inst., Capt. Vaughan, 1st Batn., succeeding him in the appointment. Lieut. Dobbin, 1st Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to do duty with the 21st Bengal N.I., on probation.

12th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. is to be moved at the end of next month to Jersey from Portsmouth. Capt. Gordon, 2nd Batn., is to be seconded from the 12th inst., on appointment as adjt. of the 1st Suffolk R.V.

13th Light Infantry. The following officers of the 1st Batn. have obtained leave of absence from Devonport until Dec. 31, viz.:—Major Allfrey, Brevet Major Ethelston; Capts. Kinloch and Otway; Lieuts. Wilbraham, Williams, and Hayward; and 2nd Lieuts. West, O'Donnell, and Snow. Major Gillett, 2nd Batn., is about to retire.

14th Regiment. Capt. Harington and Lieut. Greaves, 2nd Batn., are under orders to return to England, to join the depôt companies. Lieut. Baird, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

16th Regiment. Capt. Whittuck, 1st Batn., is about to be seconded from Sept. 1, on appointment as adjt. of the Bedford Militia. Lieut. Richardson-Griffiths has been posted to the 1st Batn., on restoration to the establishment. Lieut. Johnstone, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and joins a Bombay native regiment on probation.

17th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Grant succeeds Lieut.-Col. Boyd, who has retired, in the lieut.-colonelcy, Brevet Major Creagh becoming major and Lieut. Clarke captain.

20th Regiment. Capt. Hussey has been posted to the 2nd Batn. on restoration to the establishment, but will not join for the present, as he has taken up the appointment of A.D.C. to Sir John Lefroy in Australia for the period of twelve months.

21st Fusiliers. We (Irish Times) hear that Col. W. P. Collingwood, lately commanding the 2nd Batn. 21st Fusiliers, will shortly be made a C.M.G. for the services which he rendered during the recent campaign in Zululand. Major Hamilton remains with the 1st Batn., on promotion. Capt. Lambart is transferred from the 2nd to the 1st Batn.; and Lieut. the Hon. A. S. Hardinge remains with the 2nd Batn. Capt. Spurgin, 2nd Batn., is to be seconded from the 1st inst., on appointment as aide-de-camp to Major-Gen Spurgin, at Aldershot.

22nd Regiment. Capt. Blane completes his five years' service as adjutant of the 1st Royal Cheshire Militia on the 26th inst., and is to be succeeded by Capt. Hall, 1st Batn. Capt. Matterson is about to be seconded from the 10th ult., on receiving the appointment of adjutant to the 15th Middlesex Rifle Volunteers. Capt. Kerr, 1st Batn., who has performed the duty of 2nd Brig.-Major at the Curragh since the middle of last April, has vacated his appointment to rejoin head-quarters at Newry. Lieut. Holmes, 2nd Batn., a probationer for the Indian S.C., attached to the 45th Bengal N.I., has leave to Calcutta from the 1st inst. to March 31 next, to study the native languages. Lieut. Davies, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

23rd Fusiliers. The following officers of the 2nd Batn. have been granted leave from Devonport until Dec. 31, viz.:—Col. O'Connor, V.C.; Capts. Gilbert and Cowan; Lieuts. Griffiths and Fenwick; 2nd Lieuts. Philips and Firman.

25th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. is to move early in December from Devonport to the Curragh. Capt. Stoney is appointed to the 2nd Batn., on restoration to the establishment. 2nd Lieut. Taylor, 1st Batn., a probationer for the Indian S.C., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee. 2nd Lieut. Cox, 1st Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya.

28th Regiment. Major Brodigan obtains the lieut.-colonelcy, vice Col. Dickins, placed upon half-pay on completing his five years in command of the regiment, Capt. Thackeray becoming major. Capt. Wilford is about to be seconded from the 5th inst., on appointment to the adjutancy of the North Mayo Militia, and Capt. Marsham from the 30th inst., on appointment as adjt. of the Royal North Gloucester Militia. Lieuts. Francis, Jacobson, and M'Crea obtain the vacant companies.

29th Regiment. Capt. Claremont, officiating A.D.C., has been appointed extra A.D.C. to Sir James Fergusson, Bart., Governor of Bombay.

31st Regiment. Orders have been received at Chatham for the regiment to proceed to Dover at the end of the present month. Capt. Hill completes his period of service as adjt. of the 1st Royal Surrey Militia on the 3rd prox.

35th Regiment. Brevet Major Browne completes his five years as adjt. of the Royal Sussex Militia on the 25th inst., Capt. Grant will succeed Major Browne in the appointment.

38th Regiment. Capt. Kell is expected to succeed Brevet Major Craufurd, 80th Regt., as adjt. of the 1st Stafford Militia.

39th Regiment. Lieut. Watson, a probationer, officiating wing-officer 41st Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from Aug. 27, 1879.

42nd Highlanders. Capt. Grogan is about to be seconded from the 4th ult., on appointment as adjutant of the Royal Perth Militia. "An Old Black Watch" writes:—"As an old 42nd officer, I am extremely distressed, as are many other officers of national regiments, to observe a proposal to mix up regiments and confuse regimental titles. On the least reflection, it is evident that nothing can tend so much to impair discipline and esprit de corps,—of so much importance in an Army raised not by conscription, but by voluntary enlistment. Regiments are proud of their old and familiar designations; why should they be abolished or ruthlessly changed, and this probably suggested by some who do not know the feelings of soldiers? A man goes to enlist in a particular regiment, because his relations belonged to it; he comes to the depôt, and finds he may be transferred to another regiment; he returns home again (as lately occurred in the 42nd), and thus a good recruit is lost. And what about change of tartans, the cherished 'red hackle,' the honours on the colours, the old traditions of the corps? We implore the Authorities not to carry out the change of designations, but to let well alone. Enlist for 10 years, with 6d. a day at the end of this term, 'weed out' the inefficient men, and engage the rest to serve for 20 years for £20 a year pension. My opinion is that experienced non-commissioned officers and an efficient Army will be the result."

47th Regiment was to leave the Curragh yesterday for Dublin, and will occupy Beggars' Bush and the Ship-Street Barracks during the winter.

48th Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies will embark at Bombay on Monday next in H.M.S. Euphrates, for conveyance to England. Brevet Major Rawlins completed his five years as adjutant of the Northampton and Rutland Militia on the 16th inst.

49th Regiment. Lieut. Remmington obtains the company vacant by the retirement of Capt. Stevenson. A correspondent writes:—"I am glad to notice that Lieut. Haldane has been selected for his company in the 66th Regt. This young officer was lately passed over for promotion in his own regiment to the great astonishment of all those whose served with him at the Cape, where he worked most zealously, and endeared himself to all he came in contact with, by his upright, manly conduct and gentlemanly behaviour. I, having served in the South-African campaign, can bear testimony to his zeal and intelligence. I cannot but think that it is a disgrace to our military system that such officers should have to suffer the mortification of seeing juniors promoted over their heads, when they are doing all they can to show their devotion to their profession by voluntarily undertaking service in the field."

ROYAL MARINES.

The appointment for an assistant-instructor of musketry at the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines has become vacant by the promotion to his company of Lieut. E. A. M. Liardet, vice Capt. Gray, who receives his majority.

Lieut. P. Hearle has been appointed assistant-musketry instructor to the Plymouth Division, vice Liardet, promoted (Oct. 4, 1880).

Capt. E. O'B. Gray has been promoted to be major at the Chatham Division, vice Silver, retired; Lieut. and Assist.-Instructor of Musketry E. A. M. Liardet, to be captain at the Plymouth Division, vice Gray; Capt. W. T. Miller to be acting paymaster to the Royal Marine battalion stationed in Ireland, vice Gray, promoted (Oct. 4, 1880).

Capt. W. P. Wright has been appointed gunnery instructor at the Chatham Division, vice Whale, promoted (Sept. 20, 1880).

50th Queen's Own. Capt. Elmhirst is about to be seconded from the 13th inst., on appointment as adjutant of the 20th Middlesex Rifle Volunteers.

51st Light Infantry. Lieut. Preston is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 36th Madras N.I., on probation. Lieut. Lane, a probationer for the Indian S.C., attached to the 28th Bengal N.I., has been granted leave from the 1st inst. to March 31 next, to visit Calcutta to study the native languages.

55th Regiment. Capt. Pitt is about to be seconded from the 26th inst., on appointment as adjutant of the Cumberland Rifle Volunteers.

64th Regiment is to be brought over to England early in December from Ireland, and stationed at Dover. Capt. Richardson is about to be seconded from the 26th inst., on appointment as adjutant of the 3rd Royal Lancashire Militia.

67th Regiment. The Times of India says:—"News has been received in Bangalore of a number of deaths from cholera in the 67th Regt., now on its way from Cabul." Capt. Connellan, who was recently examined by a medical board at the Curragh on his return from India, has been recommended for six months' leave of absence, for the recovery of his health.

70th Regiment. Capts. Miller and Brander are ordered home from India to join the depôt at Kingston-on-Thames.

73rd Regiment. Major and Brevet Col. Muriel is about to retire, on the completion of his seven years' service as substantive major, when Major Farrington, now employed at the depôt, is to be brought on to the establishment from the Supernumerary List.

75th Regiment. The move of the regiment from Aldershot to Chatham is to be carried out immediately.

76th Regiment. Capt. Gore is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya, on vacating his Staff appointment. The order for the transfer of Army Schoolmr. W. Collier to the 29th Regt., in India, has been cancelled.

80th Regiment. Brevet Major Craufurd completes his period of service as adjutant of the 1st Stafford Militia on the 1st prox.

83rd Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Alban has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

84th Regiment was to have moved yesterday from Dublin to the Curragh, to be stationed for the winter. Capt. Ford has been noted for appointment as an adjt. in the Auxiliary Forces in the 8th Sub-District.

86th Regiment. Capt. Hamilton, late of this regiment, was killed in action during the late war in South Africa. When one of the senior subalterns of the 86th, he volunteered his services for the Crimea; and, with Serjt. Robinson, was appointed to do duty with the Turkish Contingent. After the peace he was promoted to be capt. into one of the newly-raised second battalions. After some years of further service, Capt. Hamilton sold out, and settled in South Africa. On the breaking-out of hostilities in that country, he again took up arms, in defence of the colony, at the cost of his life. He leaves a widow and a large family. "A Member of Lieut.-Col. J. D. Brockman's Family" writes:—"While acknowledging most gratefully the very kind furtherance given to his interests by the Army and Navy Gazette, some of his friends think it should be known that no preferment out of his own regiment, either in another regiment or to the Unattached List, has been asked for for him, Lieut.-Col. Brockman having served on in the 86th Regt. since the Royal Warrant of August, 1877, in the hope of obtaining regimental promotion, of which he has had some considerable expectation for more than two years past, and they also feel it to be due to the military authorities, since the subject has been brought forward, to say that every courtesy and consideration has invariably been shown by his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief and the Horse Guards and War Office Staff. Col. Brockman was, a few years since, recommended for an adjutancy to the Auxiliary Forces, and his name was noted for employment; but it was then considered that his nearness to promotion made his obtaining one undesirable. And had the proposed new scheme for appointing Line field-officers to the Auxiliary Forces come into being, he had hopes of being selected, as he had been recommended, and his name placed on the List." Lieut. Tobin, a probationer for the Indian S.C., has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate.

87th Fusiliers. Capt. Ferguson is about to be seconded from the 22nd inst., on appointment as adjutant of the Leitrim Militia.

94th Regiment. There are now four companies vacant in the regiment, and the subalterns have such short service that they can scarcely lay claim to promotion, though we understand that Lieut. MacSwiney's case will probably meet with favourable consideration.

96th Regiment. The retirement of Brevet Major Josselyn causes no promotion, he not having been restored to the Establishment on vacating the adjutancy of the Bedford Militia. Major Josselyn has left the Service to take up civil employment, he having been selected some time ago for the chief constableship of Bedfordshire.

101st Fusiliers. Major Hall succeeds to the command of the regiment by the retirement of Col. Delafosse, C.B., Capt. Abbott obtaining the majority and Lieut. Lane the company.

105th Light Infantry. Capt. Huskisson completes his period of service as adjutant of the 1st West York Militia on the 5th prox. Capt. Hilliard is about to be seconded from the 4th ult., on appointment as adjutant of the 4th West York Militia.

107th Regiment. Though a young officer, Lieut. Creighton has been given the company, in consideration of his services as adjutant, and of his having already had two officers brought in over his head.

108th Regiment is to be moved early in December from Portsmouth to Portland.

109th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Bartholomew obtains the lieutenant-colonelcy vacant by the retirement of Lieut.-Col. Lucas, Brevet Major Murray becoming major and Lieut. Hibgame captain.

Commissariat and Transport Department. Capt. Ponsonby, D.A.C.G., on probation, has taken over command of No. 14 Company, vice D.A.C.G. Nugent, who has relieved A.C.G. Noake, of No. 6 Company, that officer being under orders for the West Indies. D.A.C.G. Ward has taken over command of No. 13 Company. Capt. Prevost, D.A.C.G., on probation, has relieved A.C.G. Parkin, in command of No. 16 Company, the latter having assumed command of the companies at Woolwich, on retirement of A.C.G. Milne. D.A.C.G. Skirving and Winter are attached to the depôt company for instruction, previous to taking over command of companies. A.C.G. G. Johnston has relieved A.C.G. Matthews at Woolwich of the barrack duties, the latter proceeding to Cape Town, to relieve A.C.G. Stewart, whose period of foreign service has expired. D.C.G. Hall is about to relieve D.C.G. Downes, the latter having nearly completed the regulated term in his rank. A.C.G. Saunder has returned from Singapore, and is on leave until posted to a charge. A.C.G. Clerke is to take over the duties of senior commissariat officer in the Home District.

Medical Department. Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. L. Jameson and Surg.-Major J. Land, M.D., are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya. Yet another improved equipment for the marching soldier is brought forward by Surg.-Major Hoile, who claims for it several superiorities over the "Oliver" and the "Barrett." As it is stated that during the coming season of route-marching at Aldershot Sir Daniel Lysons intends that real work shall be done, and not merely a little work of a few miles, there will be every opportunity of thoroughly testing all three disputed equipments. A correspondent writes from Belize:—"Early on the morning of Sunday, Aug. 29, the small military circle at Belize, British Honduras, was awakened by the painful and most unexpected news of the death of Surg.-Major A. Thomson, A.M.D., the senior medical officer in the command. The deceased had taken to his bed for three days, suffering from what was reported to be a colic, accompanied by fever and ague; but up to the evening of Saturday, the 28th, no apprehension existed as to his illness, either with the medical practitioners attending on him or among his brother-officers at the station. It appears that about 3 a.m. on the 29th, the deceased, being in a very weak state, left his bed and went to the door of his hut; this exertion produced a fainting-fit, from the effects of which he was unable to recover, though when he died, very shortly afterwards, it is believed he was quite conscious and free from pain. At about 4.45 p.m. on Sunday, the funeral procession started from the late Surg.-Major Thomson's quarters. The entire detachment of the 2nd West India Regt. at Belize formed the firing-party, under command of Lieut. Jopp, the band being furnished by the Belize corps of the British Honduras Rifle Volunteers, the whole of which corps, under the command of Major Fowler, attended the funeral. Major Sheppard, 2nd W.I. Regt., commanding the troops in the colony, was in command of the entire party, and Deputy-Assist.-Comy.-Gen. A. Ely, Commissariat Staff, with Lieut. A. Carden, 2nd W.I. Regt., acted as pall-bearers, every officer in the garrison attending, except Capt. Devereux, 2nd W.I. Regt., who was on the sick-list. Some civilian friends of the deceased also followed, and the service was read by the Rev. G. H. Geare, officiating garrison chaplain, and the body was interred at Yarborough Cemetery about 6 p.m. The event produced a profound sensation among the inhabitants of Belize, who were present in strong force to witness the funeral, Surg.-Major Thomson having been universally esteemed, and being the first British officer who has died at Belize for several years."

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Royal London. We have been asked to call attention to the advertisement which appears in another part of our columns respecting the annual dinner of the present and past officers of the regiment.

"An Orderly-room Clerk" complains that "Although extra-duty pay is allowed in accordance with the Regulations for the Militia, 1880, par. 636, to serjeants who are appointed to act as colour-serjeants during the preliminary drill and training of their regiments, the orderly-room clerks receive no extra pay whatever." They should receive, he says, the extra 6d. a day allowed to acting colour-serjeants for the training period.

A RECEIPT FOR GOOD SHOOTING.

"Another Looker On" writes:—"I was rather glad to see the letter of "Looker On," in a recent issue headed "A Receipt for Good Shooting." It is high time that regiments were made to compete with each other upon fairer terms than they do at present. In those regiments where drill is made almost subordinate to musketry, it is perfectly ridiculous to witness the manner in which the companies are dry-nursed whilst going through their annual course. They won't fire if there is a breath of wind from the right; they won't even parade for firing if there is a puff of air from the left; and if the wind is up the range—my!—it disarranges the men's hair, and therefore they cannot shoot; and whilst they are probably getting through with two companies, other regiments in the same station will have finished four. I must, however, record my word of praise to the musketry-instructor of these high-figure regiments for the excellent manner in which musketry instruction is imparted to the men, as witness the perfect position and steadiness of the soldiers when firing, but to nurse them up to the extent they do is a great mistake. If these regiments were on service, and had to fire in wind and rain, they would sadly miss their comfortable mats to lie down upon, their telescopes wherewith to watch their shots, and the small hand-target with the tell-tale to show where each shot hit the iron target, to say nothing of the handy camp-stool, and the shady umbrella under which the register-keeper sits in state. Joking apart, if the musketry instruction is to be carried on fairly all round, every regiment should share and share alike, and no picking and choosing of weather be allowed."

A quarterly court of the Marine Society and Warspite training-ship was held, at the offices, Bishopsgate Street, on Thursday. The report of the committee stated that 46 boys had been admitted during the quarter, and 40 had been sent into the merchant service. The numbers, notwithstanding the difficulty in procuring berths, had been up to the average. Swimming, that important branch of a sailor's education, had been most successfully taught during the past season, 92 boys, who were entirely ignorant of the art, having learnt to swim. Seven medals had been granted during the quarter for good service at sea. The committee regretted to report the death of two members,—Admiral Sir J. W. Tarleton, K.C.B., and Mr. W. H. Poynder, D.L.

SIR,—As there can be but little doubt that Territorial Regiments will soon be formed, will you grant me a little space in your columns to endeavour to point out how this can be effected, without abolishing the time-honoured numbers of the first 57 regiments of the Line, the junior of which has existed 125 years. A little shifting of depôts from one county to another will be requisite, but this would not cause much expense, nor probably any severe pang to regiments which have at present but a slight connection with the counties of which they bear the name. The 66 existing sub-districts should be renumbered, to correspond with the new numbers of the double regiments. The 60th Rifles taken out of the Line, should form the 67th and 68th Sub-Districts, and the Rifle Brigade the 69th and 70th. The title of "Royal" appears to have been too lavishly bestowed in the recommendation of Col. Stanley's Committee, rendering that distinction comparatively too common and valueless. I suggest that all the battalions composing a regiment, the Militia included, should wear the facings, and in the case of Scotch corps, the uniform of the 1st Battalion; but the linked Line battalion might be permitted to retain its old shoulder-straps and badge, with its battles in a separate roll in the Army List. I have carefully grouped in their proper seniority the Scotch and Irish regiments, which, as the juniors, must perforce lose their present numbers. Hoping you will find space for this letter, and the accompanying tabular distribution, and that it may attract the favourable notice of the War Office,

I am, &c., AN OLD OFFICER,

WITH THIRTY-FIVE YEARS' REGIMENTAL SERVICE.

Proposed arrangement to correspond with Territorial Scheme.

The scarcity of petty officers throughout the Fleet has come to such a pass that, in addition to the orders given for a number of suitable A.B.'s and leading seamen to be drafted from the receiving ships into the Channel Squadron, for the purpose of being advanced to petty officers' ratings, the ships of the First Reserve have also been called upon to furnish a number of men of this class. Some 30 petty officers are to be obtained from this source, so that there is a fair chance for good men to be brought forward. The recent directions given at the ports for a first-class man-of-war's complement to be kept in each receiving ship, available at a moment's notice, in the event of it being necessary to commission such a vessel, led to the discovery of the impossibility of complying with their Lordships' wishes, as the petty officers could not be found or borrowed from other ports. Then the probable requirements of the next few months were looked into, and the scarcity became more apparent, and allowing for the number which would take their discharge as time-expired men on arriving in England in ships ordered home, it was seen that it was useless to look in that direction for petty officers. To overcome the difficulty, the harbour ships and the Coastguard ships have been called upon to select suitable men for rating, and about a hundred petty officers will get advancement through this circumstance.—Hampshire Telegraph.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1880.

THE training of officers and men for the Royal Navy is at last receiving that attention it deserves, and the Detached Squadron, the flagship of which sailed from Spithead last Saturday, has been formed with this object. Rear-Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam, C.B., has been instructed to use steam only in cases of emergency, or for the purpose of instructing the officers under his command in the science of steam tactics, and a large number of additional ordinary seamen are borne on the books of the ships. The squadron consists of the flagship Inconstant, Captain Fitzgerald; the two new corvettes, Cleopatra, Captain F. Durrant, and Carysfort, Captain H. F. Stephenson, C.B.; the Tourmaline, Captain Dennistoun; and the Bacchante, Captain Lord Charles Scott. The Inconstant is, with the exception of the Shah, the largest unarmoured ship in the Navy, measuring 333 ft. in length, 50 ft. 1 in. in breadth, and having a displacement of 5,782 tons. She is armed with ten 12-ton guns on the main deck, and six $6\frac{1}{2}$-ton guns on the upper deck. When new, the Inconstant realised the highest speed known at that time in the Navy, having attained close upon 17 knots on the measured mile. But although her machinery has developed as much as 7,361 horses, the pressure on her boilers has now been reduced to 20 lb., and on her trial on the mile in Stokes Bay, last week, the speed realised 13·555 knots. The Cleopatra and the Carysfort, steel corvettes, are 225 ft. in length and 44 ft. 6 in. in beam, with a load displacement of 2,383 tons, and engines working up to 2,300 horses. They carry 14 guns—two $4\frac{1}{2}$-ton and 12 64-pounders. The Bacchante is not so large as the Inconstant, and not so small as the Cleopatra and Carysfort. Her dimensions are:—Length, 280 ft.; extreme breadth, 45 ft. 6 in.; and depth of hold, 15 ft. 7 in. Her displacement is 4,070 tons, and the power of her engines 5,250 horses. She carries two $4\frac{1}{2}$-guns on the upper deck. On the main deck she mounts 12 $4\frac{1}{2}$-ton guns, and two 64-pounders. The Tourmaline is slightly smaller than the Cleopatra. She is 220 ft. in length and 40 ft. in breadth, and has a displacement of 2,162 tons, and machinery which has indicated 1,972 horses. Her armament consists of 12 64-pounders. This Squadron will proceed to the West Indies. Thence it will skirt the east coast of South America, visit the Falkland Islands, round Cape Horn, sail up the west coast of South America, visiting the ports of the Argentine Republic, Peru, Ecuador, and the Galapagos Islands. After calling in at Vancouver Island, it will proceed to the Sandwich Islands; Japan and China will then be visited. On reaching Singapore, the Bacchante will part company, and return home through the Suez Canal, to enable the Royal midshipmen to spend Christmas, 1881, at home. The remaining ships of the Squadron will then cross the Indian Ocean, and touch at the Cape of Good Hope and St. Helena on its way home, being timed to arrive at Portsmouth in May, 1882. Should this programme be adhered to, the detached Squadron will traverse some forty thousand nautical miles during its cruise. Altogether, the ships will be absent from England 570 days, of which they will be at sea for 352, and in harbour for 218 days. With the exception of a month's rest at Chifu in October, 1881, and three weeks at Vancouver's Island next June, the squadron will not remain longer than a fortnight in any harbour, while generally it will only lie at anchor for four or seven days. Steam is only to be used in cases of emergency, and the work both of officers and men will not be light. It speaks well for Naval officers that the number of applications for appointment to the Squadron far exceeded the number of officers required, and we can only but regret that the Admiralty did not take every advantage of this opportunity to appoint as many supernumerary Executive officers to these ships as their accommodation would permit. Very little extra expense need have been incurred in increasing both ward-room and gun-room accommodation, and this would have enabled several additional lieutenants, sub-lieutenants, midshipmen, and Naval cadets being appointed, to the great benefit of the Service. As matters now stand, the Cleopatra is the only ship carrying an additional lieutenant. No additional sub-lieutenants have been appointed, and but seventeen additional midshipmen and Naval cadets are borne on the books of the Squadron. The ships have been filled up with young seamen, but the young officers have seemingly been forgotten, and that at a time, too, when seamanship in the Royal Navy is said to be sadly deteriorating. As the Tourmaline has not yet left to join the Squadron, it is to be hoped that this may yet be remedied, and that not only will her complement of officers be increased, but that she will also take out others, to join the ships which have already sailed. The opportunity of imparting knowledge in seamanship to our young officers which now presents itself should be utilised to the fullest extent, and this can only be done by making as many Executive officers take part in the cruise as the ships forming the detached Squadron can possibly accommodate. Lieutenants have before now been content to put up with a cot and a screen, where cabins were wanting, and the Admiralty may rest assured that many officers of that rank would be willing to do so again, rather than lose the opportunity which now presents itself of adding to their professional knowledge and skill.

The Army and Navy Gazette of Saturday next will contain an article by Mr. Russell on the last volume of Mr. Kinglake's "Invasion of the Crimea," entitled, "The Winter Troubles."

The following changes of quarters by regiments on the Home Establishment have been arranged at the Horse Guards, and will be carried out shortly, should no unforeseen circumstances arise, viz.:—The 1st Batn. 6th Foot, from Aden to Warley; 1st Batn. 8th Foot, from Warley to Colchester; 1st Batn. 12th Foot, from Portsmouth to Jersey; 2nd Batn. 25th Foot, from Dover to Curragh; 32nd Foot, from Jersey to Alderney; 56th Foot, from Portsmouth to Aldershot; 64th Foot, from Ireland to Dover; and 108th Foot, from Portsmouth to Portland.

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, as colonel-in-chief of the Royal Artillery, has approved of a regimental memorial being erected by the officers to their comrades of all ranks who have fallen in the recent campaigns in Afghanistan and South Africa. With a view to ascertaining the general feeling as to the form to be selected for the memorial, and to obtaining subscriptions, his Royal Highness has appointed the following committee:—President, Major-General J. Turner, C.B. Members, Colonel W. Stirling, C.B.; Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. A. Stewart, R.H.A.; Major Francis Duncan, R.A.; Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel A. Harness, C.B., R.A.

We are, indeed, glad to learn that all difficulties have been overcome, and that when the Gazette appears announcing the rewards for those brought to notice on account of their services before Cabul in December last, an intimation will be inserted to the effect that Lieutenant-Colonel R. S. Cleland, 9th Lancers, would have been made a C.B. had he lived. We congratulate those in authority on the decision at which they have arrived. We confess we entertained fears at one time that the influence of red-tapeism would be too great to allow of justice being done to the memory of the deceased officer, who set an example to the British Army by the devotion he displayed. We are glad to find that we were wrong, for this generous acknowledgment of the claims of a gallant soldier will do much to raise our military administration in the estimation of the public, besides being an evidence that the great official god, Precedent, has to yield occasionally to the demands of justice.

It would be a gracious act, and one that would be highly appreciated, if her Majesty was recommended to allow the 24th Regiment to bear the word "Isandhlwana" on its colours and appointments, to commemorate the stand made by all ranks on the memorable 22nd of January, 1879. No British regiment ever deserved more thoroughly to have its gallantry recognised, and it says little for our military system that so long a time should have elapsed since the events of that memorable day without any steps of any kind being taken to perpetuate the memory of the brave dead, who fell when nobly upholding the credit of British arms.

The question of the expenses of the Perak war of 1875 has now been decided, after being long in abeyance. Lord Kimberley has ruled that the sum spent locally by the Government of the Straits Settlements shall be retained as an asset to be recovered as convenient from Perak and Sungai Ujong. Lord Kimberley, however, has insisted that no portion of the war expenditure shall remain charged to Imperial funds, and that the sums advanced by the Indian and Imperial Governments must be repaid from the Colonial Treasury in three instalments.

We understand that the adjutancy of one of the strongest and best of the Yorkshire Militia regiments—the 4th West York, at Knaresborough—has been going begging. The appointment has been offered to two captains of the affiliated Line regiment (the King's Own Borderers), but has been refused by both of them, on the ground that the allowances are altogether too small to induce them to accept a position. This is a matter which calls for the attention of the Secretary of State for War. It is a great point in favour of the present arrangement that the adjutancies of the local Militia and Volunteers are filled by officers of the Line battalions, attached to the Sub-Districts in which the several corps have their head-quarters. It will be a pity, if this undoubted advantage should be lost, owing to a want of liberality on the part of those who control the finances. A second adjutancy is about to become vacant in the York Sub-District,—that of the 2nd West York Militia, and there is a prospect of this appointment also being filled by an outsider. This cannot be desirable.

A vacancy has occurred in the establishment of aides-de-camp to the Queen by the retirement of Colonel H. A. Welman, half-pay, late of a Depôt Battalion. Colonel T. D. Baker, C.B., 18th Royal Irish, now on service in Afghanistan, succeeds Colonel Welman on the paid establishment, Colonel Sir Baker C. Russell, K.C.M.G., C.B., 13th Hussars, who was gazetted supernumerary aide-de-camp, in recognition of his services in Zululand, being placed on the unpaid establishment.

We continue to receive from the Cape most unsatisfactory accounts of the state of feeling existing among the men of the British regiments stationed there,—that is to say, if the number of desertions which are reported may be taken as a criterion, which we presume it may, of the disfavour with which soldiering is regarded in those regions. The King's Dragoon Guards and 2nd Battalion 21st Fusiliers appear to have suffered to the greatest extent. One case is mentioned in which a man of the K.D.G.'s, named Molloy, who was recommended as groom to Sir G. Pomeroy-Colley, decamped from his quarters at Government House, Maritzburg, taking with him one of Lady Pomeroy-Colley's carriage-horses, a saddle belonging to the Governor's Private Secretary, his regimental carbine, and a quantity of ammunition. Search was made for the runaway in the precincts of the city, and the police officials at Durban, Botha's Hill, and elsewhere were telegraphed to, requesting them to keep a look-out for the man. He appears, however, to have got past the police at Botha's Hill, for a telegram was received from Durban intimating that he had been captured there, and that the horse had been recovered. Molloy had hitherto borne a good character, and it was on that account that he was recommended to the Governor by Colonel Alexander, who was considerably surprised and annoyed at the man having betrayed the confidence heretofore reposed in him. Molloy was to be brought before the city magistracy for trial.

Lieutenant E. W. Herbert, 60th Rifles, has been appointed aide-de-camp to Mr. G. W. Des Vœux, C.M.G., the new Governor of Fiji.

In the Gazette of Friday last, there appeared the official notification of three selections which the Horse Guards have made of subalterns for promotion out of the ordinary groove Lieutenant C. E. Sawyer, from the 81st Regiment, for instance, has been given his company in the 47th; Lieutenant H. E. Haldane, from the 49th Regiment, has been promoted into the 66th; and Lieutenant C. W. A. Arthur, from the 84th Regiment, has obtained his company in the 65th. We may point out that the 47th and 81st, 49th and 66th, and 84th and 65th, are all what are known as "links," and the selection of these three officers to receive steps in their affiliated regiments would seem to indicate the introduction of a new system, which, as the case of Captain Arthur proves, is not as equitable and fair as might be wished to the general body of officers. Captain Arthur, it seems, entered the Army on February 28, 1874, six-and-a-half years ago,—of course, without purchase. But there are, at least, a hundred officers still doing subaltern's duty who have twice the amount of service, many of them having purchased both their ensigncies and lieutenancies. These officers have certainly good reason to feel that a serious injustice has been done them by the selection of a non-Purchase officer, and one with no special claims, for promotion out of his own regiment, whilst they remain unrecognised. A few such appointments as this will have the effect of dispiriting men more than ever with a Service in which latterly there has been quite discontent enough engendered, one would have thought.

It is announced by telegram from Constantinople that Baker Pasha has renewed the contracts of Colonels Blunt and Synge and the other British officers serving in the Turkish Gendarmerie.

Clause 31 of the Royal Warrant, August 13, 1877, regulating the promotion and retirement of officers in the Army, distinctly states that one vacancy out of every three that may occur among the General officers of the Cavalry and Infantry is to be absorbed. By the accompanying list it will be perceived that exactly 45 vacancies have taken place between Oct. 1, 1878, and Oct. 1, 1880, the date of General Sir John Michel's retirement. This should have caused the promotion of precisely 30 colonels, whereas, excluding H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, only 27 colonels (M'Leod to Peel) have received advancement. The vacancies caused by the death of Major-General Crawley and by the retirements of Generals Sir A. Little and Sir John Michel are, therefore, owing to Colonels Knight, Earle, and Robertson-Ross, and should be gazetted before filling up Lieutenant-General Lacy's vacancy, due since the 5th inst. Vacancies among General officers of Cavalry and Infantry on establishment since Oct. 1, 1878:—1878—Generals Norcott, Trollope, Garvock, W. Smith, Raymond, Kelly, and Bingham. 1879—Generals W. G. Brown, Stanton, M. W. Smith, Sir D. Russell, Fellowes, Lawrence, Hagart, Pocklington, Stannus, Lockhart, Goodenough, Bell, and Robertson. 1880—Generals Malcolm, Cadogan, Scudamore, Munro, Dennis, De Salis, Stuart, Armstrong, Hill, Bourke, Budd, Conway, Crutchley, Hodge, Taylor, Curtis, Lugard, Whimper, Gibson, Griffiths, Lord G. Paget, Crawley, Raikes, Little, and Michel; total, 45. Colonels promoted:—Colonels Sir J. C. M'Leod, Walker, Sarel, Fielden, Palmer, Blane, Harenc, Gubbins, Goodlake, Monck, Rattray, Randolph, Woods, Whitmore, Fielding, Burroughs, Daniell, W. K. M'Leod, Howard-Vyse, Nelson, Burnaby, Roberts, Rickman, Deshon, Dean-Pitt, Boldero, and Peel; total, 27.

The homeward relief season of regiments in India for the winter 1880-81 will be opened on Tuesday next, when the 48th Regiment sails from Bombay in H.M.S. Euphrates, en route to England.

The arrangements for the Afghan campaign have pressed very heavily upon some regiments. Let us take, for instance, the 65th. The junior major, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Wolseley, was selected for a Staff appointment when the first expedition was organised, in 1878. Since then, he has been uninterruptedly employed on the Staff, and the officers have been denied the promotion which would have passed to them nearly two years ago, had Colonel Wolseley been holding a substantive appointment. It certainly is hard on a regiment that it should be made to suffer by reason of the good-luck which has attended one of its senior officers. Our Army is made up of anomalies, and Colonel Wolseley's case affords evidence of the extent to which individuals are at times affected by some of them.

Our remarks lately with reference to the cases of Brevet Lieutenant-Colonels Carrington, C.M.G., 24th Regiment, and Gordon, 65th Regiment, and Captain Wavell, 9th Regiment, have not, we are pleased to find, passed unnoticed, and all three officers have now been seconded.

Complaints are continually reaching us as to the treatment of the Transport Branch of the Army Service Corps at Woolwich. In the present day, when so much attention is drawn to the necessity of an efficient transport and supply service, it would be imagined that every consideration would be shown to that branch; but at Woolwich the corps is never allowed to appear at reviews, even on the Queen's Birthday. At Aldershot and elsewhere the Transport companies are invariably turned out. Why, then, should they not be at Woolwich, which is the depôt of the corps? Slights of this kind must tend to make the Service unpopular, and render it very difficult to keep up a proper feeling of esprit de corps amongst the men, who naturally get the notion that they are not being treated as soldiers, although expected to behave and appear as such. At the last annual inspection, instead of being seen out with horses and waggons as a transport corps, to show their efficiency as such, the corps, for instance, was inspected in the stable-yard, the men on foot, the horses in stables, and the waggons not at all.

A lieutenant-instructorship at the School of Musketry, Hythe, is vacant by the promotion of Lieutenant W. J. Browne to a company in his regiment, the 36th. Captain Browne took up his appointment on December 1, 1879.

An officer of great experience on the Staff, referring to our recent article on the brevet question, urges that in the place of seniority, selection brevets should be given. As he justly observes, something is needed to put an end to the paralysis which is creeping over the Service and destroying the professional energies of officers. He asserts that he has frequently noticed at embarkations and disembarkations a most unmistakeable want of zeal. Officers now too often do their bare duty, and nothing more. Such officers, on its being suggested to them that such or such a thing, though not laid down in the Regulations, would materially add to the comfort of their men, have frequently given the following answer,—"Why should I give myself extra trouble? Next year my time will be up, and I shall be kicked out of the Service." It is lamentable that this state of things should prevail, but it is only the natural outcome of the present wooden system of compulsory retirement. Had officers, though approaching their twenty years' service, the hope of being rewarded by a brevet, there would be some stimulus for their zeal. As matters stand, how can zeal be expected from any but young officers, or those who, having obtained unusually quick promotion, are in no danger of being caught by the retirement clause?

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, Oct. 15, 1880.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of February 22, 1870, Commander Edmund Marmaduke Dayrell has this day been placed on the Retired List of his rank.

ADMIRALTY, Oct. 18, 1880.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of February 22, 1870, Commander William Belford Stubbs has this day been placed on the Retired List of his rank.

Assistance, Capt. C. Buckle, arrived at Gibraltar on Oct. 18 for Malta, with machine-guns and ammunition for the Mediterranean Squadron.

Coquette, Lieut. and Com. J. L. Burr, arrived at Malta from Gravosa on Oct. 17.

Cruiser, Com. F. A. Wetherall, has been undergoing repairs at Malta, and has been reported ready to resume cruising on Oct. 23. She left Malta for Syracuse on Oct. 19.

Danae, Capt. Purvis. A telegram, dated Oct. 17, says:—"Her Majesty's ship Danae, from New Zealand, has arrived at Suez."

Dryad, Com. John Hext, was at Bassein on Sept. 17. She returned to Rangoon from Bassein on Sept. 20.

Eclipse, Capt. C. C. Rising, was visiting southern ports, and would return to Rangoon about Oct. 8.

Enchantress, Staff Com. Hills, left Portsmouth on Saturday afternoon for Devonport, where she received Lord Northbrook and the other Lords of the Admiralty, engaged on their annual inspection of the dockyard.

Flirt, Com. Brackenbury, C.M.G., arrived at St. Helena from St. Paul de Loando, en route to Ascension, on Sept. 29.

Himalaya, Capt. H. Brent, left Port Said for Malta on Oct. 16, where she arrived on the 20th, and was to leave on the 23rd for England.

Inflexible. Three of the four 80-ton guns of the turret-armament have been placed on board; but as the fourth has not been completed for delivery by Woolwich, it has been determined to proceed with the gunnery trial without awaiting its arrival. As the purpose of the trial is principally to test the behaviour of the superstructures, glacis, and weather and hurricane-decks, under the heavy concussion of a salvo fired by electricity, the absence of the fourth gun will detract somewhat from the conclusiveness of the trial; but as the gun, if forwarded to Portsmouth, would have to be returned to Woolwich to be completed, it is not deemed absolutely necessary. The firing will take place about the middle of November, the charges being gradually increased from 350 lb. to the maximum battering charge of 425 lb.—Times.

Iron Duke, Capt. H. F. Cleveland, flagship of Vice-Admiral R. Coote, C.B., remained in Aberdeen Dock, Hong Kong, on Sept. 3.

Kestrel, Com. W. M. Lang, remained at Singapore on Sept. 3.

Lively, Lieut.-Com. Le Strange. On Saturday, the steamer Rollo, of the Wilson Line, Hull, was leaving that port for Gothenburg, having on board the Swedish mails, when she was caught by the tide and driven athwart the Duke of Edinburgh's steam yacht Lively. The shaft ram of the yacht went through her starboard bow, causing such injuries that it was feared she would sink, and had not prompt measures been taken she must have gone down. She will have to go on slip for repairs. The mails were brought ashore and despatched to London for transmission to Sweden. The Lively was not damaged.

London, Capt. C. J. Brownrigg, was paid off on Aug. 21, and recommissioned on the following day at Zanzibar, the new crew having been taken out by the Tyne.

Magpie, Capt. R. H. Napier, was in the Hainan Straits, surveying, on Sept. 3.

Minotaur, Capt. Harry Rawson, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Hood, C.B., was to have left Portsmouth at the end of this week, to join the Channel Squadron, but has been detained, in order that she may receive a Nordenfelt equipment, and, if necessary, temporary stowage will have to be provided for ammunition. Her old guns were recently returned to store, to be fitted with all the latest improvements.

Moorhen, Lieut. and Com. J. H. Corfe, was at Hong Kong making good defects on Sept. 3. She would proceed to Singapore to relieve the Kestrel.

Northampton, Capt. J. A. Fisher, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir F. L. M'Clintock, Kt., F.R.S., was at Halifax on Oct. 5, where she would remain until November. Mails after Nov. 11 should be sent to Bermuda, viâ New York.

Philomel, Com. H. B. Berners, was expected at Aden, on Oct. 26, from Seychelles.

Polyphemus. The work of constructing the armour-plated torpedo ram at Chatham is now proceeding rapidly, and she will be ready to be launched about March or April next.

Ruby, Capt. C. Foot, was at Tamatave on Sept. 22, but would return to Mozambique for stores on Oct. 21.

Seagull, Com. Mather Byles, senior officer at Aden, returned on Oct. 4 from Perim, and was about to proceed to Marayah, returning on Oct. 14.

Serapis, Capt. Guy O. Twiss, arrived at Port Said on Oct. 18, and left Suez for Bombay on Oct. 20.

Sylvia, Com. P. Aldrich, arrived at the Cape of Good Hope, and left again for England on Sept. 20.

Swinger, Lieut. and Com. O. Tudor, remained at Amoy on Sept. 3.

Tamar, Capt. T. H. Royse, which brought two batteries of Artillery from Malta for Gibraltar, was to embark four batteries and sail for the West Indies on the 20th inst.

Tourmaline, Capt. Robert P. Denistoun, went for a six hours' run on the measured mile on the Maplin Sands, on Oct. 20. The engines and machinery were found to answer very satisfactorily.

Tyne, Com. J. E. Stokes, at present engaged in a round of troop-service, on her arrival home is to be sent to Chatham to be docked, and undergo repair prior to proceeding to China with troops and stores.

Victory. The trucks, yardarms, and shrouds of the old Victory, at Portsmouth, the flagship of Nelson, were on Thursday decorated with garlands and evergreens, in honour of the anniversary of the Battle of Trafalgar. The members of the Royal Naval Club of 1765 held their annual banquet at Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's, in the evening, in commemoration of the anniversary of the battle. Admiral Sir William Mends, K.C.B., presided, the guest on the occasion being General Sir Daniel Lysons, K.C.B. The members present included Admiral Sir George King, K.C.B., Vice-Admiral Robertson, Vice-Admiral George C. Mends, C.B., Vice-Admiral Kennedy, C.B., Vice-Admiral Robertson-Macdonald, Rear-Admiral de Kantzow, Rear-Admiral J. P. Pickard, Rear-Admiral Beamish, C.B., Rear-Admiral Hoskins, C.B., Rear-Admiral Soady, Capts. Horatio Nelson, E. J. Church, Fairman, Langford, Douglas Walker, H. Nelson Hippisley, Henry E. Crozier, W. S. de Kantzow, Gooch, E. Anstruther, Cyprian A. G. Bridge, P. Hart Dyke, Charles Dent, Hastings, and A. P. Arkwright. Owing to the coldness of the weather, Admiral of the Fleet Sir George R. Sartorius, K.C.B., who was present at the memorable conflict, was prevented, although in excellent health, from attending the dinner.

Vulture, Com. John Eliot Pringle, has arrived in Sheerness from the East India station, having been absent from England since Dec. 28, 1876. She was inspected soon after her arrival in harbour by Capt. T. B. M. Sulivan, and Com. Pringle was complemented upon the condition of his ship and the efficiency of his crew. The Vulture will be dismantled and paid out of commission at Sheerness, after which she will be put into the fourth division of the Medway Steam Reserve.

Wild Swan, Com. S. H. P. Dacres, was at Seychelles on Sept. 22, and was expected at Zanzibar about the middle of November.

Wolverene, Comdre. Wilson, arrived at Noumea on Aug. 20. She left Sydney on July 17, with the new crew that had been sent out to her in the Raleigh, for a cruise among the islands of the Western Pacific. She arrived at Levuka on the 28th, and left on Aug. 1 for Suva with the High Commissioner, Sir A. Gordon, and staff. There she coaled, and started on the morning of the 3rd for Taviuni, one of the Fiji group, where a young prince was to be formally proclaimed and acknowledged. At 10.40 that night the ship struck with some violence on a reef off the north-west point of the islet of Goro. The reef is not marked on the chart, and the islet's position is incorrectly given. The officers say that it was dead calm at the time, and not the slightest ripple could be observed over the reef. There was a depth of many fathoms immediately astern, while under the bows there was not enough water for an ordinary cutter. The ship was got off in about an hour, and was found to be leaking considerably on both sides of the stem; she, however, proceeded on her way to Taviuni. She returned to Levuka after the native ceremony, and attempts were made by means of divers to stop the leaks, but with only partial success, and the Commodore decided to give up the idea of the intended visit to New Ireland. While at Levuka, news was received of the murder of the agent and two of the crew of the "labour" schooner Dauntless by some natives of Epii, or Api, as it is generally written, one of the New Hebrides. There is little doubt that it was an act of revenge for the treachery of another schooner, flying the French flag, that had visited Api a short time previously. The Wolverene arrived there on the 15th, having on board two natives of the island to act as interpreters and guides. The Presbyterian mission vessel Dayspring was found lying at anchor, and, after consulting with some of her people, the Commodore determined to destroy four villages belonging to the tribe that had committed the murders, as any chance of securing the actual malefactors was out of the question. Accordingly, on the 17th, Commander Burges Watson, with 100 seamen and marines, landed abreast of the ship. The four villages were burnt, and several thousand cocoa and banana trees cut down, as well as some small plantations of sugar-cane. Not a single human being was seen during the whole of these proceedings, which occupied some hours. All the inhabitants had taken refuge in the bush on the first appearance of the Wolverene. This was conclusive evidence of their guilt, as the natives in villages a few miles off were perfectly easy in their minds, and came off to the ship in numbers. For some years past the French authorities have talked about annexing the New Hebrides, and it is believed here that the event is at last on the point of taking place. The Wolverene was to leave on Aug. 21 for Sydney, to be docked and repaired, so as to be in time for the opening of the Melbourne Exhibition.

THE LIVADIA.

The Livadia arrived at Brest on Sunday, after a most agreeable passage from the Clyde. She had made the journey working at half-speed, with only 5,000 horse-power and only six of her boilers working. She thus occupied 48 hours in doing about 500 miles, but she was lying still through the best part of Friday night through fog in the Irish Channel. Taking the whole situation into account, we may say generally that the performances at half-speed are, if anything, more surprising than those at full speed. Her oscillation in the open sea is trifling. It is scarcely perceptible on the beam, and only amounts to one degree above and one below from bow to stern. The weather, however, was exceptionally fine, and there was nothing but the Atlantic roll to contend with. The lively way, however, in which she disposed of the waves gives fair indication of her behaviour in a storm, which the experts on on board fervently hope she will meet with before she reaches the Black Sea.

The vessel in its completed form is, says the correspondent of the Standard, neither more nor less than a floating palace. Above the line of the bulwarks rises terrace after terrace of verandah, capped by a flying bridge at the height of 56 ft. above the level of the sea. Below this, and occupying the whole of the fore part of the vessel, is the reception-room, a luxurious apartment decorated in the style of Louis XVI., with richly draped windows opening to the sea in all directions. The floors are laid with parqueterie and carpeted with Axminster. Two Jablochkoff electric lights hang from the ceiling, and numerous candelabra are fixed to the walls. A marble fountain stands at one end of the hall, and a richly-gilt and mirrored cabinet at the other. The hangings are of crimson velvet and the chairs in hand-brocaded satin. This is the state apartment of the vessel, and below it is arranged accommodation for the Imperial family Sumptuous apartments panelled with tapestry, and in some cases, with rich green velvet, are provided for each member of the house. The Czar's private rooms are provided with every comfort and luxury that a dwelling could afford. A similar series of apartments were set apart for the Empress. The Grand Duke is accommodated on the awning deck with a whole series of rooms for himself and the captain of the ship. The furniture and decorations equal in richness those of the apartments for the Imperial family; and below there is a grand dining-saloon for the suite of the Grand Duke. Extending from this are two ranges of apartments, all furnished with brass bedsteads, walnut wardrobes, marble washstands, and green leather-covered chairs. Around the whole runs a promenade some 12 ft. broad, covered in like a verandah by the awning deck above. At the fore end of the vessel is the grand drawing-room, designed after the style prevalent in the Palace at Livadia, and known as the Crimean Tartar drawing-room. This chamber is a blaze of colour, curiously decorated on the walls with Damascus tiling panelled between bands of onyx, and carved in most extravagant designs. The curtains to the windows are of rich maroon velvet, and the furniture is covered with amber satin richly brocaded. All the windows in these terraces are double French windows, opening on to the verandah, and altogether upset all ordinary notions of a ship. So do the window curtains and the Axminster carpets, and, above all, the absence of rolling.

The Czar's yacht Livadia, with the Grand Duke Constantine on board, left Brest on Wednesday morning on its way to the Black Sea. An incident of a startling character occurred on the trip from the Clyde to Brest. A man engaged as a stoker was asked on Saturday night to hold an electric lamp that was being swung for lighting the stokehole. He incautiously touched the wire with one of his hands, and with the other completed the current by grasping the brass rod surrounding the lamp. The force of the current struck him down dead. All efforts to revive him were unavailing, and the disintegration of the tissues of the body was found next day to be so great that it was felt to be necessary to bury him at sea. The ornate ritual of the Greek Church added to the striking character of a ceremony that could not fail to be unusually impressive. The service was conducted by the ship's chaplain in black robes, and the refrains were chanted by the dead man's shipmates. Admiral Popoff and the officers joined in carrying the bier to the main deck, and the chanting was continued till the body was committed to the sea.

THE ATALANTA.

It is understood that the Atalanta Committee, since they concluded their public inquiry, have been taking documentary evidence on the question whether the vessel's stability was such that the resistance offered by the weight and form of the hull would prevent her being capsized by wind pressure on her canvas. Up to this stage, the Committee had judiciously taken the public into their confidence. It is an open secret, says the Times, that the evidence given publicly will not enable the Committee to come to any positive conclusion, or to do more than hazard a conjecture as to the probable cause of the vessel's disappearance. At the same time, the balance of probabilities favours the supposition that she has been capsized in a sudden squall. The serious question is thus raised whether her liability to this danger could not have been foreseen, and, if so, whether something could not have been done to diminish it, or, if not, whether the vessel ought to have been allowed to go to sea.

The Juno was one of the class of men-of-war designed by Sir William Symonds to attain stability by breadth of beam rather than by ballast, of which she carried 30 tons, while vessels of similar size and different build will carry twice or thrice as much. The Juno had the characteristics of her class—great righting power when inclined, which is called stability, and which involves quick and deep rolling in rough water. She was twice commissioned, and then on account of her tightness and dryness was utilised as a police-ship at Portsmouth. This by no means implied unfitness for sea service. She was seven years in commission, six years in ordinary, and 15 years a police ship. A second training-ship was required, to emulate the success which was then being attained by the Eurydice—a ship of about the same size designed by Admiral Elliott. There would be too much delay in building a new one. There was nothing so available as the hull of the Juno. It was a case of Hobson's choice. There was a preliminary examination at Portsmouth, a complete one at Pembroke, and the result was £27,000 was spent in producing the Atalanta fitted and equipped like the Eurydice. Four of the twenty-six guns were left on deck, a forecastle was provided, the masts were shortened to lighten the work of the crew, and bilge-keels were put on to diminish the rolling. She went to the West Indies, encountered heavy weather, shipped water in rolling, received shocks from the bilge-keels leaving the water and striking it as they returned, and came home with a log recording leakage, lurches of 40 degrees, working of the masts, lifting of the upper-deck, and breaking of pipes. The leakage was found to be due to the starting of the bolts of the bilge-keels, which were removed by the captain's desire, but were ordered to be kept in readiness to be put on again. The deck-lifting was traced to the strain put on bolts, and was remedied by carrying the bolts through to the main deck. Two pipes were broken and were made good by fitting them with expansion joints. The lurching to 40 degrees was apparently reported during the second cruise, and by the witnesses for the Admiralty it was not credited; the angle was assumed to have been indicated by a pendulum which could not be relied upon. In the summer cruise the Atalanta met only with fine weather. The ship was easier without the bilge keels, and they were not replaced on her return. But as two small guns had been substituted for the four larger ones, in order to gain deck space, ten tons more ballast were put in the hold, and having cost altogether more than £29,000, the ship went on her third cruise. She left Bermuda for home on Jan. 31, and has not since been heard of. She would be likely to encounter very bad weather when three or four days off Bermuda, as other ships are known to have met with it.

It does not appear that the Board of Admiralty gave any special consideration to the reports of the first cruise. Nevertheless, it appears that some days after his return, when he had already made two or three reports, Capt. Stirling was called upon to make a careful report of the sailing qualities of the ship, and of her behaviour in a sea-way. He accordingly made another report; and yet the Naval Lords have no recollection that their attention was specially given to the case of the Atalanta at that time. This is the more extraordinary because the Eurydice had been capsized and the Atalanta had been fitted as much like the Eurydice as possible, and part of the Atalanta's rigging had been changed, by the substitution of rope for wire, because the Eurydice's topmasts had not given way, and she thus lost a chance which was supposed to have been the safety of some ships in like circumstances. As the results of examination seemed to show that the straining of the ship had been exaggerated, the excessive lurching was ignored, and the more readily as the anxiety of the officers was to get rid of the bumping caused by the bilge-keels striking the water. It was left for the Committee of Inquiry to ascertain from Lieut. Bethell that the angle of 40 degrees had not been put down hastily, and that the oscillation of a barometer was believed to indicate even a greater angle after a due allowance had been made for the swing of the pendulum. In the report for the first two months of the fatal cruise, which Lieut. Bethell escaped by transfer to another ship, lurches are put down at 45 degrees, and there is nothing to explain how the figure was arrived at; but it is admitted that the later changes made in the Atalanta between the first and the third cruise, while they increased her stability, would increase her already alarming tendency to roll and lurch.

Our knowledge as to the stability and safety of a ship does not depend upon experience and doubtful observations at sea. The Atalanta had been inclined for her stability before the first cruise. The Admiralty witnesses, in reply to direct and leading questions, expressed themselves well satisfied with the stability of the vessel, and entered into some explanations of the way in which the stability was affected by the redistribution of the weights. But it was left for Mr. John, of Lloyd's Registry, to explain the relation of the facts to the safety of the vessel, whose form vitiated her apparent capacity to carry her canvas safely. He says that, as equipped for her last cruise, the vessel combined an apparent stiffness under canvas at moderate angles of heel likely to be misleading when combined with a deficiency of stability at large angles for a vessel so heavily sparred in proportion to her displacement. According to Mr. John, very moderate wind-pressure would have been enough to capsize her. It is a simple question of fact whether these conclusions are warranted. On the part of the Admiralty, they are not met with that definiteness and intelligibility which the public will expect. We are told that there is substantial agreement between the official and the independent calculations of the Atalanta's stability, because both follow the same mathematical principles and are based upon identical data. But objection is taken to comparing the Atalanta with merchant ships, because the former Juno was designed to be stiff at small angles in order that she might use her lee guns. Yes, but she was designed in times when little was known about curves of stability, and, as the Atalanta, she was not a fighting ship, but a training ship. When it is said that experience had given assurance of her safety, the experience which tells the other way is overlooked, the advance of scientific knowledge is forgotten, and the warnings of her Majesty's ship Captain, of the Eurydice, and of the missing Symondites are disregarded. When it is said that the changes made in the Atalanta increased her stability, it should be added that they increased her tendency to lurch or roll to the large angles at which her stability rapidly diminished. Mr. Barnaby's objection to comparing war-ships with merchant-ships scarcely applies to comparing a training-ship with merchant ships. The lessons of the Stuart Hahnemann are scarcely invalidated by questions of detail or by the suggestion that a cargo of cotton may have moved, for we seldom hear of cotton being so packed as to shift from the rolling of the ship. It is admitted that there is a usual Admiralty practice of denoting sail-carrying power, and that this is usually determined with reference to the resistance offered by the hull; but the public will scarcely follow the reasoning why this rule cannot be applied to a small ship. It is said by Mr. Barnaby that you must consider form and stowage. That is precisely what Mr. John says; and he says it was the form of the ship and the consequent stowage that constituted the special danger of the Atalanta. Admitting that the case is one of difficulty when you come to deal with wind-pressure and spread of sail in the ocean, where "the sea does not roll mathematically," as a witness said, the question is whether Mr. Barnaby is justified in describing the opinion of Mr. John as speculative, or how far that opinion can be supported by the mathematical principles which both accept, and which neither would think of testing any more than they would the multiplication-table. In reply, Mr. John will, no doubt, reaffirm his original position; and in that case, the question cannot be left there unless the Committee are to evade the most important problem they had to consider.

If the conclusions of Mr. John can be supported, they are conclusions which could have been, and ought to have been, arrived at by the same process of calculation before the Atalanta left this country. If they are to be left challenged no more than they are in Mr. Barnaby's Minute, the public in all probability will accept them. It is admitted that the ship had been "revolutionised," as compared with the first commissions. The Eurydice had been "revolutionised," too; and the Eurydice had been capsized. Her ports were open; but it is by no means certain that if they had been closed she would not have gone over. There ought to have been evidence that considerations such as those suggested by Mr. John had been discussed by the Admiralty officials before the Atalanta's first cruise and certainly before the third. When, during the second cruise, the captain reported that in the first there had been lurches that were deemed incredible, their incredibility ought to have challenged investigation, considering that the ship had been "revolutionised." It seems more incredible that the Board of Admiralty should have called for a special report, and should have received it, that this should have been followed by the half-yearly report giving the angles of lurches which were undoubtedly dangerous if the figures could be relied upon, and yet that all the reports should have been treated so perfunctorily that three Naval Lords are totally oblivious of their having received any consideration at all, and the only evidence of consideration is the conversations of Capt. Stirling with the Controller, whose own judgment of the stability of the vessel is based, according to his own evidence, on the fact that he was "informed by Naval architects" that it would be increased by the changes that had been made. If, under such circumstances, the reports of captains are to be simply passed on to clerks and filed in Guard Book J, the captain who trusts to the deliberate consideration of any unusual entry he feels it his duty to make is the victim of routine. He assumes that his own impressions are checked and corrected by conclusions based on scientific data. If that is not done, brave men are sacrificed to misplaced confidence. It is admitted that if the Atalanta had lurched to 40 degrees, she ought not to have been sent to sea, and the public would rather have thrown away the £30,000 spent upon her than have risked the lives of the officers and crew if there were reasonable doubt of her stability and safety. It is of no use to say that other ships have rolled as much or more, if their form and conditions were different. The public will not recognise as bravery the affectation of the best seaman that losses at sea are inevitable when they are supposed to occur from running unnecessary risks which can be mathematically demonstrated by experiments in harbour and calculations made in an office. If absolute certainty is at present unattainable, we must accept the teaching of science as far as it will guide us; but the public will insist that humanity shall have the benefit of the doubt, and they desire to know in this case whether our knowledge of the laws of stability was made use of to prevent the running of a risk which could have been known to be dangerous.

ADMIRALTY INSPECTION.

The Lords of the Admiralty commenced their official inspection of the Dockyard and Government establishments at Devonport on Tuesday. They first proceeded to Keyham Factory, and inspected the ships undergoing repair, and then walked through the shops, including the new shop which has been fitted up for the especial use of the engineer students. Plans for the erection of a building for the stowage of torpedo boats to the north of the factory were submitted for their Lordships' approval. A long walk further north brought them to the site of the proposed new naval docks. The foundations for the docks are already laid, and it is proposed to erect two blocks of buildings, each capable of accommodating five hundred seamen, the object being to obviate the inconvenience at present experienced in berthing seamen on board the hulks in the Hamoaze, whilst their vessels are undergoing repairs in dock. Further progress with the work has been delayed owing to the change in the administration of affairs; but it is understood that contracts will very shortly be issued for erection of the building itself. Their Lordships afterwards visited the Engineers' College, completed only a few months since, and intended for the reception, as boarders, of the students engaged in Keyham Factory. About a hundred students are already quartered in the College, and fifty more will be entered during the ensuing year. Returning to Devonport Dockyard, the store-houses were inspected, and then a visit was paid to the ships building, which are the Hyacinthe and the Heroine, two composite sloops of eight guns and 1,420 tons displacement. These vessels were commenced on August 30. After lunching with the Admiral Superintendent, their Lordships spent the remainder of the day in inspecting the estimates. These are of the ordinary character, and do not include works of any special feature.

On Wednesday morning, their Lordships visited the Royal Adelaide, the Impregnable and Implacable, and the Northumberland, which has just undergone repairs and refit, previous to taking part in the cruise of the Channel Squadron. Their Lordships then proceeded to the drill-ground of the men of the gunnery-ship Cambridge, about 600 of whom executed a number of field movements. In the afternoon their Lordships visited the dockyard, Female Orphan Asylum, the Royal British Female Orphan Asylum, and the Royal Albert Hospital.

On Thursday the Lords of the Admiralty resumed their inspection. The Marine Barracks, Stonehouse, were first visited. Their Lordships were received there by Col.-Commandant Heastey and Major-Gen. C. W. Adair, C.B., Deputy-Adjt.-Gen., who has recently arrived on an official visit from the Admiralty. The men turned out on parade shortly before the arrival of their Lordships, the battalion being under the command of Lieut.-Col. G. Mairis and Lieut.-Col. J. F. Sanders. The Marines, numbering 600 men, formed line and received their Lordships with a general salute. The battalion was then inspected, the men afterwards forming open column, and marching past in quick time. They subsequently re-formed into line, retired, and then advanced in line in review order, ending with a general salute. Their Lordships next inspected the various departments, afterwards proceeding to the shed at Longroom, where they inspected the heavy gun-drill, under the superintendence of Capt. J. T. Morris. The course of instruction, it was explained to their Lordships, occupied 42 days of five hours a day, and about 700 men go through the drill annually. It comprises heavy truck and revolving gun drill, instruction in ammunition, including rockets, signal lights, fuzes, charges, &c., also knotting and splicing, slinging hammock, and other practice, thus giving the Marine a fair knowledge of the duties required of him on board ship. The battery contains seven guns, four being mounted on slides, while the remainder are old truck guns, now nearly obsolete. Seventy men were engaged at the four heavy guns, Capt. Morris having charge of the revolving gun in the bow. Their Lordships appeared to take the greatest interest in the drill. The men were put through their exercises, and fired independently at the targets. The revolving gun was shifted to the opposite bow, Lord John Hay timing it, and at the finish expressing, as also did the First Lord, his complete satisfaction. So highly pleased with the practice was the Earl of Northbrook, that he promised Capt. Morris to fully consider certain suggestions; and, if necessary, to carry them out. The practice yesterday would also have this effect—it would dispel the idea which has got abroad that the Royal Marine Light Infantry were not taught gunnery practice, and that only Marine Artillery were so instructed. The former have been taught gunnery for the last 20 or 30 years. Efforts have for some time past been made to get the men an extra 1d. a day, in addition to their present pay. Their Lordships afterwards went on board the Agincourt and inspected the ship, and the training ships sailed round the Agincourt while their Lordships were on board. Their Lordships left at 3 p.m. in the Enchantress for Falmouth.

The trial of a new kind of life-buoy and of an invention for helm-signalling will take place on the Minotaur, Captain Rawson, flagship of Vice-Admiral Hood, C.B., during her forthcoming cruise.

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.—ITS UNEQUALLED EFFICACY IN DISEASES OF THE THROAT.—Sir G. Duncan Gibb, Bart., M.D., LL.D., Physician and Lecturer on Forensic Medicine, Westminster Hospital, author of various works on Diseases of the Throat and Larynx, writes:—"The experience of many years has abundantly proved the truth of every word said in favour of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil by many of our first Physicians and Chemists, thus stamping him as a high authority and an able Chemist whose investigations have remained unquestioned. Its value, therefore, as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails. Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil has an agreeable flavour, is very palatable, and liked by children; hence its value in the third stage of Hooping-Cough, when it acts as a restorative and tonic.' Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s; with his stamp and signature and the signature of his sole consignees on the capsule, and the label under wrapper, by all chemists. Sole Consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77 Strand, London.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AMERICA.

The Panama Star and Herald of the 23rd ult. publishes letters from its special correspondent—one from Lima, dated Sept. 6, and the other from Chimbote, dated Sept. 11. In the former the writer says:—"At last the Chilians seem to have roused themselves from their lethargy. On Monday, Aug. 30, the Angamos, anxious to keep up her character as possessing the gun of longest range, slowly detached herself from the blockading squadron and approached within five miles of the docks. Then, taking up her position, she fired six shots at the Union, clearly with the intention of getting her range, for after the six shots she retired to her old anchorage at San Lorenzo. On the following day she again steamed up and fired about 25 shots, all of which were also aimed at the Union, but without effect. A few fell on land, but the damage done to the city was of no account. On Wednesday she again returned to the charge, commencing earlier in the morning and booming away at intervals of about five minutes until she managed to hit the much-desired mark. One shell passed through the waterway of the Union into the water, causing very little damage; but another came later in the evening, and, just creeping over the edge of the sandbags, dropped on her deck, and, bursting, ripped it up for some distance, one fragment of the shell entering the boiler on the port side. The damage done can be repaired in about three days, unless the warmth of the enemy's fire should render it impossible to work on board. Satisfied with her day's work, the Angamos rested all day on Thursday, Sept. 2, but on Friday she was again early at work at the same distance from the dock, and quite out of reach of the guns from the shore. Wisely, as I think, the Peruvians did not waste powder and shot on the enemy beyond their reach, and the forts remained sullenly silent, only watching the direction of shell after shell as they fell harmlessly in the water or on shore. In the course of this day's fighting the Peruvians sent out three little launches, probably with the intention of enticing the Angamos within reach of the batteries, but all to no purpose; for the further these launches went out, firing their little guns, the further the Angamos retired, unwilling to close even with them, fearing, most likely, a torpedo. But the Angamos managed to hit the launch Lima just at the close of the day, and, as she began to leak considerally, she and her companions ran for the friendly shelter of the dock, and reached it. Just, however, as all seemed safe, and the launch was made fast, one more shell came in, a sort of parting shot, and, taking off the head of a man on board the transport Oroya, dropped into the Lima, and, bursting, sent her to the bottom, killing two men at the same time. Since then, all has remained quiet; but it is not improbable that this bombarding with one gun will go on indefinitely, or until the Union is destroyed. H.M.S. Penguin sailed from Chorrillos on the 30th ult., for Chimbote, and returned again yesterday. After speaking the Blanco Encalada, and while steaming across the bay to her anchorage among the neutral vessels, a shot was fired at her from shore. It fell short. H.M.S. Thetis will leave for Chimbote on the 15th inst., to meet the mails from Europe."

From the letter from Chimbote of Sept. 11 we take the following statement of the occupation of Chimbote by the Chilians:—"The quietly busy and land-locked bay of Chimbote was put into quite a flutter of excitement on the 9th inst. by the entrance of the Chilian ship O'Higgins in the afternoon. Steaming quietly in with no flag flying, there were those who hoped she might be an English vessel, because her funnel was yellow. Arrived at the centre of the bay, she fired a gun and at once ran up her colours, proving to all that the enemy was in our midst. Three boats were quickly lowered and manned with armed men, the object being to examine all the Pacific Company's steamers lying there, and especially the manifests. This accomplished, with an assurance that this visit was not to notify a blockade, the O'Higgins went to sea again, and we all went to bed, not without some suspicion that we should see her again the next morning, when the steamship Bolivia was due from Panama. At about six o'clock yesterday morning we were advised that not one vessel only, but three, were entering the bay, and they soon proved to be the Chacabuco, escorting the steam transports Itata and Copiapo, the two latter being crowded with troops. Their first act was to lower a number of boats, which scoured the bay in every direction, with the object of requisitioning every steam-tug and every launch on which they could lay their hands, without so much as 'by your leave' to the manager of the Pacific Company or any of his subordinates. Enough launches and tugs were quickly procured, and the work of landing troops went on from seven o'clock to about eleven, when some 3,000 were on shore. The remainder of the day was spent in sending horses ashore, of which they have, perhaps, 200. As there was not a single Peruvian soldier in the place, there was, of course, no opposition offered, and the invading forces landed and at once took possession of the railway buildings, which they occupy as barracks until they move in obedience to some predetermined plan. The invading force is under the command of Señor Don Pat Lynch, who has been for some time in Iquique, and comes here with a good character from foreigners as an officer and a gentleman. In the meantime, Chimbote is nearly deserted; the Peruvians fled to the mountains at once, and the wives and children of foreigners took refuge on board the neutral vessels in the bay. The soldiers, so far, are strictly confined to the cuartel, except such as are employed in shipping sugar. The Itata has not landed all her men; it is supposed she will proceed to another port. There are rumours that Payta is also in the hands of the Chilians."

An anti-fouling composition invented by M. Gustav Schutze is to be practically tested at Portsmouth Dockyard, and will be used on the bottom of one of the harbour ships.

LIEUTENANT SCHWATKA'S ARCTIC JOURNEY.

In a letter to the Times on the journey lately made by Lieut. Schwatka and his companions to King William's Land, the scene of the sad fate of Sir John Franklin's expedition, Admiral Sir George Richards says this remarkable journey stands unrivalled in the annals of Arctic, or, indeed, of any other enterprise of modern times, and one scarcely knows which to admire most—the boldness and audacity of its conception, or the unswerving devotion and perseverance which brought it to a successful conclusion. With regard to the assertion that Franklin's companions resorted in their last extremity to cannibalism, the Admiral says there is not one tittle of foundation for it; but that, on the contrary, there is every possible evidence against it. He fully believes that by far the greater portion of the men perished long before their provisions were consumed. The thing appears so monstrous, that he is at a loss to conceive how it can have been suggested. In connection with other questions which have been raised, Admiral Richards thinks it is not likely that any of the officers' journals would be in existence now, after being exposed to the thaw of 30 summers. As regards official documents—that is, log-books or copies of observations—they would at any time have been of comparatively little value, and he believes that Lieut. Schwatka's search in this respect may be considered final. A letter appeared not long since from an Arctic officer, who announced the sudden discovery he had made that Franklin's crew perished entirely in consequence of the bad quality of Goldner's preserved meats, which formed a portion of their provisions. The reply is, that if such an improbable thing had happened as the staple commodity of food turning out unfit for consumption, it is certain that it would have been discovered before the summer of 1846, when the Erebus and Terror recrossed Barrow Strait, from having wintered in the Wellington Channel. They had open water to take them to the south-west on the prosecution of their voyage; therefore, of course, they must have had open water to return to England—in the improbable event above mentioned. Any further remark on such a startling theory would be a waste of space.

Reviews.

Tabular Arrangement of Extended-Order Drill: being Detailed Examples of the Attack Formation; showing the Orders Issued by All Ranks, from the Battalion Commander to the Guides and Markers. By Serjt.-Major Evan Peregrine, 8th Lancashire Rifle Volunteers. (W. S. Barlow, Bury.)—This is a most useful and concise work, showing at once all that has to be done by every officer and non-commissioned officer of a battalion in extended order, and Serjt.-Major Peregrine is to be congratulated upon the simple arrangement of so complicated a subject. It is admitted that the great fault of the present "attack system" is its complication. The author of this little book has succeeded in classifying the whole of the words of command in such a manner as to render it perfectly clear what each officer and serjeant has to do. The book should be in the hands of every officer and non-commissioned officer, for it is by far the best manual of the kind we have seen.

Illustrated Biographies of the Great Artists. (Sampson Low and Co.)—Two additions to this most interesting series have been recently published by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. The subjects are Michel Angelo and Horace Vernet, the former contributed by M. C. Clement, the latter by J. Rutz Rees. Each is a valuable addition to the series.

Records of the 90th Regiment. By Alexander Delavoye. (Richardson and Son.)—This handsome volume records the services of a gallant regiment, the 90th (Perthshire) Light Infantry, from its formation to the present time. It is a gratifying record, and, no doubt, will be thoroughly appreciated by the regiment.

Our People.—We have received specimens of a work which will shortly be issued by Messrs. Bradbury, Agnew, and Co. It is no doubt intended to immortalise Mr. Punch, if he be not immortal already. This will be effected by the aid of Mr. Charles Keene, who will sketch at least 400 of the best "situations" to be met with in the pages of the wise and kindly critic, Mr. Punch; and also by the public, who will, no doubt, flock to obtain a copy of such an interesting work, "luxuriously printed on fine paper, in red and black, super-royal quarto, price 31s. 6d."

Horses and Roads. By "Free Lance." (Longman and Co.)—The writer of this little book undertakes the im portant and difficult task of showing how to keep a horse sound on his legs. It may be that if Isonomy, Chippendale, Dresden China, and some other of the cracks entered for the Cesarewitch had been under the care of the author, they would have lowered the colours of Robert the Devil. As it is, "Free Lance" has written a very useful treatise on "the horse," with the object of showing that lameness, which is so prevalent among animals of high as well as low degree, can, with care and attention, be obviated. The author is not a vendor of nostrums, but wishes to instruct the public in adopting certain principles when treating horses, which will prove the correctness of his theories. It is a book to be strongly recommended.

The Student's Manual. By Dr. Klein. (Civil Service Printing Company.)—This Manual contains much useful information regarding the history, laws, and Constitution of England, from the Roman period to the present time. The author's object is to save much labour to students preparing for examination, by compiling for their guidance leading historic facts in the shortest possible space. The merits of this useful Manual are not likely to remain unrecognised for any lengthened period, when it is remembered that the book is the product of a long and successful experience in training candidates for the higher branches of the Civil Service and University examinations.

Obituary.

Gen. J. K. Luard, C.B., Madras Army, died at 29 Gloucester Place, W., on the 18th inst. He entered the Indian Army in 1819, and was promoted to a lieutenancy in the same year; he became capt. in 1825, major in 1836, lieut.-col. in 1841, and col. in 1851. He served with the expedition to Ava in 1824, and was present at the capture of Arracan, and was wounded in the attack of the heights there, for which he received the medal. He also served with the Kurnool Field Force in 1839, and took part in the China expedition from June, 1842, down to the suspension of hostilities in the September following. He was present at the capture of Woosung and Shanghai, and served with the Central Brigade under Major-Gen. Schoedde at the storming and capture of Chin-kiang-foo, for which service also he had received the medal. He became major-gen. in 1854, was promoted to lieut.-gen. in 1865, and to gen. in 1870. He was nominated a C.B. in 1842.

Lady Gore, widow of Gen. Hon. Sir Charles Gore, G.C.B., K.H., sixth son of the second Earl of Arran, died on Sunday in Hampton Court Palace, aged 77. Lady Gore was daughter of the Hon. J. Fraser, Legislative Councillor of Nova Scotia, and married, May 13, 1824, Gen. Hon. Sir C. Gore, who died in Sept. 1869, by whom she leaves surviving issue three sons and two daughters, viz., Major J. A. C. Gore, Major C. C. Gore, 83rd Foot; and Capt. F. A. Gore, 84th Regt.; Eliza, Countess of Erroll, and Adelaide Rachel, married to Major-Gen. G. W. Talbot Rich.

Com. Aaron Stark Symes, R.N., died at St. Aubyn's, Ballybrack, Dublin, on the 7th inst., in his 89th year. This gallant and distinguished officer entered the Navy, Dec. 7, 1808, on board the Pheasant, and was employed on the Channel, West India, and Newfoundland stations until Nov. 1815. He was officially mentioned and severely wounded when midshipman of the Hebrus, in command of a rocket-boat at Algiers, and as a reward for his conduct was made lieut., Sept. 16, 1816. He was employed in the packet service at Liverpool from May, 1845, until May, 1850, and became commander on the Reserved List Feb. 6, 1857. He was granted a pension for wounds Dec. 8, 1817, and was awarded a Naval pension of £50 a year Oct. 29, 1867.

Com. Thomas R. Frampton, R.N., died at 46 Pulteney Street, Bath, on the 15th inst., aged 80. He entered the Navy, Oct. 18, 1812, on board the Barfleur, Capt. Sir Edward Berry, stationed in the Mediterranean, and subsequently successively served in the Prince of Wales, Capt. J. E. Douglas; Bombay, Capt. H. Bazely; and Minden, Capt. W. Paterson. After participating in the latter ship, in the battle of Algiers, Aug. 27, 1816, he sailed for India with the flag of Sir Richard King, and there removed in Feb. 1819 into the Magicienne. He afterwards served for some time with Sir Thomas Masterman Hardy in the Superb and Creole, on the South American station, where he was confirmed to a lieutenancy, May 31, 1822, in the Beaver, Capts. A. Maclean and T. Bourchier. He removed, on Dec. 18 in the latter year, to the Doris, Capt. F. E. Venables Vernon, but invalided home in Aug. 1823. He became retired commander, July 1, 1864, and on Jan. 23, 1876, was promoted under Order in Council of 1816.

Paymaster Bernard Trant Colley died at Bishop's Canning, Devizes, suddenly, of heart-disease, on the 13th inst. He served as clerk in the Bittern, Com. E. N. Vansittart, in the East Indies, from Sept. 1852 until Feb. 1854, when he was transferred as secretary's clerk to Rear-Admiral Sir James Stirling, and was promoted to paymaster Nov. 5, 1855. He afterwards served in the Cordelia, on the Australian station, from June, 1858, until paid off, in May, 1862, and in the Vigilant, with the Channel Squadron, from Aug. until Nov. 1862. He subsequently served in the Lily, on the North-America and West Indies station, from Nov. 1862 until paid off, in Nov. 1866; in the Pylades, Capt. A. C. Strode, on the south-east coast of America, from July, 1871, until July, 1872; and was additional of the Warrior, at Portland, for service on shore, from April, 1873, until July, 1876. From Feb. 1877 until Oct. 1879 he was borne on the books of the Flora, for service at Ascension.

Our Woolwich correspondent, writing last night, says:—"The Heavy-Gun Committee are engaged in some novel and interesting experiments at Shoeburyness. It is assumed that in case of invasion, the forts which defend the harbours, rivers, and seaboard generally will be left in charge of the Artillery, Militia, and Volunteers, with a few men of the Royal Artillery skilled in gunnery and garrison duties. On this assumption, it was considered advisable to devote a few days to ascertaining, by a series of practical trials, how far the methods of loading adopted and proposed to be adopted in these forts would suit an arrangement in which the loading of the guns would be mainly left to imperfectly-trained men, even under the most trying circumstances. The programme laid down embraced, consequently, not only practice at loading and firing during the daytime, using alternately the steam-loading gear and the older system of hand-loading, but also practice at night, in comparative darkness. It is obvious that while engaging an enemy the forts will display no more light than is absolutely necessary, and in these experiments the gun detachments, who have been purposely selected from young Artillerymen just commencing drill, have been furnished with only one or two lanterns, the light from which can scarcely be said to illumine so large and sombre an article as a 38-ton 'infant' in a close casemate. Although the results of the experiments are not yet complete, it has been found that, at least with the steam-loading apparatus, the loading of the guns proceeds regularly under the eye of one competent gunner, irrespective of the experience and intelligence of the other men forming the detachment, and this by night as well as day. Practice has also been gone through in drawing stores and ammunition under similar disadvantages and information has been gained on various points of future importance."

A trial of the Gramme electric light has been ordered on board the gunboat Bloodhound, in making alterations and improvements, on which an expenditure of £900 has been sanctioned by the Admiralty. She is attached to the Vernon as tender.—Portsmouth Times.

Messrs. White, of Cowes, have received Admiralty instructions to supply for experimental use an air-cased boat.

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms, use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. Glycerine, in these agreeable confections, being in proximity to the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d. and 1s. 1½d., labelled "JAMES EPPS AND CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment), in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice. In no case can they do any harm.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES, L.R.C.P.E., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

WATCHES, JEWELLERY.—Before you buy a Watch or Jewellery send for the Midland Counties' Watch Company's Catalogue, beautifully illustrated with over 200 copper-plate engravings, and sent gratis and post free, on application.—Address, S. HISSEY, Manager, Vyse Street, Birmingham. See advertisement.

The trial trip of the Don Alfonso, paddle-wheel steam vessel, built at the Thames Ironworks, Blackwall, for the South-Eastern Railway Company of Portugal, took place on Saturday last. The Don Alfonso is sister ship to the Don August, built for the same department three years ago. Her dimensions are:—Length between perpendiculars, 156 ft.; beam, 18 ft., with draft 4 ft. 6 in.; and her mean speed on the measured mile was 13¼ knots. She is fitted with oscillating surface-condensing engines of 250 horse-power, by Messrs. Young and Son, of Blackwall. After a successful trial, Mr. Hayward (the manager of the Thames Iron Company) handed over the vessel to Capt. Vaz, the representative of the Portuguese Government.

INSTEAD OF TAKING AN ORDINARY COD LIVER OIL, and attempting to disguise its flavour by all sorts of devices and mixtures, they (Allen and Hanburys) have studied anew the processes of manufacture of Cod Liver Oil, for which they have always had a great reputation; and as a result of this study, they have produced a Cod Liver Oil which is so delicate in flavour as to be free from all the usual nauseous properties of fish oil, and has almost the delicacy of salad oil.—British Medical Journal. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' Perfected Oil. Sold only in capsuled imperial quarter-pints, 1s 4d; half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade-mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

Some weeks since, during practice, a torpedo was lost from the Hercules in the Clyde, and though a reward was offered for its recovery, all efforts were unsuccessful until last week, when it was found by a diver from the Lord Warden, who picked it up near the moorings of the Hercules, at the tail of the bank.

HOT WEATHER.—How to Invigorate the Nervous System by Natural Means. Mental Prostration.—"Having suffered much from headache and mental prostration, I was induced to try ENO'S FRUIT SALT, the effects of which have been most satisfactory, resulting in invigorating my entire nervous system, and removing the frequent headache to which I was subject. You are at liberty to make any use you think proper of this testimonial, as I consider Eno's Fruit Salt an indispensable adjunct to the Household."—TRUTH, Sigdon Road, Dalston, E. Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked, "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO is the purest and most fragrant Tooth Powder ever used, and contains no acid or mineral ingredients, which are so detrimental to the teeth and gums. All who have a good set of teeth, and wish to keep them, should use it; and they who, by early neglect or ill-health, suffer from discoloured or imperfect teeth, which are the forerunners of dyspepsia and indigestion, will find that ROWLAND'S ODONTO will keep them sound and white, and prevent and arrest decay. Its purity especially adapts it for the teeth of young children. Ask any chemist for Rowland's Odonto.

ARMY and NAVY HOTEL (Limited).—Established upon the principle of Co-operation. Shareholders of five Shares and upwards will be entitled to a reduction of 10 per cent. off the hotel tariff. Capital £100,000, in 20,000 Shares of £5 each, payable £1 on application, £2 on allotment, and £2 three months after.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The want of comfortable accommodation in London, with living on an equality with that of a regimental mess and at economical rates, has always been felt by officers of the Services. This it is now intended to supply, both for temporary use and also in the style of a residential club, so that Shareholders may retain private rooms or suites of rooms with good attendance, and the use of general dining, drawing, club, smoking, and other rooms, while they may be either boarded at very moderate rates or obtain their meals as required in club fashion.

The Army and Navy Hotel is established for the purpose of these requirements, and is intended for the use of the public as well as of the Shareholders, priority being in all cases given to the latter.

Baths of every description, including salt water, will be obtainable in the hotel.

Shareholders will be allowed the use of the smoking, reading, and writing rooms, thus providing all the accommodation of a club without any annual subscription, and, whilst bachelors will find all the advantages of a mess, married officers will not miss the comforts of home.

Visitors who may wish to make the Hotel their home during their stay will be received at a fixed and very moderate tariff. It is intended to fix the tariff at as low a rate as is compatible with the declaration of a dividend, and it is confidently anticipated that board and lodging can be provided for about the same cost as is now charged by other hotels for rooms alone.

Suites of residential chambers, for bachelors as well as married people, will form a distinctive feature in the Hotel.

Application for Shares can be made in writing to the Secretary, by giving name, address, rank, or occupation, and the number of Shares required, accompanied by deposit.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—WATCHES.

The Rev. Robt. Cass, Settle, Yorkshire, writes, February 19, 1880:—"The Ladies' Gold Lever Watch received from you for 70s in size, workmanship, and beautiful appearance, resembles a watch usually sold at £10. It gives entire satisfaction."

The Rev. James Arthur Kemp, Lew Down, North Devon, also writes, March 8, 1880:—"The watch I ordered of you at 25s, for my servant, arrived quite safely, and I am exceedingly well pleased with it in every way. It is an excellent timekeeper, very neat and handsome in appearance, and in my opinion worth far more than those that cost treble the money. I do not think anybody should be without a watch, when they can obtain from you such an excellent article at so reasonable a price."

"I am very much pleased with everything I have had from your Company. The watch (25s) has proved to be an excellent one, and is a marvel of cheapness. It is fully equal to, or indeed superior to, many I have seen purchased by regimental clubs for treble the money. I am positive your Company will prove itself a boon to Army men at home and abroad, particularly the latter, who are often compelled to pay enormous prices for very inferior articles indeed. Your Company is deserving of every success, and I deem it a duty, to you and the Army, to become an amateur agent, unpaid."

THE MIDLAND COUNTIES WATCH COMPANY supply their celebrated Watches direct to wearers, at very lowest wholesale cash prices. They guarantee watches supplied by them to be most perfect timekeepers, and honestly assert their price to be under one-half those charged by watchmakers; and as a guarantee of good-faith they undertake to return the full amount paid for any Watch if not to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

The Company's chief manufacture are their celebrated Crystal Glasses, which dispense with all risk of breakage. Their LADIES' and GENTLEMEN'S SILVER WATCHES, at 25s, and their LADIES' GOLD LEVERS, at 70s, are acknowledged to be the cheapest Watches in the world.

Catalogues, containing list of testimonials, and beautifully illustrated descriptions of more expensive watches, gold and silver jewellery, electro-plate, &c., are sent gratis on application. We may safely assert that the prices in same will be a surprise to all who see them.

GENTLEMEN'S FINE SILVER, flat crystal glass, heavy cased, superior movement, 25s.

Mr. S. HISSEY, Vyse Street, Birmingham.

On receipt of which any watch will be registered post free to any part of the United Kingdom, and for 2s 6d per watch extra to any part of the postal world.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

A BRIEF HISTORY of the 13th REGIMENT in SOUTH AFRICA. By Private MCTOY, 13th Regiment.

"A Brief History of the 13th Regiment in South Africa" (Devonport: A. H. Swiss).—"This is a remarkable book. It is written by Private McToy, 1st Battalion 13th Foot, and in it there is a most reliable account of the doings of that regiment, as well as of the other regiments that were in South Africa during the Zulu and Sekukuni campaigns. Private McToy describes the march through Natal, the annexation of the Transvaal, the entry into Pretoria, the march to the north-east frontier, the expedition against Sekukuni, the battle of Tolyana, the fighting at Zlobanne, as well as other episodes of campaigning in South Africa. His book well deserves attentive perusal."—Broad Arrow, October 2, 1880.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—ALL OUR FACULTIES.—Almost all disorders of the human body are distinctly to be traced to impure blood. The purification of that fluid is the first step towards health. Holloway's Pills recommend themselves to the attention of all sufferers; no injurious consequences can result from their use, no mistake can be made in their administration. In indigestion, confirmed dyspepsia, and chronic constipation, the most beneficial effects have been, and always must be, obtained from the wholesome power exerted by these purifying Pills over the digestion. Persons whose lives have been restored to ease, strength, and perfect health, by Holloway's Pills, after fruitless trial of the whole pharmacopœia of physic, attest this fact.

AT THREE SHILLINGS a POUND, the FINEST TEA the WORLD PRODUCES is Recommended to the Public.

COOPER COOPER and CO. undertake to answer the oft-heard question,—Why is Tea so dear? and they say that it is simply because the public in this, as in other matters, Tea, are powerless to insist on having their share of the advantages which result from falling markets. as may be easily ascertained in fact, was never so cheap to buy since it was first imported into England, by a reference to the current market reports, and yet relatively the retail price was never so exorbitant. Now Cooper Cooper and Co. have resolved to rectify this discrepancy, and to this end they undertake to SELL the BEST TEAS that can be purchased at their respective prices at a small commission only on the actual prices paid to importers. This system of business is specially intended to bring the public into partnership, as it were, or at all events to enable them to become participators in the great margin of profit which lies between the wholesale and retail price of tea. COOPER COOPER and CO.'S prices will be found to be ninepence per pound less money than those usually charged for identical qualities.

POST-OFFICE ORDERS should be made payable at the General Post-office, and cheques crossed National Provincial Bank of England.

FAMILIES residing in the country can, by joining together to divide the expense of railway crrriage, save 9d a pound in the price of their TEA, by sending to COOPER COOPER and CO.; or Cooper Cooper and Co. will pay railway carriage on parcels of the value of £2 and upwards to any station in England, on receipt of 9d in addition to the cost of the tea.

AS remarks have been made in the Army and Navy Gazette and elsewhere of the slowness of General Phayre's advance and the failure of the Bombay transport, we have been asked to publish the following remarks, which may be relied upon as a statement of facts, and we do so with pleasure as an act of justice to the Bombay Government:—We must premise that the distribution of the field forces had been determined on in view of the apparent necessities of the case by the Government of India. Commanding officers "beyond the frontier," north of Sind, that is to say, reporting to them the difficulties and risks of moving troops and supplies through Beloochistan in the hot weather, had induced the Government of Bombay, who are charged with the provision of transport and supply, to send forward sufficient of the latter to last the garrisons of Candahar, Khelat-i-Ghilzai, and other distant posts until the end of October; and the dearth of forage in the country rendered it desirable that no large force of transport animals should be maintained than would suffice for ordinary movements of troops, and for the advance of any regiments that might be called up from the reserve. The Reserve Division was posted partly in the line of communication, partly in Sind, one battery Royal Artillery and a wing of the 2nd Battalion 11th Regiment at Bombay. In June, when it became evident that Ayoub Khan was seriously meditating an expedition to Candahar, General Primrose ordered up reinforcements, which necessitated the movement of two regiments of Native Infantry, some Cavalry and Artillery on the line; their replacement from regiments of the Reserve in Sind, and the despatch of troops from the Presidency to garrison Sind, instead of regiments of the Reserve, which had previously sufficed for that purpose. A regiment of British Infantry at Kurrachee belonging to the Reserve had been so sickly that the regiment from Bombay, which would have relieved it, went forward in its place. These movements were made without delay on the part of the Government. It was unfortunate that troops should have to be sent by sea during the south-west monsoon, but the damage was chiefly to officers' horses, which suffered severely. The transport along the line was ample to forward the regiments, and they reached Candahar before its investment, one on July 23, though not in time to enable General Primrose to send out a stronger force to oppose Ayoub Khan. The dates and routes of march were fixed by the Generals in the field, under the orders of the Government of India, but were dependant on the requirements of the political officers and on the state of the country along the line, which was not free from anxiety. None were delayed by insufficiency of transport. When the disaster at Maiwand and the impending investment of Candahar by a numerous enemy caused the order for the advance of General Phayre's force, a demand was made for transport on a very much larger scale. The force which General Phayre would require was immediately fixed on, and the Government requested him to inform them of the amount of transport that he would require, and of its description. He reported that he would take nothing but pack-animals, that he would require 5,000 camels, or their equivalent (i.e., 10,000 mules or 20,000 ponies), of which the Transport Department had available 2,000, and Sir R. Sandeman undertook to provide 1,000. The remainder it was impossible for Government to provide within the time available, the neighbouring countries having been drained repeatedly by previous expeditions, but the Bengal Transport Department undertook to do so, from the Punjab. As a matter of fact, they were not able to provide the whole number in time for Phayre's advance, but a sufficient number were procured locally. The movement of the troops was extremely difficult at that season (August); the heat in the plains and in the passes was frightful; the railway was constantly interrupted by floods, and the road by storms; forage for the transport animals was extremely scarce, as there had been no rain in Beloochistan for two years, and the troops had to be carried through the Bolan in carts. This had been the state of things from the first call for reinforcements; great care had to be taken that no stoppage should occur in the desert or pass. The railways in Sind, though invaluable, were quite unequal in carrying to the demand upon them, and could do little more than carry the troops. When no interruption occurred, about six trains a day was the average, and sometimes only six waggons a day could be given to the Commissariat. It would have been in the highest degree rash, and it was quite unnecessary for General Phayre to hurry up with a handful of troops for the relief of Candahar. The country down to Sind was disturbed by the invasion of Candahar. The tribes were everywhere rising, and if it had been in the opinion of the political officers undesirable to move up regiments from the line of communication in June or July until they could be relieved, it would have been almost desperate in August, when what was apprehended had taken place. General Phayre had, (1), to take up an adequate force to deal with Ayoub Khan, in co-operation with General Primrose; (2), to defeat any force that might oppose his advance; (3), to guard his flanks and his baggage-train. But he had a great deal more to think about,—he had to guard the line of communication from Sibi to Candahar; to have a sufficient force for the protection of our posts in the Pishin Valley, Quetta, &c.; and above all, he had to provide for the large forces about to converge on Candahar. The calculation of transport abovementioned had reference solely to the relieving columns; but before his preparations had far advanced, the Bombay Government and he had received orders to supply the force of Sir F. Roberts on their arrival at Candahar with everything they would require. including shoes and warm clothing. There had been no need for haste, because the garrison of Candahar was in no distress,—that is, for such haste as Havelock used in relieving Lucknow; but when it was known that Khelat-i-Ghilzai also was in no danger, and that General Phayre had to provide for a large force —estimated to amount to 67,000 souls—it was evident that the safety of his convoys was of even more importance than the expedition of his troops. His plan of advance, which was very careful and definite, was to move on a certain day, carrying ten days' provisions, but otherwise very light, with two brigades on Candahar; while a third should follow, guarding a large convoy, two days later. By that time sufficient troops would be posted along the line, as far north as the Kojuck Pass, to ensure the safety of the line; but up to the last day, he was obliged to send parties to drive back the tribes which had risen. He advanced on the day previously arranged, despite of all difficulties, having even anticipated it by pushing on first small, then increased detachments, clearing away all obstacles and dispersing the tribes, so that as soon as the main body came to move, the road was cleared for several marches, and supplies beginning to come in. He arrived in the neighbourhood of Candahar precisely on the day named by him, September 6. His self-abnegation in not rushing in to snatch a triumph, which could only have created subsequent difficulties, was as creditable to him as his active and comprehensive preparations. If fault there was, it was in trusting South Afghanistan and its communications to so limited a force, until the country generally was settled. This could not be hurriedly repaired, and it was indeed a pity that it was necessary to send reinforcements at a season when their progress entailed much suffering and loss of life. Had the Military charge of that region been entrusted to the Bombay Government, they might have realised the need of a greater force, and they would have been responsible. As it is, they were fully aware of the impossibility of relieving Candahar speedily from their base, and within a day of the receipt of the news of the disaster pointed out to the Government of India that speedy relief must come from Cabul, while it was in the highest degree important that any sympathetic movement on that side should be repressed. But for Roberts's advance, the situation would necessarily have become more serious. Of course, the estimated provision of transport was enormously raised upon the receipt of the news of that advance, and at present the Bombay Government have to provide not only for the supply of Candahar, but for the Bengal Brigades successively marching down through Beloochistan, with the Bclan road so destroyed by floods that no wheeled vehicle can pass it. This has necessitated the purchase of animals and manufacture of carts on a large scale, and the engagement of every man that could be got,—a matter of great difficulty, as events had caused a panic amongst the classes from whom followers are procured, such numbers during several years having gone to the front and never returned. Roberts's march was in the highest degree creditable and glorious, but it was possible as soon as it was ordered, because he had the pick of a great and complete force, and had nothing to do with what he left behind him. Phayre's was only possible after collecting the indispensable materials and providing for the vital securities of his communications, while a rapid and desperate advance to the relief of Candahar was unnecessary The question affecting the composition of the Army, a portion of which has met with a disaster, is too large to be discussed in a concluding paragraph. But, it may be remarked, that the circumstances of the action made extraordinary demands upon the steadiness of the troops, that the regiment which gave way is considered somewhat of inferior material to the rest. It is maintained on the "Silladar" system, its original composition of frontier tribesmen has been largely leavened by the Kan Kan recruits. There were many young soldiers, some of whom had not completed their musketry course, and it had been broken up in detachments for two years before being sent up; and. at its inspection, though the physique of the men was good, it did not appear steady on parade. It is said, moreover, that in the two companies which gave way, every European and native officer had been killed or disabled previously in the action. In a regiment so composed, a large number of European officers would appear necessary to ensure steadiness under trying circumstances, and it is no new thing to declare that the irregular system of officering regiments, recruited as are the ordinary sepoys, is unsuitable and dangerous. Moreover, the vice of the Staff Corps system in providing officers unknown to the men, was strongly illustrated in this regiment, five out of the nine officers having joined within nine months before the action,—one of them being already lent to another regiment, and one of the older officers to another. With suitable management, the Bombay sepoy is a trustworthy soldier who will not fail in time of need.

M. Amédée le Faure has contributed a most suggestive paper to the Nouvelle Revue upon "Military Initiative." While admitting that the idea of one supreme Commander of an army was attended by happy results in France up to the end of the eighteenth century, for the simple reason that it was then a reality, and responded to the tactical necessities of the time, the writer contends that it is an anachronism, and altogether futile, in face of the large armies and extensive battle-fields of the present day. The theory of a "saviour," he says, has been abandoned in French politics, but has been maintained in military matters, and it has triumphed all the more easily because it has favoured every degree of mediocrity and encouraged idleness. The modern system of the Germans, on the contrary, may be summed up in the two words,—"initiative" and "responsibility," the latter serving as a corrective of the former. The Germans prepare their troops for war by developing the sentiment of the initiative in time of peace, but the French continue to teach the idea of a supreme command, and place the sole responsibility upon the Commander-in-Chief of the Army. The result of the two systems was seen in the decisive engagements of the Franco-German War. Take, says M. le Faure, the battle of Wörth. That battle was fought on August 6. The formal orders of the Prince Royal of Prussia were that the German troops should not accept battle that day; but General von Kirchbach, commanding the 5th Prussian Corps, finding himself greatly pressed, decided, upon his own responsibility, to engage his forces, and, equally upon their own responsibility, General von Bose, commanding the 11th Corps, and General von Hartmann, commanding the 2nd Bavarian Corps, agreed to act upon the French flanks. The battle was maintained for some hours, although the Prince Royal renewed his instructions to the commanding officers in writing; and at one o'clock the Prince arrived, and personally assumed the direction of operations. The results of the German General taking the initiative were that the battle of Wörth was lost by the French, the Vosges were abandoned, the retreat upon Châlons was accomplished in frightful disorder, the Saverne Tunnel was given up, the enemy penetrated into the country, and stupefied France learnt that its armies had been beaten. What passed in the French camp on the day of this battle? General de Failly, commanding the 5th Division at Bitche, received a despatch from Marshal MacMahon, who was at Wörth, ordering him to send a division as soon as possible, and to "hold the others ready to march." The battle began before it was expected; MacMahon was sharply attacked, but although trains were in readiness to take De Failly close to the battle-field, he said he could not leave the unprotected point he occupied without orders from the Marshal, and no orders had been sent to him. Thus, initiative on the one side led to victory; and passiveness on the other to defeat, invasion, and rout. On the same day, Lieutenant-General von Kameke, who commanded the fourteenth division of Prussian infantry, received reports of the march in retreat of Froissard's corps; and although he was aware that General Steinmetz by no means intended to attack the strong position occupied by the French before Saarbrück, he immediately, of his own motion, without losing precious time in asking for instructions, marched all his troops towards that place. He attacked the French, knowing that he would not be abandoned; and it is clear, from the work written by the Prince Royal, that not only the corps d'armée, the divisions—the great strategic unities—but also the smallest tactical unities, such as companies and batteries, rallied without orders, on their own initiative, upon the battle-field of Spickeren. It is only too apparent, observes M. le Faure, that the French army lacked initiative on this fatal day. At ten in the morning, when the first shot was fired, the situation was singularly perilous for the Germans. Von Kameke, with his division of 10,000 men, attacked the 2nd French corps d'armée, consisting of 26,000 men, posted upon the heights of Spickeren, and especially upon the Epéron. Within a radius of 45 kilomètres about 30,000 Germans might hear the cannon, but at a distance of 16 kilomètres—Sarreguemines, Puttelange, and Saint-Avold—40,000 Frenchmen could not help hearing it. The history of this battle of Forbach, says the writer, is simple. All the Germans came to the spot, but from ten in the morning till half-past nine at night not a single Frenchman arrived,—a want of initiative which M. le Faure allows Generals Montaudon, De Castagny, and Metmann to explain, by quoting the evidence they gave at Trianon. The French army having lost two battles upon its two wings, the situation was compromised. Marshal MacMahon had retired upon Châlons. The Emperor decided to reach Verdun, leaving the fortress of Metz in a position to offer resistance to the enemy. Marshal Bazaine replaced Marshal le Bœuf, Major-General, at the head of the Army. In these conditions it was important to leave the city as quickly as possible. To the north, the first German army, under the orders of General Steinmetz, had followed the French step by step; and the second army, under Prince Frederick Charles, was moving up towards Pont-à-Mousson, to bar the road against them. Rapidity of movement in the French could alone checkmate the projects of the enemy. It was necessary to use every road, to force the march, and to blow up the bridges which would enable Steinmetz's Prussians to cross the Moselle. But the French army, faithful to its doctrine of passiveness, lost precious time through want of initiative. The Commandant of the Engineers—irresponsible—made imperfect arrangements for the French army crossing the river. The officers of corps—irresponsible—took all their troops upon a single road, and the result was the most fearful disorder and confusion. The soldiers came to a dead stop. The ammunition waggons, the artillery, and the carriages were entangled together, and choked the road to such an extent that the army only advanced a few kilomètres in thirty hours. One General alone, De Ladmirault, displayed, for an hour, the sentiment of responsibility. He left the road which was traced for him, and this inspiration enabled him to arrive upon the battlefield of Rézonville, where he might have saved France, if the sentiment of passiveness had not resumed possession of him, and if he had not, at the very moment when the Prussians were lost, stopped, and invoked that fatal excuse in the French Army, "No orders." There was one last thing that might have saved France, and that was to prevent the junction of the two armies of Steinmetz and Prince Charles. The first German army had to cross the Moselle, at a point where it was very wide. The inhabitants of Novéant understood that upon their initiative depended, perhaps, the salvation of France. They sent despatch after despatch to the Staff Major-General, but the officers of that Staff Major—irresponsible—did not even read these important messages. All of these declared, at the Trianon inquiry, that they paid no regard to the matter. While the French army was thus losing precious time, the first German army, which had followed them from Forbach, was at the gates of Metz. On August 14, General Froissard, with the 2nd Corps, left the fortress, and the Prussian General, De Goltz, commanding the advanced guard of the 7th Corps, knowing that it was important, above everything, to retard the march, flung himself with all his troops upon the French army at Borny, although the formal and precise orders of the King of Prussia were not to give battle that day. As at Wörth and Forbach, when the action was once begun all the German troops flocked, of themselves, to the field; while, on the side of the French, incertitude again prevailed everywhere. The Commander-in-Chief was under orders to leave Metz, and he was unequal to acting according to events. He neither thought of delaying the march, nor of engaging in a general action. His lieutenants behaved in the same manner, and so time was lost, and the victory was not so complete for the French arms as it might have been. However, the retreat of the French army upon Verdun was continued. At Rézonville, Generals Goltz and Avensleben, taking the initiative upon themselves, again attacked the French; and although the German losses were considerable, and the French maintained possession of the field, the engagement, as Goltz and Avensleben hoped and intended, arrested the French retreat, and enabled Prince Frederick Charles and General Steinmetz to enter into line for an early and decisive rencontre. Certainly, the German losses were very severe, and if General Ladmirault had only pushed on, leaving the exhausted enemy with the Moselle behind them, everything might have been saved. But the chief of the 4th Corps arrested his movement, remained where he was, and allowed the enemy to retire in peace. He had no orders! On the 18th, at St. Privat, the most murderous battle of the century, where the 2nd and 3rd French corps fought so gallantly and well, General Bourbaki commanding the Guard, whom Bazaine had left free to do as he liked, might have operated either at the centre or upon the French left wing, and might have cut the Prussian line and compromised the very existence of the German Army. But the Guard remained immovable, General Bourbaki only interpreting his liberty of action, according to his evidence at Trianon, in "a very relative sense." After St. Privat, says M. le Faure, the French Army was thrown back upon Metz, and treason was added to incapacity and inertia, to lose France. Why, the writer asks, was there the contrast which he thus exposes between the acts of the contending armies? The French soldier is more active more enterprising, more alert than the German. The French character is more impulsive than the German. But the French did not budge. It was the heavier German who acted. This was not the effect of chance, but of system,—a methodical system on the part of the Germans, a half-instinctive system on the part of the French. The same effects were apparent in the war in Italy in 1859, and the celebrated quarrel between Marshal Niel and Marshal Canrobert brought out the fact that there was in the French Army an organic vice which it was necessary to expose and get rid of. When armies were small and fields of battle contracted, the writer repeats, in conclusion, supreme command by one individual had its raison d'être. The army was a machine, set in motion by a single will. The system was dangerous, since it always presumed a man of genius at the head of the Army, but it was possible. Now-a-days, however, with our gigantic armies, everything is changed. It is physically impossible even for a genius to foresee events, or make his determinations known, with an army of from 150,000 to 200,000, men spread over a considerable tract of country. In a word, strategy has yielded to tactics. In war now-a-days, action is the fundamental law. The limit imposed upon this initiative is the direction given by the Commander-in-Chief,—the aim and object which he has made known. Its sanction is responsibility,—that effective and individual responsibility which requires that all who fail in, or imperfectly fulfil, their duty, shall render account of their conduct, and, if necessary, be punished for it. In fact, the word "responsibility" presupposes two limitations,—viz., reward for those who act well, and punishment for those who act ill. The first condition can only be fulfilled by a good system of promotion. To satisfy the second, the French Code of Military Justice needs reforming. Then, and then only, M. le Faure declares, can the French hope to find in their Army the force of initiative which is the basis of all success, and the cause of all victories.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh proceeded to Ramsgate on Tuesday to inspect the Coastguard of that district, and has since visited Dover.

The appointment of Superintendent of Ports at Malta has become vacant by the death, after a short illness, of Retired Commander Hastings De Robeck. A large number of candidates for the appointment are already in the field.

Although it is reported that the Charybdis is to be handed over to the Government of Canada for service as a training-ship, the Admiralty have not looked with favour upon a proposal to enter boys belonging to British-Canadian families on board ships of the Pacific Squadron. Rear-Admiral Stirling suggested that by a careful selection of likely youths, much might be done to keep the complements of ships on that distant station up to their strength, without the necessity for sending out drafts so frequently from England. But their Lordships are so wedded to the present system of home-training, which has certainly given the Navy an excellent class of boy, that they are loth to try any experiments in the direction of direct entry from the shore. We hope that ere long Canada will be able to give the Service some trained boys from a Government training-ship.

Captain Morgan Singer, of the Hecla, has inquired fully into the requirements of the new torpedo depôt established at Malta, and his suggestions are being carried out in a manner that will make the depôt valuable as a place of instruction in torpedo warfare, as well as an addition to the strength of the defence of the station.

The three new composite gunboats, of four guns and 455 tons, of the Espoir class, which have been ordered to be built, will be named the Raven, Starling, and Stork. They will be engined by Messrs. Rennie.

The number of guns of the new breech-loading type which are now required to be taken in hand, so as to be ready for ships approaching completion, is, we hear, fourteen. They will be 43-ton 6-in. guns.

In consequence of reported outrages by foreign fishermen upon English boats off Lowestoft and Yarmouth, the Admiralty has given orders for the Coast-guard cruisers Hawk and Flora to be stationed in the neighbourhood of these places, so as to afford protection to our fishermen.

Mr. Charles M'Crea, acting sub-lieutenant, studying at the Royal Naval College, is, we hear, to be discharged from her Majesty's Service on account of ill-health. This officer's seniority as acting sub-lieutenant is January, 1880, and on passing for the rank of lieutenant he took a first-class for seamanship. Absolute "discharge" on reaching commissioned officer's rank, after promising so well, does appear to be extremely hard, for it sends him back into civil life with both health and prospects gone.

By the recent launch of the Natter at Bremen, Germany has now ten of the twelve armoured gun-vessels which have been ordered to be built for her Navy. These vessels have a displacement of about 1,000 tons, and carry one 12-inch Krupp gun mounted en barbette, and are fitted with ram bows.

Another second-class ram of the coast-defence type has been added to the French Navy by the launch of the Tonnant at Rochefort. She is a vessel of 4,452 tons displacement, with engines of 1,500 indicated horse-power, and carries two 12-inch guns mounted in a turret. The greatest thickness of her plates is 13 inches. France has now nine coast-defence rams.

Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., intended to leave Rangoon on the 28th inst., in the Euryalus, for Port Blair, leaving that place on November 2, after three days' stay, for Trincomalee, where he would remain from November 8 to 11, proceeding thence to Bombay, where he will be due on November 18.

The Marine Battalion in Ireland has almost shown that the attendance of a troop-ship upon it is a necessity, for it is constantly found that men serving in Ireland are required at their respective head-quarters for embarkation.. The Assistance, on her return to England, will be required to make another trip to Queenstown to bring back a few Marines for embarkation, and it naturally occurs to one to ask whether it would not have been better to have left behind every man who was likely to be needed for service afloat at an early date, or whether service in Ireland might not count as sea service, seeing how many of the men may be said to be embarked" on small islands.

According to letters from Hong Kong, dated September 18, the Iron Duke was then in dock; the Magpie was surveying Hainan Straits; the Moorhen was to leave for Singapore, to relieve the Vestal; the Sheldrake was at Foochow, and the Swinger at Amoy.

Commodore Richards, C.B., arrived at Durban in the Boadicea on September 28, and was to be at Knysna on the 14th inst., and would proceed on a tour of visits to the ports on the coast.

Rear-Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam arrived at Vigo in the Inconstant on Tuesday, and intends to sail for Madeira to-morrow with the Bacchante, Carysfort, and Cleopatra. The Tourmaline has been detained at Devonport by a machinery defect and stress of weather, but will make the best of her way to join the Detached Squadron as soon as possible. The next mail for the squadron will leave London on the 8th November, when letters should be addressed to St. Vincent, viâ Southampton. In another column will be found a complete mail list up to June next, which will, of course, be liable to modifications.

The Lieutenant's Naval Pension of £50 a year, which was granted to Commander Aaron Symes in October, 1867, and which fell vacant by the death of that officer, has been awarded to Retired Commander John H. Woolward.

The recent retirement of Lieutenant Percy Raitt, R.N., was at his own request, and that of Paymaster Hyde on account of ill-health rendering him unfit to take up an appointment.

The almost exceptional number of eleven assistant-paymasters have gained a step in rank during the present year, but the fact that there remain fourteen on the List, with seniority of 1866, shows in how lamentable a condition is the state of this List.

The only veteran Naval officer now alive to commemorate, on Thursday next, the seventy-fifth anniversary of the capture by Sir Richard Strachan's squadron of the four sail of French line-of-battle ships off Ferrol, which had escaped from the battle of Trafalgar, is Commander Robert Amyett Newman, on the Retired List, who entered the Navy in 1801, and previous to the above action assisted, while midshipman of the Courageux, Captains C. Boyles and R. Lee, at the reduction of St. Lucie in July, 1803. He afterwards served in the same ship at the capture, March 13, 1806, of the Marengo and Belle Poule, and in 1809 accompanied the expedition to Walcheren in the San Domingo, and served at Flushing, and assisted in her boats at the capture of four privateers, in the Chesapeake, and at the taking of Craney Island, Hampton, &c. While in charge on one occasion of a prize, he captured a merchant brig, valuably laden with naval stores, and was wounded while serving in a tender to the San Domingo in the Chesapeake. He subsequently served in the boats of the Phœnix at the capture of several pirates in the Archipelago in 1815. He was promoted to lieutenant in December, 1827, and in 1830 and 1831 served in the coast blockade. From April, 1840, until May, 1843, he served in the San Josef at Plymouth, and commanded a station in the Coastguard from November, 1843, until 1850. In July, 1846, he received a silver medal of the Royal Humane Society. He became retired commander July 1, 1864, and was awarded a naval pension December 28, 1867. The following is a list of the ships engaged:—Cæsar, Sir Richard Strachan; Hero, the Hon. A. Gardner; Namur, Captain Halstead; Courageux, R. Lee; Æolus, Lord W. Fitzroy; Phœnix, T. Baker; Révolutionnaire, Henry Hotham; and Santa Margaritta, Rathbone.

The training-brigs Sealark, Liberty, Nautilus, and Pilot have gone into harbour at Devonport to be laid up for the winter, and the Martin, which was so cruelly reported lost, is snugly berthed in Portsmouth Harbour.

Vice-Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock was to leave Halifax in the Northampton on Tuesday for Bermuda, where the flag will probably be joined by the Contest, Druid, Forester, Flamingo, and Tenedos.

In reporting last week the visit of the Admiralty to Devonport and the Plymouth Division of Marines, we particularly noticed their Lordships' inspection of the gun-drill battery, and their expressed satisfaction with the efficiency of the men in working the guns. We are glad to observe that several of our daily contemporaries have also touched upon this matter, and have likewise noted the fact that the skill thus exhibited is not confined to "drill," but is carried out in "practice;" instances of most accurate firing by the Marines from gunboats at a floating target being given. We have already, in an article on June 26 last, touched upon the gunnery qualifications of the Light Infantry Marine; and as far back as October, 1878, we advocated the payment of the same allowance per diem to the qualified Marine as is now paid to the seaman who is entitled a "trained" man, on account of having passed a certain standard in gunnery in addition to efficiency in other drills. Some months since we were led to expect that an order on this subject was about to be issued; and, although it has not yet appeared, we still hope to see the Marine placed on the same footing as the Blue-jacket, and that he will yet be paid his extra penny per diem, if qualified to receive it.

Not long since the Corps of Royal Marines could boast of having four living K.C.B.'s, but the deaths of Sir Thomas Holloway and Sir Fortescue Graham have reduced the number to two, and we presume, therefore, that whenever new honours are to be distributed, the senior officers of the corps will not be overlooked.

We have already noticed that the Admiralty had called for a return from the several Divisions of Royal Marines which would show the amount of sea, as compared with shore, service of every man. There must, of course, be many men who have been for years employed in departments on shore, such as tailors, shoemakers, artificers, &c., in which it has been for the good of the Service that they should be retained, who can have little or no sea time noted against their names; but there is no doubt that the greater proportion of non-commissioned officers and men will reckon a larger amount of sea than land service, the proportions embarked being often three-fourths of the strength of the Division, and sometimes in excess of that number.

The Lords of the Admiralty left Queenstown on Monday evening on completing their inspection of Haulbowline Yard and the new dock in course of construction there. We have good authority for stating that it is not improbable that a larger number of Irish boys than usual will shortly be received for training for the Royal Navy, but the question of establishing a training-ship at an Irish port is not likely to be entertained at present.

The Swiftsure has been named as a likely vessel to succeed the Iron Duke, as flagship on the China station, but it is not probable that any orders for her preparation will be given until a full report is received from the Iron Duke as to her condition and fitness for service, now that she has been patched up at Hong Kong. That she is very seriously damaged there is not a shadow of a doubt, and the fuller accounts which have been received of her grounding make it the more marvellous that she is still afloat. Nothing but the calm which prevailed while she lay stranded on the reef saved her from being, like the Vanguard, wiped out of the Navy List. This accident will have cost the country very many thousands. Great credit is due to the "Aberdeen Dock" for the manner in which they have managed to repair the Iron Duke in the course of one month, although it was necessary to work night and day to effect this despatch. Nineteen plates have had to be replaced, and some new frames have also been put in in place of those twisted and bent. The cost of this work is said to be £8,000, to which must be added the loss of her steel hawser, value fully £1,000, and the cost of the coal required to bring the ship from Hakodate to Hong Hong, which may be put down at £2,000, and the repairs to the French ship Champlain, which was severely damaged in grounding when attempting to get the Iron Duke off. This is so serious a matter that it becomes absolutely necessary that the reason why the Iron Duke was in such dangerous waters, and the true causes of her having grounded, should be made known. It does not do to try to pass over such an "accident,"—which, by the way, is the second of its kind which has happened to the Iron Duke under her present Captain,—without comment, for the stranding of a ship which cost the country £200,000 at the least, is a question of importance. What should be explained is,—why the ship took in coal at an enormous cost to hurry north in thick weather; why she was steaming six knots in foggy weather in such waters may well be inquired into. We have seen the latest charts of the spot where she grounded, and the incompleteness of the survey is so apparent that the greatest caution should naturally have suggested itself to those in charge of the navigation of a costly ironclad. And why she took the outside of the island of Okosiri, within two miles of the land, instead of taking the inside and, generally supposed, safer channel. These are the points that must be inquired into in the first instance, and it might also be well to consider how far it was wise to send the ship off to Hong Kong in her disabled condition at that season.

The United States Minister in London has, according to the New York Herald, succeeded in obtaining from the Admiralty the original official reports, never made public, of Captain Lloyd and other officers of the British Navy who commanded the ships-of-war composing the British squadron which attacked the United States privateer brig General Armstrong, at the battle of Fayal on September 26, 1814. These documents are, it is stated, of a very important and interesting character, and, with the report of the British Consul at Fayal at the time, decide the long-disputed question as to the liability of Portugal to the United States for permitting the violation of the neutrality laws in her port. The circumstance of these documents having been placed at the disposal of the representatives of a foreign Power shows how much more readily the Admiralty complies with requests from abroad than with those at home. It was not long ago that an officer of the Royal Navy, who was interesting himself in "naval evolutions," craved from the Admiralty the liberty of looking over some official accounts of naval actions. His object was to benefit his profession if possible, and he was willing to undertake the work at his own cost. But their Lordships would not even place the musty documents at his disposal for perusal.

A telegram from Cape Town states that the Natal Legislature has been opened by Sir G. Pomeroy Colley. A Loan Bill is proposed for railway purposes, and to meet a final contribution of £250,000 for the Zulu War. Zululand is now likely to prove a source of benefit, instead of ever-present danger, to Natal.

If there is to be a fusion of pairs of battalions into an amalgamated regiment, with an agglomerated or compound title, it would be as well if the Authorities were to take a little advice before carrying out the scheme. This precaution is especially necessary in dealing with Highland regiments. In them esprit de corps is very strong, and it would be very easy to wound their susceptibilities. Evidently, the Authorities know little of their traditions, origin, and feelings, for the military marriage arrangements suggested in their case by the Militia Committee are the very height of absurdity. We would advise the Horse Guards to assemble a committee of Highland, only Highland, officers, to consider the least objectionable manner of coupling the different corps.

In the October number of the Veterinary Journal, an Army Veterinary Surgeon, giving his professional experiences in Afghanistan, mentions many shortcomings in the transport arrangements which would be well worth the consideration of the Indian Government in future campaigns. Among other subjects, the writer alludes to the difficulties experienced by veterinary surgeons in obtaining sufficient rations for the animals under their care. To quote the writer's words, "the quantities received are fixed by some omniscient member of the Staff, without in any way consulting those whose daily duty it is to be acquainted with the subject (feeding) under consideration." He says that only when the low condition of the animals had begun to cause anxiety were the opinions of the veterinary staff called for, but their views as to the amounts of forage to be given, being too liberal, were not approved. Overloading is mentioned as another cause of "breakdown," in conjunction with the practice of keeping the transport camels laden and standing for hours at a time, instead of their being made to sit down until required to advance. They are stated to have been laden, in many cases, for twelve hours at a stretch, without any attempt being made to relieve them, even to the extent of allowing them to sit down. It appears that in these, as in many other instances, veterinary surgeons have been slighted and ignored, in addition to being overworked and ill remunerated. The writer goes on to say that he was responsible for the welfare of the sick to be found among no less than 5,961 animals, in addition to his ordinary regimental duty; and for this, with attendance upon innumerable committees, he received the munificent sum of 75 rupees per mensem, in addition to his pay. The medicines at his disposal for all cases, external or internal, in the camel or the mule, consisted of mustard, carbolic acid, vinegar, and a skin of ordinary oil, these necessaries being supposed to meet all requirements. Considering the vast importance now-a-days of efficient transport, it would be well worth while to take into consideration many of the points mentioned by the writer in the Veterinary Journal, both as regards the treatment of the animals and the veterinary surgeons supposed to have medical charge of them, for it is not surprising that service in the Army Veterinary Department, especially in India, is unpopular in the profession, when, in addition to the discouraging state of affairs at home, such a condition of things is found to exist abroad.

As an instance of the hard and absurd way in which the compulsory retirement of officers after twenty years' service works, we may mention the case of Brevet Major Robert Thew Gordon, of the 93rd Highlanders. That officer, now holding a civil appointment in Cyprus, has been, or will be in the course of a few days, removed from his regiment. Practically, his military career is, unless some exceptionally favourable chance should occur, at an end. The number of unattached majorities at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief is so small that, notwithstanding the high estimation in which Major Gordon is held, the Horse Guards has, apparently, not been able to give him a step of substantive rank. Major Gordon is a Staff College graduate, did excellent service in the Ashantee war, he was mentioned in despatches; won great credit as Brigade-Major at Aldershot, and conducted himself much to the satisfaction of the Foreign Office when employed on the Boundary Commission in Turkey. He has also served in India, where he mastered the language, and passed a high examination at the Engineering College at Roorkee. He is in the prime of life, and a man notorious for clear common-sense, energy, zeal, resolution, and every soldierlike quality. Yet, under the present system, this valuable and experienced officer is thus prematurely put on the shelf.

Some interesting particulars have just been published about the military Press of Russia. The daily journal, Rooski Invalide, founded in 1812, occasions the Government a yearly loss of 23,771 roubles, or £2,500. Since it was first started, it is believed the aggregate loss in which the Government has been involved by it is no less than £120,000. The monthly journal, Voenni Sbornik, the War-Office review, was founded in 1858, and lost 12,000 roubles the first year. In 1862 the loss was 15,000 roubles, and the figure has not fallen a rouble since. The total loss occasioned by the review since 1858 is £50,000. One hundred and seventy thousand pounds for two papers, which have never yet been self-supporting, and which are a disgrace even to Russian journalism, owing to their wretched editing and inferiority of articles and news, is a heavy sum to pay for a semi-official Press, and it is no wonder, therefore, that economists clamour for its suppression.

A Reserve of Officers has been created, but the Authorities have forgotten to dress the bantlings. They have a right to wear uniform, and are entitled to be presented to her Majesty on receiving their new commissions, yet no dress has yet been decided on for them! Surely this problem is not so difficult but what it could be solved in half an hour. The costume decided on ought to be of such a nature that it could be quickly and cheaply altered, so as to become identical with that of any regiment of the Line; or it might be so arranged that for special regiments, such as the Highland and Rifle Corps, certain Reserve officers should be told off. In this case, the officers so assigned might wear the dress which they would have to assume if recalled to the Service. Of course, in the case of Militia and Volunteer officers, the uniform of their respective regiments should be worn.

The De Cissey affair appears to be far from settled, for the General is bringing actions for slander against several newspapers, and Madame de Kaulla is also intent upon defending her fair fame in the law courts. In addition to this, the whole matter is to be brought before Parliament as soon as the Chambers meet. It is said that a great many persons will be implicated in the new charges which have been raked up against the ex-Minister of War, and which, in all probability, have no foundation, except in political hatred. General de Cissey, in fact, is now accused of having conceded to Madame de Kaulla two contracts which brought in a mint of money—one for the purchase of horses found unfit for service in Germany, and the other for the purchase of the Chassepôts which were captured by the enemy during the Franco-German war, and which were hawked all over the habitable globe. It is further alleged that, in order to furnish a hotel for his mistress, the General gave an army contractor an immense order for shoes, although the stores already contained shoes for the next thirteen years. On the other hand, it is said that General Farre, after examining into the acts of his predecessor, has found nothing irregular, and it is certain the General must have a clear conscience, or he would not bring actions-at-law for the purpose of confounding his detractors. At the bottom of all this there is a great deal of political spite. Strange to say, the affair commenced by a Bonapartist paper slandering a Republican officer. Hence an action, and during the trial the de Cissey episode, which by its importance absorbed the original case,—

> "For many a dart at random sent, > Finds mark the archer never meant."

The defendant was no longer Colonel Jung, the Republican, but General de Cissey, execrated by all true Radicals for having distinguished himself under that unmitigated tyrant, Napoleon III., and for having, with considerable ability, reorganised that army which succeeded in wresting Paris from the hands of the Commune. The Radicals regard General de Cissey as one of the chief actors in the drama they call "the bloody week;" and as any stick is good enough to beat a dog with, so any accusation is good enough to bring against a gallant and laborious officer who aided in putting down a detestable rebellion. It is pitiable to see with what avidity the most frivolous accusations against the ex-War Minister have been swallowed by his countrymen, as if there were really nothing astonishing in them. The celebrated Frenchman who said that if he were accused of stealing the towers of Nôtre Dame, the first thing he would do would be to run away, exhibited a great knowledge of ordinary human nature which delights to believe in evil, especially where the accusation attains a person of elevated rank. In perusing the French papers we have not only been struck with the amount of pleasure derived from the washing of dirty linen in public, as regards General de Cissey, but with the want of common decency exhibited towards Madame de Kaulla, who denies the charges brought against her. M. Emile de Girardin is one of the only writers who has protested against this ungenerous and ungallant conduct. He ridicules the idea of Madame de Kaulla having been employed by Prince Bismarck. The Prince, he says, has no need of spies in France, as he can learn everything by means of the French Press. In endeavours to damage the reputation of political antagonists, all the secrets of the State are revealed. Madame de Kaulla is accused of having furnished Prince Bismarck with all the details for the mobilisation of the French Army. In reply to this charge, it is remarked that it would have taken the lady weeks to have copied the papers on this subject, and also the complicity of several different War Office functionaries. However, for the last ten years the French have been afflicted with a spy mania, and see themselves surrounded by traitors. It is to be hoped that a more wholesome tone of mind will soon prevail, and that party discord will lose that blind and impassioned hatred which now characterises it.

It is only quite recently that the commotion which recent wars caused in all departments of military science, and especially in the special branch of "Tactics," has gradually subsided. Personal experiences gave rise to the expression of most contrary views, which only now become formulated into distinct and recognised principles. Perhaps in no other army was this utterance of opinions of more varied a nature than in the one which has done the lion's share of fighting in modern times, and which therefore has a right to speak with some authority on the various subjects of which it has had so large an experience. The German Army, it has truly been observed, has carried on practical experiments on a vast scale, by which other armies have profited largely, without incurring that enormous expense of life and treasure which modern wars entail. It is, therefore, with some degree of satisfaction that we welcome a work, Taktische Beispiele, by Lieutenant-Colonel Hugo von Helvig, Bavarian Army, treating of the important subject of infantry tactics in a comprehensive, yet concise manner. Upon the infantry depends now more than ever the fate of battles; the infantry has to bear the brunt of the fight. It becomes, therefore, imperative to discard the old notions of trusting to the god of battles, and of depending on the sacrificing devotion of men and officers. It is of the first importance to supplant the old system by a new scientific method, if we may use the term, by which the same results may be obtained, without the fearful losses which a continued adherence to the old tactics, in the face of improved weapons, would bring with it. The work before us has the aim of advancing this view, and of combating the method to which in certain quarters still too much attachment is shown. The book is illustrated by seventy-eight litho plates. The work under notice has appeared from the firm of Mittler und Sohn, of Berlin.

A most interesting lecture, "Die Thätigkeit der jüngsten Kriegen," delivered by Captain Buchholtz, of the German Railway Regiment, before the "Militärische Gesellschaft" at Berlin, has been published as a pamphlet; and we must say that the author has rendered a great service to all who take an interest in the matter. He places before his readers, in concise words, the recent activity of field telegraphy, as well as the latest inventions in this branch of the military art. The summary of telegraphic operations in the wars of the last two decades alone would render the little brochure valuable; but the author has, in addition, given a full résumé of the manner in which optic telegraphy has come to the aid of electric telegraphing in the field. Military ballooning is also fully treated, the progress made by France and England being especially referred to. Altogether, a highly engaging subject is ably discussed, and the manner in which it is brought before us can only heighten the interest with which it is generally regarded.

The extensive gunnery experiments which were made in Austria last year, and which have been fully reported in a recent number of the Mittheilungen über Gegenstände des Artillerie und Geniewesens, are of some interest to us. In the trials made with the field and mountain guns, it was found that oak walls, consisting of logs of a total thickness of 1½ metre were easily destroyed at a range of 1,000 paces. Of fortress and coast guns, the 12-centimetre steel-bronze breech-loader was tried with shrapnel and case-shot. Shrapnel was very effective against breastworks, one breastwork, 6 metres thick, being penetrated thirteen times at a range of 1,000 metres. Similar results were obtained with the 15-centimetre gun. Of especial interest were the experiments with a short 18-centimetre siege gun. The profiles employed in modern fortifications, with a view to their better protection, necessitate for dismounting fire a striking angle up to 25°. The short Austrian 15-centimetre being inefficient for this purpose, on account of the smallness of the charge, the weight of the projectile had to be increased. This circumstance led to the construction of the short 18-centimetre gun, the barrel of which weighs only 450 kilogrammes more than that of the smaller gun, the shell of the heavier gun being double the weight of the lighter one. The trials made were satisfactory, and they will be continued this year.

THE ATALANTA.

Sir,—Hitherto, so far as I have read, the controversy on the Atalanta question seems to have been mainly confined to technicalities as to the stability of the vessel. I will leave the contending parties to settle the issues they have raised, and confine myself to an altogether different point. At the time the Atalanta was built, in the days of sailing-ships in the Navy, it was a far more common occurrence than it is now-a-days for ships to lose spars, and even to be totally dismasted; and it used to be a common saying amongst sailors, when praising the stability of a ship, that "the sticks would be taken out of her before she was laid on her beam-ends." In the case of the Eurydice, however, none of the masts gave way; in fact, her main-royal was found intact after the ship had gone down. Under the fearful pressure of wind that caused the catastrophe, something had to give way, and, as the masts did not yield, the ship did. In the old days this would doubtless have been reversed, for ships like the Eurydice and Atalanta must formerly have been subject to the same wind-pressure which latterly they were unable to bear. The better supervision of our dockyards has brought with it the issue of a superior class of stores, and whilst better masts, spars, and ropes, and the use of wire shrouds and stays have all tended to add to the strength of the rigging, the stability of the hulls have in no way been increased; and it is more than probable that in the case of the Atalanta, as with the Eurydice, the ship has been submerged simply because nothing aloft gave way to relieve her.—I am, &c., C. A. Stephenson.

MILITIA SUBALTERNS IN THE LINE.

"Ex-Militia Subaltern" writes:—"After reading your articles on the grievances of lieutenants of Militia transferred to the Line (in your issues of January 1, 1876, and August 28, 1880), I venture to forward my own case, in the hope that it may help to show the injustice many, if not all of us, have suffered. Entering the Militia to obtain a commission as lieutenant in the Line in two years, it took me two years and nine months to get one. I joined my regiment, at that time serving in the East, as a lieutenant, but only received an ensign's pay for three years. Eventually an officer (fortunate enough to have gone through Sandhurst), and whose commission as sub-lieutenant bore same date as mine of lieutenant, was sent out to join the regiment, and placed above me on the list, his commission having been antedated. I have lost (£68 8s. 9d.) pay, the difference between 5s. 3d. and 6s. 6d. for three years; and also seniority. No Militia service is reckoned."

The New York Herald has published a letter from Capt. Le Krafft, Hydrographer to the U.S. Navy, in which he says that the Panama Canal, when cut, will be perfectly useless for sailing vessels, owing to the "variable winds and vexatious calms" which prevail in the vicinity, while tug-boats would injure the canal banks, besides being very expensive. Rear-Admiral Ammen, of the U.S. Navy, is also against the scheme.

Major-Gen. Glyn, C.B., commanding the Dublin District, made an inspection of the Royal Hiberian Military School, Dublin, under the command of Col. Cotton, on Tuesday. The General expressed his entire approbation with the condition in which he found every department of the institution, and also the healthy and soldierlike appearance of the boys, who, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, went through their drill and parade evolutions with their usual soldierlike steadiness and precision.

INDIA.

The Secretary of State has, it is stated, sanctioned the erection of the new Government House at Simla projected by Lord Lytton. The present estimate of the whole work is 10 lacs of rupees, though public works estimates are unreliable, and it will probably cost much more. The site is probably the best in Simla, and there is already a large quantity of material on the ground.

In connection with the late error in the war estimates, the Englishman says it is stated in well-informed circles at Simla that Sir John Strachey was informed that, if he did not resign his appointment of Financial Member, he would be superseded. Major Newmarch also has, it is said, incurred unusually severe censure.

The Civil and Military Gazette (Lahore), alluding to the rumoured appointment of Sir Neville Chamberlain in succession to Sir Frederick Haines, says that it has long been known that the offer had been made, but it was considered doubtful if the health of Gen. Chamberlain would permit of his accepting the post, and this point is still very doubtful. It will be remembered that Sir Neville was compelled to decline the command in Afghanistan for the same reason.

The Standard says :—"The report of the Simla Committee on the Indian Army Organisation is now under consideration at the War and India Offices. The Committee's recommendations do not meet with favour in either department, and are not likely to be acted upon."

The Irish Times says :—"It is now definitely arranged that Gen. Sir Frederick Haines shall vacate his command of the Indian Army in April next, when he will proceed direct to England. The impression exists in official quarters that Sir Garnet Wolseley will, after all, be Gen. Haines's successor, as Sir Neville Chamberlain has been for some time past in a very weak state of health, and is almost incapacitated from undertaking increased responsibilities."

The Times' correspondent at Calcutta telegraphs on the 24th inst. :—"Sir Neville Chamberlain has not yet accepted the succession to Sir F. Haines. No one regards Sir Neville Chamberlain except with feelings of the greatest respect, but a portion of the Indian Press urges that Sir Garnet Wolseley should be appointed, in view of the great change which the late Army Commission has recommended in the organisation of the Indian Army, and which, it is said, will only be carried to a satisfactory result in the hands of an experienced reformer and able administrator like Sir G. Wolseley."

The following special notice has appeared in the Gazette of India :—"The Viceroy and Governor-General in Council has much pleasure in announcing that her Majesty the Queen-Empress has been graciously pleased to confer a separate war-medal in commemoration of the services of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers, European and native, who have been employed on field service in Afghanistan. Her Majesty has expressed her gracious readiness to receive for consideration the names of those British officers who have rendered distinguished service during the war, which her Majesty's Government hopes has now been brought to a happy termination. Recognising the excellent service which has been rendered by many native commissioned officers, the Secretary of State for India has authorised the creation of twenty-five additional appointments to the 2nd Class of the Order of British India, and a corresponding promotion to the 1st Class, to be hereafter absorbed. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India will be empowered to furnish the Government of India with the necessary recommendations for giving due effect to these measures, in which her Majesty's Government trusts the Armies of India will recognise that her Gracious Majesty the Queen-Empress of India is very sensible of the valued and distinguished services which have been rendered in the field in Afghanistan. The Governor-General in Council congratulates the Indian Armies on this cordial expression of her Majesty's royal pleasure and approbation. It has been his pleasing duty, as it was that also of his predecessor, to bring from time to time under the notice of their Queen the several occasions on which, under the able guidance of their commanders, her Majesty's troops, British and Native, have justified the full confidence of the Government in their courage and devotion on the field of battle. The Governor-General in Council now desires, on the return of a large portion of those troops to British territory, to offer the hearty testimony of the Government of India to the unfailing discipline, the high spirit, and the cheerful endurance which have been so conspicuously evinced by the whole force under all the vicissitudes of prolonged, distant, and trying service. To these most honourable and soldierly qualities it is due that rarely, if ever, has war been carried on in an enemy's country with so strict a regard to the laws of humanity and honour, and such total absence of excess of any kind, as throughout the late operations in Afghanistan. For this result, no less than for the successes they have achieved in the field, the Government of India desires to thank its soldiers of all ranks; and while deploring those gallant and devoted men who have fallen in the performance of their duty, to offer the returning divisions and their leaders a hearty welcome."

With reference to the charge against Gen. Primrose, that he was so frightened on the news of the disaster at Maiwand as to exaggerate it into "annihilation," Major Frederick Adam, of the Bombay S.C., assistant-quartermaster-general of the Candahar Force, says :—"I am the responsible person for having telegraphed that the brigade was 'annihilated.' When the report was first received it was so described, and knowing that the wire would almost immediately be cut, I hastened to write down what had been reported. Subsequent telegrams modified the first report."

A telegram from India states that Major-Gen. Robert Hume, C.B., commanding the Allahabad Division of the Bengal Army, goes to Candahar to relieve Major-Gen. Phayre, in command of the forces in Southern Afghanistan. The latter officer reverts to his former appointment in command of the lines of communication between Quetta, Sibi, and Candahar. Gen. Hume is to be replaced on the divisional staff of the Bombay Army by Brigdr.-Gen. H. T. Macpherson, C.B., V.C., who has commanded a brigade throughout the Afghan war, and is to be promoted major-general for his services.

The Commander-in-Chief has withheld the first Infantry prize from the Native Army serving in Bengal on the ground of inaccuracies in marking.

Orders have been issued from Army Head-quarters, Simla, providing for the grant of furlough to 33 per cent. of the Native Army. As a general rule, the limit is fixed at 10 per cent. each year.

The Government of India has ruled that young medical officers on arriving in India are not to be posted to civil appointments; and further, that such officers are ineligible for civil employment, until they have completed two years' military duty.

The Gazette of India contains a notification by the Governor-General in Council approving retrospectively of the arrangements which were made for the command, staff, and brigading of the forces detailed for Candahar and employed in the Southern Afghanistan line of communication, and which were designated the "Second Division of the Candahar Field Force." It is also notified that Col. H. H. James, Bombay S.C.; Col. J. H. Henderson, Bombay S.C.; Col. G. F. Walker, 12th Foot; and Col. H. C. Wilkinson, half-pay, 16th Lancers, will have the rank of brigadier-general of the second class while commanding brigades in the field.

The names of the following officers have been placed on the Indian Gradation List, in consequence of the retirement from the Service of Lieut.-Gen. H. Nott, Madras S.C., on July 14 :—Major-Gen. Gore, Madras S.C., is placed on the list of lieutenant-generals; Col. Sir W. L. Merewether, K.C.S.I., C.B., Bombay S.C., is placed on the list of major-generals. The following promotions are made, subject to her Majesty's approval :—Bengal Army :—To be Lieutenant-Colonel—Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Mackenzie, Bengal Cavalry, from Sept. 10, in succession to Lieut.-Col. and Brevet Col. Jenkins, deceased. To be Majors—Capt. and Brevet Major Macnaghten, late 5th Eur. L.C., from Sept. 10, in succession to Jenkins, deceased; Capt. and Brevet Major Peacock, late 3rd Eurn. L.C., from May 19, in succession to Major Wake, retired on half-pay; Capt. Broome, Gen. List. Inf., Sept. 18; Capt. Jackson, Gen. List. Inf., Sept. 20. Brevet :—To be Colonels—Lieut.-Cols. Martin and Baker, Bengal S.C., and Whitlock, Madras S.C., Sept. 20. To be Lieutenant-Colonel—Major Moore, Bombay Cavalry, from July 14, in succession to Lieut.-Gen. Nott, retired. To be Major—Capt. (now Major) Clutterbuck, Bengal Infantry, from July 14, in succession to Lieut.-Gen Nott.

"A Field Officer of Rifle Volunteers and a Civilian" writes :—"I have read with interest the correspondence in your paper regarding the assumption of their rank by officers of Volunteers. Having a strong opinion on the subject, with regard not only to officers of the Volunteers, but to those of the Militia and Yeomanry, I venture to ask permission to be allowed to express it, through the medium of your columns. It seems to me that a man ought to be designated by what is his calling, business, trade, profession, by what he makes his living by, by what is, in fact, the business of his life. By applying this rule, we at once get rid of almost all difficulties, and especially bring out in a strong light the broad distinction between the regular officer and all others. Soldiering is his trade; he ought to be known as a soldier-officer. If officers of the Auxiliary Forces respect others and respect themselves, they will take every means in their power to prevent their being mistaken for professional soldiers. On the other hand, they are entitled and bound, on all proper occasions, to take care that due respect is paid to the Queen's commission, in their persons. When engaged in any duty, whether strictly military or in a subsidiary way connected with their position as officers of the Auxiliary Forces, they ought to be sticklers for the rank which has been conferred upon them. If they act in this way, and see to it above all things that they thoroughly know their work, they will get all due respect from every one, civilian and soldier. alike. I am unable to make any distinction between the different branches of the Auxiliary Forces. They are none of them soldiers, unless when actually enrolled or on duty, and I humbly consider that they are guilty of 'bad form' if they allow themselves, except on these special occasions, to be designated by those military titles which can only, with propriety and at all times, be assumed by those whose trade is soldiering."

"An Old Soldier" writes :—"The objection, to me, against the assumption of military titles by Militia and Volunteers, except on duty, is that soldiering is not their profession. Surely this is a sufficient argument against the claims which some Militia and Volunteer officers raise to use their military titles, which are accorded them for the purposes of military duty, when actually under arms or doing duty with their regiments."

"A Captain of Middlesex Rifle Volunteers" writes :—"Your correspondent, 'X.,' thinks that the rank and file of the Volunteer Force consider themselves civilians when not absolutely engaged in 'military exercises,' whatever that may mean. Does he consider church parades, shooting-matches, or assaults given by regimental schools of arms military exercises? At all regimental assaults the Volunteer always appears as a soldier, with his rank before his name. The rank and file themselves, I am sure, do not indulge in the visionary thoughts of 'X.,' being fully aware that in case of invasion, or even of such a war as would denude the country of Regular troops and absorb the Militia (who would doubtless volunteer to furnish garrisons for our fortresses in the Mediterranean and elsewhere), they can at once be embodied and sent to any part of Great Britain, without the power of resignation. Surely there is a difference between a man who enters an engagement of this sort and one who does not. 'X.' complains of the kind of argument used by one of your correspondents as not convincing. Does he think comparing a Volunteer officer to a member of the Irish Land League, and himself to a landlord, a convincing style of argument? Where is the analogy? He also states that 'he knows many shopkeepers himself' who hold the rank of major or captain in the Volunteer Service It seems somewhat curious that he should keep up an acquaintance with people to whom, on paper, he appears to have such an aversion. Further on, he says we are 'never likely to see a real day's service.' This may or may not be the case; but it is like the argument that the Volunteer Service is of no use, to which one might easily rejoin that neither are three arches of Waterloo Bridge at low-water. It is, however, 'X.'s' opinion; but I would remind him that our brethren at the Cape, in New Zealand, and even in Canada have seen 'several days' real service.' Our Indian brethren, too, would, had the Volunteer Force existed at the period, have been of the greatest value during the Mutiny, whatever 'X.' may think of their not having previously seen a 'real day's service.' Finally, 'X.' dismisses us as 'a worthy body of men,' without even 'gentle' prefixed to the last word,—for his sentiments and description we ought, I am sure, to feel grateful. Is he aware that we all, before obtaining our commissions, are required to sign an engagement to serve in her Majesty's Regular Army, if required? As it is not in good taste to adopt the 'tu quoque' system, I shall not condescend to do so on his Social-position argument, but I must conclude by assuring 'X.' that his case will neither be strengthened nor improved by adopting such tactics,—it shows a weak case."

"A Devoted Centurion" writes :—"I consider the present an opportune moment for quoting a few facts which have evidently passed unnoticed in some quarters, but which go to prove that whatever the few may think, the majority of Militia and Volunteer Officers are justified in the view they take that it would be the height of snobbishness for them to assert themselves as 'lieutenant-colonels,' 'majors,' and 'captains,' in society, when officially their claim to military rank is systematically ignored,—and very properly so, I and many others think, who are content to serve from patriotic motives, and not from any desire to usurp titles which are, or should be, the right of the regular soldier, and the regular soldier only. If the Army List of April last is taken up, and page 2 turned to, the names will be found of two well-known Volunteer officers, viz., Viscount Bury, Permanent Under-Secretary of State for War, and Col. Loyd-Lindsay, Financial Secretary to the War Office. How are these officers designated? Simply as 'the Right Hon. Viscount Bury, K.C.M.G., late Scots Fusilier Guards.' and 'Lieut.-Col. R. J. Loyd-Lindsay, V.C., M.P., late Scots Fusilier Guards,' not as 'Lieut.-Col. Viscount Bury, K.C.M.G., 21st Middlesex Rifle Volunteers,' and 'Lieut.-Col. R. J. Loyd-Lindsay, V.C., M.P., the Honourable Artillery Company and 1st Berks Rifle Volunteers.' Again, in April last, the Deputy-Accountant-General of the Army, Mr. Ralph H. Knox, who holds a commission as captain in the South Middlesex R.V., was appointed to a Companionship of the Bath. How was he gazetted? Why, as 'Ralph Henry Knox, Esq., Deputy-Accountant-General of the Army.' Not a word is said about any captain's commission held by him in the Volunteers. Yet, if that commission carried military rank, her Majesty would certainly not have ignored the military rank, for his proper military title was given to H.M.'s Consul at Erzeroum, gazetted to the Bath at the same time, who is designated as 'Major Henry Trotter, R.E.' About the same time as Mr. Knox was gazetted a C.B., another officer of the South Middlesex Rifles was decorated by her Majesty, Mr. (Lieut.-Col.) W. H. Wylde being appointed a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. He, too, was referred to in the London Gazette as an 'Esquire.' no allusion being made to any military commission held by him. These are only a few cases. I could add many others, only I know your space is valuable, and already my letter has exceeded reasonable bounds. I have shown, however, that the military rank to which certain of my brother-officers in the Auxiliary Forces aspire is not recognised in official documents. For the good of these Services, I hope it never may be. I am proud of the designation 'civilian soldier,' one of the most honourable that a man can aspire to, and I am only sorry to find that those who profess to lead the Force have, by the wretched advice they have all along given, influenced some officers—thank goodness, they are greatly in the minority, and consist principally of the black-sheep of the Service—those who accept commissions for 'swagger's sake'—to endeavour to raise a claim to which they have no earthly right, and which is fast robbing the Service of that credit which would otherwise belong to it. Believe me, the true friends of the Auxiliary Forces are those who resist the growth of such unmistakably 'bad form' as the assumption by the amateur soldier of the ranks which are, and should be, the marks by which the professional soldier is distinguished from the amateur, in the Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers."

Monday last being the anniversary of the battle of Balaclava, the following officers, who participated in that engagement, dined at Willis's Rooms, viz. :—Gens. Sir E. C. Hodge, K.C.B. (in the chair), Clarke, C.B., Sir Thomas McMahon, and Wardlaw, C.B.; Lieut.-Gens. Forrest, C.B., Shute, C.B., and Beauchamp Walker, C.B.; Major-Gens. Sir Roger Palmer and Seager, C.B.; Sir William Gordon; Cols. Trevelyan, Portal, Hunt, Mussenden, and Prendergast; Lieut.-Cols. Godman, Fergusson, and Swinfen; Majors Duberly, Wilkins, M'Creagh, Coney, and Clowes; Capts. Goad, Lee, Scott, and G. W. Hunt; and Surg.-Gen. J. Mouat, C.B., V.C. The anniversary was also celebrated at the Alexandra Palace. There were 56 of the survivors present. The chair was taken by Mr. J. Lay Smith, late of the 11th Hussars, and the vice-chair was taken by Mr. W. Bird, of the 8th Hussars, who had two horses shot under him at the charge, and was for twelve months a prisoner of war in a Russian prison. Several toasts were honoured, and a pleasant evening spent.

THE CAMPAIGN IN BASUTOLAND.

Despatches from Colonel Clarke, the Commandant-General of the Forces at the Cape, give particulars of the actual commencement of hostilities in Basutoland. The Colonial Forces, having entered the disaffected districts in two bodies on September 12, the rebel chief Lerothodi came to Mafeteng. Lerothodi assembled about a thousand men, took possession of the road in which the Colonial troops were advancing, and opened fire. After a good deal of firing on both sides, the Basutos galloped down, six hundred strong, on the Colonists, who held their ground, drove them back, and pursued them more than three miles. The same afternoon a Basuto attack on a kraal of loyal natives was repulsed. The Colonists entrenched themselves in the compound of the Residency, and for several days before their post was surrounded, skirmishes went on. Lieut. Clark, since killed, made two attacks on a rebel position, but was driven back. At this time Lerothodi had fifteen hundred men with him, and the roads were open. On the 22nd, however, Lerothodi's force, reinforced to a strength of seven thousand, attacked the Colonial entrenchments. Shortly before eleven the station had been entrenched and barricaded, and the men carefully posted. The Basutos came down in immense force at a gallop. Making a magnificent charge they drove in the outposts and swept off the cattle. Driving the cattle to the rear, they advanced from all sides in strategical formation, with supports and large reserves. Notwithstanding the heavy fire of the Colonists, they gained possession of the village of Niohapi, four hundred yards from the entrenchments, and having surrounded the Residency, charged down the main road, led by a chief, to within a hundred yards of the barricades, where their leader was shot. Flank attacks in force were made simultaneously, and dismounting at four hundred yards, they fought their way right up to the defences. Losing heavily, but throwing up shelters as they advanced, and loopholing the garden walls, they kept up a sustained fire from about four hundred rifles on the Residency. This continued till five o'clock, and after six hours' fighting Col. Carrington directed a sortie against the Basuto flank. The mounted men sent out drove the Basutos back on their reserves. Though retreating under a tremendous fire, the Basutos continually dismounted to pick up their dead and wounded, and held their ground till after dark to complete the removal of disabled men. The defending force, which was well under cover, suffered slight loss, but the Basutos left the ground strewed with dead horses, sixty lying close to the barricades. The Basutos were largely armed with Sniders and Martini-Henry rifles.

CAPTAIN BOYCOTT.

"S.F.P." writes:—"I have just read the letter of the special correspondent of the Daily News with reference to Capt. Boycott. I do not know Capt. Boycott, though I fancy I must have met him with the 39th a good many years ago; but I admire his pluck, and think that he ought to be helped out of his difficulties, if possible, and I venture to suggest a plan. Let half-a-dozen retired, youngish officers go and help him; let them take over a dozen good English labourers, and get Boycott's crops in, and show this fine fellow and his courageous wife that their brave bearing under very difficult circumstances is exciting the admiration of numbers of men belonging to the Services. There must be heaps of men with nothing to do who would be glad to go to the rescue of Capt. Boycott. If he was a farmer in Natal or Basutoland, menaced by Zulus or other natives, there would be a number of volunteers, and everybody would feel it was the right thing to do. What would be right in Natal cannot be wrong in Ireland. This suggestion requires no Government sanction, it simply wants half-a-dozen resolute men, well armed, with a dozen labourers. I cannot possibly go myself, as I am fully occupied, and am unwell and have a large family, but as such an expedition will cost something, not very much, I will contribute £2, if necessary £5, towards the expenses. If a man like Evelyn Wood, but a few years younger and unemployed, will undertake to organise such an expedition, he will have heaps of applications, and I am confident sufficient funds will be contributed to cover all expenses. If the Government cannot enable Capt. Boycott to gather in his crops, then it is time that private enterprise should come to the rescue. Probably Lord Erne would help financially."

SUBALTERNS' EXPENSES.

"Impecuniosity" writes:—"We are told that the impecunious British subaltern is terribly hard pressed by the expenses attending the system on which our regimental messes are conducted, and it has been suggested that the attention of the Authorities should be directed to the suppression of this evil. Now, I most respectfully beg to point out that most of us have far less difficulty in meeting our monthly mess bills, than in putting our hands into our pockets to pay our tailors for their continuous changes in uniform. We have no sooner paid for a new pattern forage-cap and glengarry, than a General Order is specially issued directing us to immediately have our shoulder-cords and badges altered. In the case of the new forage-cap and glengarry, we were told that we might wear out those caps which were already in use; but how many colonels allowed this? Now, doubtless, we should all of us be highly delighted to see our mess expenses reduced, at however great sacrifice to our stomachs; but, at the same time, we should be equally pleased to learn that the Authorities had, for once and all, thoroughly made up their minds as to whether they wished us to wear caps with straight or sloping peaks, badges on the collar or shoulder, sashes over the shoulder or round the waist, and such like interesting details. Whether such changes are more ornamental or serviceable is exceedingly doubtful, but that they are very expensive is disagreeably apparent. As an example, I give you the contents of a communication I received from my tailor this morning:—'Sir,—I beg to solicit the favour of supplying you with the new shoulder-straps for your uniform, and shall feel obliged if you will kindly fill up and sign the enclosed form. My prices are:—Lieutenant, per pair, for tunic, £1; patrol-jacket, 10s.; great-coat, 9s. 6d.'"

ADMIRALTY CIRCULARS.

The frequent losses of revolvers on board her Majesty's ships has necessitated the issue of a Fleet Circular (No. 37 S), giving instructions for the prevention of what looks like something more than accident. In future, all pistols will be kept in racks near a sentry's post, so that the absence of one can be readily observed. Pistols are not to be removed from the rack except for action, drill, or cleaning purposes, under the superintendence of an armourer or other fitting person; and when in the rack, the pistols are to be secured by a chain passed through their trigger-guards, and locked.

The Admiralty has, by another Fleet Circular (38 S) laid down a scale of allowances for collecting, preserving, and delivering into store empty cartridge cases. For Nordenfelt cartridges, the allowance will be 5s. per 1,000 of 158 lb. weight; for ·65-in. Gatling cartridges, 3s. per 1,000 of 95 lb.; and for pistol cartridges, 2s. 6d. per 1,000 of 8 lb. 3 oz. The issue of these allowances is to be made under the same regulations and conditions as laid down in Article 1,357 of the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions.

A NAVAL NURSERY.

Sir,—I wish to bring to your notice an order which has lately been given by the officer commanding one of H.M.'s ships stationed in the Mediterranean. This ship has had since her commission a somewhat chequered career, but it is well known that the comfort of her officers is studiously considered. The order above referred to is that the gun-room officers are to close their mess-berth (and, of course, go to their hammocks) at the early hour of 9.30 p.m. This would seem a very good order to those who follow the maxim of "Early to bed and early to rise," &c., but to a man who has been at work all day long, and has perchance reached the mature age of 24 and 25, it does seem hard (perhaps unreasonably), that he cannot have his evenings to himself. Such parental regard for the gun-room officers I bring to your notice, in order that the reading public may see how tenderly the youth of the Royal Navy are nurtured.—I am, &c.,

One of the Babes.

Messrs. Thornton and Co. exhibited last week, before the Leith Docks Commissioners, their new life-saving dress. The apparatus consists of a waterproof dress, with a float attached, which is fitted with air-proof chambers, so constructed that they are protected by means of cork bulwarks against any chance of damage through collision with wreckage, rocks, &c. The dress can be put on in one minute, and the operator being in a perpendicular position, and floating waist-high in perfect security, can rescue four or five persons from drowning, and convey them to a place of safety. Web-like propellers are fitted to the feet, and by an easy action, similar to that of walking, a person is able to send himself through the water at considerable speed. A pair of revolving screws, fitted to the back of the float, can also be used to propel the occupant at a speed equal to five miles an hour without undue exertion. The inventors recommend the apparatus for naval, military, and exploring purposes, and also for wild-duck shooting. The trials were considered highly satisfactory.

The fact that the Admiralty suddenly decided to send so many Nordenfelt guns to the Mediterranean, very naturally reduced the number in reserve to a minimum, and it was thereupon, says the Hampshire Telegraph, thought well that the Navy should have a further supply of at least fifty of these guns, although the expenditure was not provided for when the Estimates were framed. As they are to be delivered before the end of the financial year, the money will have to be found somewhere, and this supply will not interfere with the intended orders for 1881-2. Of those sent out to the Mediterranean, the Alexandria was to be supplied with no fewer than eight, and the Téméraire with six, and if the other ships in the squadron are equally well armed with guns of this type, fifty will not go very far. The Gatling is to be appropriated to gunboats of the Medway class, thus using up the guns of that pattern which are now in the Service, but the larger ships will all be provided with the Nordenfelt equipment.

The Danish torpedo-ship Jordenskjöld, of which we recently gave a short account, is now approaching completion, and will be one of the most powerful men-of-war in the North Sea. The vessel is of a very peculiar design, being turtle-shaped, with an arched deck armoured with three-and-a-half inch steel plates. The ship has a double bottom, divided into twenty-three water-tight compartments, in which the boilers and engines are placed, as well as hydraulic machinery for working the exceptionally heavy ordance with which the ship is be armed. From the under-ship what may be called a middle-ship rises; the interior being divided into forty water-tight compartments, filled with cork, to ensure the buoyancy of the vessel after the sides have been pierced by projectiles. Above this intermediate portion, stands the upper-ship, in which the crew will be berthed. In the fore part of the upper-ship is a turret, armoured with steel plates 8 in. thick, in which a 14-inch Krupp gun will be mounted, while four lighter Krupp guns will be placed elsewhere on the upper deck. The vessel will also carry two torpedo-boats, and will be fitted with apparatus for discharging Whitehead torpedoes above the water-line. Her length is 215 ft., her breadth 42 ft., draught of water 14 ft. forward and 15 ft. aft, and her displacement 2,400 tons.

The Panama Star and Herald of the 16th inst. states that Chili and the United States of Columbia have signed a convention referring their dispute concerning the transportation of arms for Peru, across the Isthmus of Panama, to the arbitration of the President of the United States.

Reviews.

SOME MAGAZINES.

Messrs. Cassell and Co. have commenced the publication in a serial form of a history of the United States of America, to be completed in thirty-six parts. The first number promises well, being full of instructive matter, and profusely illustrated.

The International Portrait Gallery, for November, represents "M. Gustave Doré," a highly-finished photo by Messrs. Elliott and Fry. We also find amongst Messrs. Cassell's publications for November three new ones, which are specially devoted to "little folk," viz., The Child's Life of Christ, with original illustrations; The Glad Time, an illustrated annual for youngsters; and Cassell's Almanack for 1881, enclosed in a most artistic wrapper, containing a large number of illustrations, and abundance of interesting matter.

Hardwicke's Science Gossip, for November, is a capital number, containing articles on wild flowers, microscopy, zoology, geology, botany, &c. Mr. Bogue has ready for publication the second part of A Manual of the Infusoria, by W. Saville Kent.

Cornhill, for November, opens with a new serial, which already promises to prove attractive. It is entitled, "My Faithful Johnny," and is introduced by a rather startling illustration. "The Natural History of Dress" is amusing, though it may not be very instructive. The author's aim is to prove that the past history of dress has its rationale and its causes. "Social Life Amongst the Ancient Greeks" is quite worth reading, and gives a great deal of information.

The Theatre.—The November number of this well-conducted review of the Drama, Music, and Fine Arts opens with a most successful likeness of Miss Adelaide Neilson. So much for the artistic department. In the literary, we are given one of F. Marshall's amusing stories, "A Thorough Actress;" also, "The Queen of Trumps," by Lewis Wingfield; a pleasant description of the "Foyer" of the Palais Royal, by Charles Hervey; a glimpse of the "Italian Stage," by R. Davey; and abundance of smart writing and good reading in "Our Play-box" and "Omnibus-box."

The Gospels. By Rev. Edmund Fowle. (Relfe Brothers.)—In this little book there is contained the principal part of the Four Gospels which give us the life of our Saviour on earth. The Gospels are harmonised and arranged in short readings, whereby a better knowledge may be gained than by reading a chapter here and there as a whole out of one Evangelist, and then, perhaps, reading out of another the same circumstances in somewhat different words. The former offers a decided advantage, but not the only one. The arrangement of the book is altogether a happy idea of the author, and is happily carried out by the publishers.

A Short Bible History. By Rev. E. Fowle. (Relfe Brothers.)—This little book is well adapted for schools and families, where it is thought desirable for children and young people to become well acquainted with Bible history as a whole, rather than acquire a mere knowledge of isolated facts.

District Railway Map. (Bradshaw's Guide Office.)—The improved District Railway Map of London, lately published, has passed through several editions, and is recognised as a useful and trustworthy guide.

Tourist Guide.—The Great Eastern Railway Company's Guide to the Continent is, in a money point of view, an astonishing production. In a handy little pocket pamphlet we have a capital Continental guide, amply illustrated, provided with an excellent map, and enclosed in an artistically-designed wrapper, all for 6d.

A very important military work, one which should be regarded as a memorial of the principal actors in the South-African campaign of 1879, is advertised for publication by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. It will be produced in one handsomely-bound quarto volume, and will be illustrated by a large number of cabinet portraits of the officers in the British Army and Navy who perished in the war.

The Admiralty have decided that vessels of the Comus class are to carry two Nordenfelt guns, and directions have been given for such ships to be fitted for stowing the proper proportion of ammunition.

In our account of the Trafalgar Dinner, at the Royal Naval Club, last week, the names of the following officers, who were present, were omitted, namely:—Coms. Sebastian Gassiot, Lord Robert B. Bruce, William Bailey, E. D. Law, St. John Hornby, H. A. Digby, W. G. England, W. J. Musgrave, Robert Pitman, James Brown, and Mr. Henry Kelly, R.N., secretary.

The directors of "De Bay's Patent Direct-Acting Propeller Company" invite subscriptions for 15,000 ordinary shares of £5 each. The company, which is fully established and in full working order, has fitted several vessels with most satisfactory results, the directors having been informed by one firm alone that, through adopting this propeller, they calculate on saving over £200,000 per annum. The Cora Maria, belonging to Messrs. Copper and Alexander, of Cardiff, fitted with the propeller, has recently arrived at Constantinople, and the captain speaks most highly of the invention. The object of issuing the present shares is to carry out orders now outstanding, and there can be little doubt but that this company, if judiciously and economically managed, will prove not only a financial success to its shareholders, but largely benefit all shipowners.

Messrs. Allen and Hanburys have as nearly as possible succeeded in depriving Cod Liver Oil of its nauseating smell and taste. They present in their "Perfected" article the oil in a beautifully bright and but very little coloured state. Many persons to whom the taste of the oil has hitherto been an obstacle will doubtless be able to take it in this more perfected form.—Lancet. No nauseous eructations follow after it is swallowed.—Medical Times and Gazette. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "Perfected" Oil. Sold only in capsuled imperial quarter-pints, 1s 4d; half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade-mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

The Army.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers). The regiment, under command of Capt. Hamilton, marched into Sealkote on the 25th ult., after a year's absence on service in Afghanistan. Thirty non-commissioned officers and men have died during that period. The regiment paraded at Safed Sung on Aug. 10, in service marching-order, for the inspection of Lieut.-Gen. R. Bright, C.B., commanding the Khyber Line Field Force, when there were present—5 captains, 10 subalterns, and 300 troopers. After the march-past, the General ordered a quarter-column, and bid farewell to the Carabiniers previous to their return march to India, thanking them for the excellent manner in which they had performed their duties throughout the campaign, and adding that he should forward to the Commander-in-Chief a special report on their high state of efficiency. Capt. Fife proceeds home to join the Canterbury Depôt. Lieut.-Col. Fryer, Capt. Calvert, Lieuts. Hallowes, and Hanbury, and 2nd Lieut. Des Vœux are on privilege leave. Major Marriott, Lieut. Heywood-Jones, and Vet.-Surg. Poyser are on leave to the Hills, for the recovery of their health. Capt. Maunsell, late 13th Hussars, has been appointed paymaster, vice Roberts.

4th Hussars. The Balaclava Sports took place at Aldershot on Monday last. The stewards were Major Philips; Capts. Edmonstone, Underwood, and Pearson; Lieut. Skinner; and R.S.M. Rhodes; Lieut. and Adjt. Farmer acting as hon. secretary. Four events fell to Rough-Riding Serjt.-Major Lowrey, who, it may be remembered, won a number of prizes at the recent military tournament at the Agricultural Hall.

9th Lancers. The Times' correspondent at Candahar telegraphs on Oct. 24:—"The 9th Lancers and Major Robinson's battery of jointed guns are now the only troops of Sir F. Roberts's army still at Candahar. The 9th Lancers will be relieved by the 13th Hussars from Lucknow."

11th Hussars. Capt. Taylor, aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. Fraser, V.C., C.B., commanding the Cavalry in Ireland, has passed the requisite examination, and been confirmed in his appointment. The Globe says:—"Serious complaints respecting the canteen at the Hampton Court Barracks have been made by the residents of the Palace and neighbourhood, the report has been forwarded to the Duke of Cambridge by Col. Garnett, commanding the 11th Hussars, and supported by the evidence of Major Balfe and Capt. Green in favour of abolishing the sale of intoxicating liquors, and turning the canteens into coffee and reading-rooms for the use of the soldiers."

13th Hussars. The influence of Sir Baker Russell has obtained for the regiment an honour for which all ranks have been hoping so long,—that of being allowed to proceed on service. The Times' correspondent at Candahar announces in a telegram dated the 24th inst., that the regiment proceeds to that city from Lucknow, to take the place of the 9th Lancers.

15th Hussars. The regiment was to have left Candahar on Thursday with Gen. Macpherson's Brigade for India, en route to England. The head-quarters and service troops embark at Bombay in H.M.S. Euphrates on Jan. 11 for conveyance to England. The Euphrates is due at Portsmouth on Feb. 8.

16th Lancers. Major G. O'H. Gavin, of Kilpeaconhouse, County Limerick, whose death is announced as having happened in the West of Ireland on Saturday last, in his 70th year, entered the regiment as a cornet in 1827, became lieut. in 1829, capt. in 1837, and major in 1847, and retired from the Service in 1850. Major Gavin served with the regiment under Lord Keane in Afghanistan, and took part in the siege and capture of Ghazni; he was also present at the battle of Maharajpore. He was elected in the Liberal interest for Limerick City in Feb. 1858, but was shortly afterwards unseated on petition, and he also represented the same constituency from 1859 down to the general election of 1874, when he retired.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Brigdr.-Gen. Burrows, in his despatch giving particulars of the Maiwand disaster, writes:—"I wish to bring the Artillery to special notice. Their behaviour was admirable, exposed to a heavy fire they served their guns coolly and steadily as on parade, and when the guns were rushed they fought the Ghazis with hand spikes, sponge rods, &c. In explanation of the unfortunate loss of the two Horse Artillery guns, the officer commanding the battery has reported that Lieut. Maclaine, who was in charge of them, waited to fire another round of case after the order to limber up and retire had been given, and the delay was fatal. On Major Blackwood being wounded during the action, Capt. Slade, R.H.A., took command of E-B, R.H.A. I beg to bring the conduct of this officer to very special notice. Capt. Slade was not only conspicuous for his gallantry during the day, but throughout the long and trying retreat of forty miles, he worked with unflagging energy, encouraging his men and tending the wounded officers and men who crowded his guns."

Brigdr. Nuttall writes in his despatch:—"The guns of the E-B, R.H.A., under their officers, and those of the Smooth-Bore Baty., under Capt. Slade, were most admirably and steadily served, and nothing could equal and certainly never excel the gallant, cool, and collected bearing of the officers and men during the action." And further:—"It is now my painful duty to record the death of the officers of the Cavalry Brigade who lost their lives during the action. Major Blackwood, commanding E-B, R.H.A., was wounded early in the action, returned to his duty after his wound had been dressed, and resumed command of the battery until he was wounded and subsequently killed. Lieut. Osborne remained with his guns to the last moment, and was then cut down. Lieut. Maclaine was slightly wounded during the action, and lost his life subsequently during the retreat. I have now the great satisfaction of bringing to the notice of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief the names of the following officer, who did special good service on this day:—Capt. Slade, who commanded the E-B, R.H.A., whilst Major Blackwood was having his wounds dressed."

The General commanding the Allahabad Division, Bengal Army, has issued a Brigade Order touching the death of Surg.-Major Hannah, of B-4th R.A., who lost his life in the terrible landslip at Naini Tal. The order runs thus:—"It is with the deepest regret that the Brigadier-General commanding has learnt that, in the very serious calamity which occurred at Naini Tal, owing to a landslip on the 18th inst., many valuable lives of officers, soldiers, and others, have been lost, and that amongst these Capt. Goodridge, of the 35th N.I., and Surg.-Major Hannah, A.M.D., attached to B Baty. 4th Brig. R.A., stationed at Allahabad, have perished. Brig.-Gen. Cobbe was unacquainted with Capt. Goodridge, but he deplores his sudden and premature death. From personal knowledge he can testify to the great loss sustained by the death of Surg.-Major Hannah, whose unsparing exertions during the late cholera epidemic will still be fresh in the minds of many. He is sure that Dr. Hannah will be sincerely regretted by every officer and soldier who has had occasion to know him in his professional capacity, while many will lament the loss of a friend taken thus suddenly in the prime of life and usefulness."

The Major-General commanding the Western District has received instructions to hold the 4th Baty. 9th Brig. in readiness for embarkation for India in H.M.S. Jumna, which leaves Portsmouth on Dec. 19. On arrival, the battery will be stationed at Rangoon.

I Baty. C Brig. R.H.A. and A, B, C, D, F, and G Batys. 3rd Brig. R.A. are to sail from Bombay on Feb. 5 in H.M.S. Serapis, en route to England, being due at Portsmouth on March 5.

H.M.S. Tamar, now on her passage from the Mediterranean to the West Indies, has four batteries of artillery on board, viz., the 15th and 16th Batys. 7th Brig. to Bermuda, No. 17th Baty. 7th Brig, for Jamaica, and No. 18 Baty. 7th Brig. for Barbadoes.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The following is an excerpt from the proceedings of a recent meeting of the Trustees of the port of Bombay:—"Resolution.—Proposed by Mr. G. A. Kittredge, and carried unanimously,—'That the Trustees have learnt with profound regret of the death at Poona of their chairman, Col. Ponsonby Cox. His administrative ability, displayed in the responsible, and at this time especially difficult, position of chairman of the Trust, had gained their highest respect, while his genial and courteous manner had won their warmest regard. The Trustees desire to put on record their sense of the very great loss they have sustained by the sudden death of their late associate, and their deep sympathy with his bereaved widow in her irreparable loss. That a copy of this resolution be sent to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, with the request that he will kindly hand it to Mrs. Cox whenever he may judge best.'"

Brevet Major E. Leach, V.C., is specially mentioned in Gen. Burrows's despatches giving particulars of the Maiwand disaster, the General reporting "that he was much indebted to him for valuable assistance during the retreat."

The Times announces that Lieut.-Gen. Sir A. Taylor, K.C.B., major-general on the Retired List (late Bengal), has been appointed by the Secretary of State for India president of the Royal Engineering College, Cooper's Hill, in the room of Col. G. T. Chesney, who proceeds to India as secretary to the Military Department of the Government of India.

The Standard says:—"Gen. Lord Napier of Magdala attains his 70th year on Dec. 6 next, when, by the regulation of the Service, he should be placed on the Retired List. It is proposed, however, to allow his lordship to remain on the Active List, to complete his term of office as Governor of Gibraltar, which does not expire until Oct., 1882."

The Irish Times says:—"The Government of New Zealand has decided to at once take steps to fortify the principal seaports as a protection against naval attack, and the Home Government has been applied to for the loan of an engineer officer to superintend the necessary works."

Grenadier Guards. Lieut. Elwes, whose appointment as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Sir G. Pomeroy-Colley at Maritzburg we lately announced, will take up his duties in December next.

1st, or Royal Scots. Having been relieved at Jubbulpore by the 1st Batn. 23rd Fusiliers, the 2nd Batn. left that station some weeks ago for Deolalee, where it is now remaining, pending its embarkation on the 5th prox. in H.M.S. Malabar, for conveyance to England. On arrival home, about Dec. 3, the battalion is to be stationed in Ireland.

5th Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. sails from India on the 9th prox. in H.M.S. Jumna, and is due at Portsmouth on Dec. 7. It is to be stationed, on arrival, at Portsmouth.

6th Regiment. The 1st Batn. is due at Portsmouth from Aden on Dec. 10 in H.M.S. Serapis. As we stated last week, the battalion will be stationed at Warley on arrival.

7th Fusiliers. Capt. Mostyn, 2nd Batn., attached to the depôt at Hounslow, has been ordered to hold himself ready to join the service companies in Afghanistan, on promotion. The 2nd Batn. left Kokeran on the 29th ult. for Candahar, leaving two companies behind.

16th Regiment. The Irish Times states that the 1st Batn. will shortly be moved from Belfast to Newry. Lieut. Fordyce, 2nd Batn., a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to the 2nd Bombay N.I. (Grenadiers) on probation, and Lieut. Johnstone to the 22nd Bombay N.I.

20th Regiment. A correspondent of the Gibraltar Chronicle, in Cyprus, writes as follows on the 5th inst.:—"H.M.S. Tamar arrived at Limassol on the afternoon of the 5th, with the head-quarters and a wing of the 35th Regt. on board. The 35th disembarked on the following morning, relieving the 20th Regt., who, to the great regret of every one concerned, are leaving for Malta. On the evening of the 4th, the officers of the regiment were entertained at dinner by the members of the Limassol Club. His Excellency Sir R. Biddulph, the Commissioner, and, in fact, all the leading English residents, were present. The health of the regiment, proposed by Col. Dumaresq, R.E., was drunk with the greatest enthusiasm."

22nd Regiment. The Irish Times states that the 1st Batn. will shortly be moved from Newry to a station in Lancashire. Lieut. H. S. P. Davies has been appointed acting adjutant of the 2nd Batn., vice Lieut. O. E. M. Davies, granted one year's furlough from India to England, on medical certificate.

25th Regiment. Capt. Dixon, 1st Batn., succeeds Brevet Major Coke as adjutant of the 2nd West York Militia. Capt. Rathborne has refused the offer of the adjutancy of the 5th West York Militia.

38th Regiment. The following officers are on leave from Malta:—Col. Thackwell, Major Sir N. Pringle, Capts. Alexander, Crofton, and Kell, and 2nd Lieuts. Brooksbank; and the following from depôt, Dublin, Capt. Cautley and Lieut. St. George. We understand that Capts. Price and de Vere Smith are contemplating retiring on half-pay, with a view to taking up companies in the Militia.

47th Regiment. The regiment moved, as arranged, from the Curragh to Dublin on the 22nd inst., to be stationed. The following officers have arrived in Dublin:—Lieut.-Col. Straton, Major North; Capts. Yard and Gunner; Lieuts. Hodgkinson (adjt.), de Hoghton, Leonard, Fraser, and Atkin; 2nd Lieuts. Murray, Norcott, and Le Feuvre; and Qrmr. Donnelly.

48th Regiment. Information has reached England of the departure of H.M.S. Euphrates from Bombay on Tuesday, with the head-quarters and service companies of the regiment on board. The Euphrates is due on the 23rd prox., when the regiment will be stationed in Ireland.

59th Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies embark at Bombay to-day in H.M.S. Orontes for conveyance to England. The regiment is due on the 28th prox., when it will be stationed at Portsmouth.

60th Rifles. The 2nd Batn. left Quetta at the end of September for India, and is to leave Bombay on Jan. 1 in H.M.S. Crocodile, being due at Portsmouth on Feb. 13. We take the following from No. 2 of the 'Celer et Audax' Gazette, the excellent periodical published by the 3rd Batn. Doubtless the article will prove interesting to many an old member of the regiment:—"Probably the first badge which was worn by 'The Royal Americans' was 'The White Horse of Hanover,' with the motto, 'Nec aspera terrent,' but we do not intend giving a description of any which, like this one, was common, at any rate, to the grenadier companies of all infantry regiments. The earliest distinctive badge was that on the colours, and consisted of the Royal Cypher within the Garter, surmounted by a crown. This was given to the regiment on its formation, and only fell into disuse when colours ceased to be carried. It was also worn in gilt as a chaco plate at the beginning of the present century. The only other badges worthy of note worn with the red coat, were the breastplate, which was of gilt metal engraved with the Royal Cypher and the number of the regiment within a wreath, and a gorget of the ordinary pattern. The lace worn on the red coat was silver with two blue stripes. On the formation of the 5th Rifle Battalion in 1797, the bugle was introduced—we do not know if it had been previously worn by the Light Companies—and worn in silver at the base of the plume-socket of the cap, which was of black leather, with bearskin top, of a pattern similar to that worn by Light Dragoons of the period. This badge was worn on the different head-dresses which were issued up to the time of the adoption of the Hungarian costume; but it seems uncertain whether it was used on the big topped chaco with cock's tail plume, which was very heavily trimmed with braid. In 1816 the bugle was also worn embroidered in gold on the skirts of the green jacket. A silver bugle has always been worn on the pouch, and has lately been authorised also for the sabretaches of the mounted officers. Now, with regard to the principal badge worn by the regiment, the Maltese Cross, Capt. Wallace, in his 'Regimental Chronicle,' says, 'It is difficult to discover the origin of the Maltese Cross as a regimental badge, but it probably was first adopted about 1797, when a fifth battalion was added to the regiment, composed principally of "Hompesch's Mounted Riflemen." As each battalion successively became a rifle battalion, it was ordered to be equipped on the model of the fifth battalion, and it is therefore natural that they should have adopted the badge which Hompesch's battalion had in use at the time of its incorporation with the fifth battalion.' This theory is plausibly suggested in Notes and Queries, July 14, 1870, by the writer, who signs himself 'H. A. St. J. M.,' where he says, 'I suggest that Hompesch, who was a Bavarian, adopted the badge of the Maltese cross either from the war medal then given to the Bavarian soldiers, or else because he was a relation of Ferdinand de Hompesch, Knight of Malta, who in 1797 became Grand Master of the Order.' In another number of the same magazine, the writer says that the cross having been adopted by one rifle regiment, was probably copied by the other, and this seems certain, because the cross worn by the Rifle Brigade is almost similar—except that the crown is imperial instead of royal—to the first pattern used by the 60th. When the wreath was discontinued by the latter, or why it was discontinued, we know not, but it appears on the appointments which the Duke of York wore as Colonel-in-Chief of the regiment, and which were presented by King George IV. to the 1st Batn. at the time of the Duke's death in 1827. We have seen a print of the uniform of the regiment in 1829, in which the cross is shown in its present form. It would seem, therefore, that the wreath was discontinued between these two dates. The cross is covered with the battles of the regiment, and the crown which surmounts it rests on a bar bearing the word 'Peninsula.' In the centre, within a circle inscribed, 'The King's Royal Rifle Corps,' is a bugle with the number of the regiment. The lion's face which carries the whistle-chain on the pouch-belt was formerly surrounded by the words '60th Regiment,' for which the motto 'Celer et Audax' was afterwards substituted. A scroll with the words, '1st Duke of York's Own Rifle Corps,' was formerly worn by the officers of the 1st Batn., who also at a later date—1853—were granted a somewhat similar device with the words 'Punjab, Mooltan, Goojerat,' which were subsequently transferred to the cross. In 1830, when the plume in the chaco was replaced by a tuft, which had hitherto been worn only in undress, and the shape of the chaco itself was somewhat altered, a bronze plate was introduced, consisting of an eight-pointed star, surmounted by a crown, and having in the centre a Maltese Cross, of a nearly similar pattern to that on the pouch-belt, with a scroll at the top inscribed 'Peninsula,' and another at the bottom with 'Celer et Audax.' This cross had lions between the limbs, and the points terminated in round knobs. When the cross was reduced in size the star was omitted, but the same cross—smaller since 1860—was worn, with a crown detached on a cockade above, both on the chaco and on the busby till the abolition of the latter in 1878. On the introduction of the helmet, some tinker or tailor invented a new pattern cross for the regiment, while the Rifle Brigade were sensible enough to copy the 60th once more, and now display the old star with the cross in the centre. The present cross may be described as a hybrid between the two old crosses of the regiment, without the beauty of either of them; and we can only hope that on future occasions the officers may be consulted instead of the London tradesmen."

66th Regiment. When we heard from Simla, the regiment, or what remains of it, was under orders to leave Candahar on the 1st inst. for India. It will embark at Bombay on Jan. 20, with the 73rd Regiment, in H.M.S. Malabar, and is due at Portsmouth on Feb. 17. Brigdr. Burrows, in his despatch on the Maiwand disaster, reports that "the detachment of the 66th Regt., under Lieut. Faunce, which manned the smooth-bore battery, behaved extremely well." Major-Gen. F. Barclay, lately commanding the regiment, writes:—"In the official telegrams published from Simla on the 28th or 29th of July last, the name of Major Oliver, 66th Regt., is given as having ridden into Candahar before what remained of his regiment after the battle of Maiwand. As such was not the case, will you kindly publish this letter, in justice to the memory of that officer, who has since succumbed to small-pox? The late Major Oliver was brought into Candahar on a gun-carriage perfectly exhausted. He assisted Gen. Burrows during the retreat in doing all in his power to restore some sort of order, and was much pained at seeing his name mentioned in the public papers as having reached Candahar before his men. I have ascertained this information by a letter received from one of the officers of the 66th Regt. who was present during the action and retreat." The Irish Times says:—"When the first excited telegrams arrived from Candahar, announcing the 'annihilation' of Burrows's brigade, it was stated that four field-officers were amongst the earliest arrivals, and that Major Oliver was one. This was a mistake, arising from similarity of name with an officer who arrived early at Candahar. So far from the statement being true, Major Oliver, after showing the utmost coolness and bravery during the action, was one of the officers who covered the retreat of the survivors, and was amongst the last who returned. Since then, Major Oliver was struck down by sickness, and died in Candahar last month. It is due to the memory of the gallant soldier that the erroneous statement above referred to should be contradicted and set right." A correspondent writes:—"I observe that a company in the 66th Regt., vacant through its late captain being killed in action, has been given to a lieutenant from the 49th Regt. This is a great slight to the subalterns of the gallant 66th. Moreover, I think that giving promotion, caused by a brother-officer being killed in action, to a stranger from another regiment is almost without a precedent. In this case, companies were vacant in the 49th Regt., therefore it is still harder on the 66th Regt., who have lost so many of their number in Afghanistan, and who might reasonably expect the promotion caused thereby to go in the regiment, to have a stranger (not even in Afghanistan) sent to them. If shunting officers of 20 years' service, on account of their bad-luck, to make promotion, and then giving it in other regiments, is to be one of the results of the Cardwellian (so-called) 'linked battalions,' the sooner they are unlinked the better, as such a course is not likely to cause much brotherly love between them. Trusting this may meet the eye of some M.P. who will agitate in the House on these matters, I enclose my card, and remain, as taught me when an ensign, devoted to the regimental system." Our correspondent evidently forgets that the senior subaltern is of four years' standing only.

67th Regiment. Cholera appears to be making great ravages among the troops returning from Cabul, judging from the following, which appears in a Madras paper:—"Sad news has just been received at Bangalore from Afghanistan, respecting the 67th Regt. (Bengal Tigers) which was so deservedly popular while in Madras. Up to the last few weeks, this regiment had been remarkably fortunate during its long campaign, and although actively engaged on many occasions, its casualties were comparatively small, and it was not until the march from Cabul to Bangalore was commenced, that the tide of good-fortune seemed to turn. Since then fever and ague have carried off many victims, and from advices received from Hassan Abdool, where the 67th had arrived, it appears that cholera had broken out, and was carrying off the already enfeebled and worn-out gallant soldiers. Letters are daily being received with the most harrowing details of the march. One poor fellow gives a graphic account of the nine days' march from Jellalabad to Hassan Abdool, which was completed without rest, the regiment suffering terribly from heat and thirst. No water was obtainable but what they had brought with them, and that was exhausted before the march was half-completed. Heat-apoplexy was of frequent occurrence, and one poor fellow died on the roadside. On their arrival at Hassan Abdool, they camped for a little rest, when, after two days, cholera broke out. New camping-ground was instantly sought for, and a site selected, six miles towards Rawul Pindee. Two more doctors were sent for to assist Surg.-Major Ewart, who is spoken of in the highest terms for his unceasing attention to the poor sufferers. The news of the death of several from cholera has already been received, and intense excitement prevails amongst the wives of the men of the regiment who are stationed in the barracks. The 2nd and 9th Regiments, who followed the 67th down on the line of march, suffered even worse. Cholera broke out the other side of Peshawur, and carried off 11 men the first day."

73rd Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies are to sail from Bombay for England on Jan. 20, with the 66th Regt., and are due at Portsmouth on Feb. 17.

83rd Regiment. "Tommy Atkins" writes:—"By your paper a fortnight ago I saw that there was still a doubt as to whether the 83rd Regiment would be brought home this relief, or not. This gallant old corps seems to have been quite forgotten, and appears to me to have been hardly dealt with. The regiment landed in England in May, 1862, after a tour of 14 years in India, where it saw service during the Mutiny. After five years at home, it embarked on April 6, 1867, for Gibraltar. In 1869 orders were received for the regiment to proceed to Halifax, N.S., and the troopship was actually in harbour, when a telegram was received ordering the 2-15th Regiment home, and the 83rd to stand fast. In 1870, the regiment proceeded to India, arriving at Poona on April 10, in the very middle of the hot weather. In 1871, the 83rd was split up into detachments, only two companies remaining at head-quarters, and during the remaining ten years it has never been once quartered together, except when selected, in 1872, to be present at the landing of Lord Northbrook, and the installation of the Begum of Bhopal to the Order of the Star of India. This was looked upon as a great honour, but as soon as the attendant ceremonies were concluded, the regiment again took up its former detachments. In 1873 the regiment was assembled together at the camp of exercise at Chincwud, after which it went to Deesa with detachments at Mount Aboo, Ahmedabad, and Baroda. In Dec. 1876 the regiment proceeded to Kurrachee with three companies at Hyderabad. In Nov. 1878 the joyful intelligence was received that the 83rd Regiment was to be held in readiness to proceed on active service in Afghanistan, and on the Lower Indus Reserve being formed, the 83rd was sent to Sukkur, the base of operations of the Candahar column, and placed under the orders of Gen. Phayre, who commanded the reserve brigade of Gen. Sir Donald Stewart's Division. All ranks were most anxious to be sent to the front and see some real service; but, alas! vain hopes, the Transport Department was not equal to the heavy demands made upon it, and the 83rd Regt. and a battery of heavy guns, I believe 16-8th, were destined to remain in inglorious ease and discomfort at Sukkur until the Treaty of Gundamuk was signed. The guns were ultimately sent on, but the 83rd Regt. and the men of the battery (16-8th), in accordance with orders from the Commander-in-Chief of India, went back to Kurrachee, this being a part of the retrograde movement of part of Sir D. Stewart's Division from Candahar, when I-1st R.A., the 70th Regt., and 15th Hussars, and a few other regiments returned to India. From Kurrachee the regiment was moved to Belgaum, to be again broken into detachments. The 83rd Regt. have now been abroad 13 years and six months, as long as, and longer than several regiments which are to return this relief with the exception of the three which went abroad in 1866. Why should the 48th, who went out to Malta nearly 18 months after the 83rd, be given the preference and brought home before them? After being disappointed (and put to expense) in not seeing service in Afghanistan, then losing the chance of batta and possibly the medal, unless, indeed, the reserves at the several bases are allowed to participate in this advantage, it would indeed be hard on this fine old regiment to be kept abroad another year, and that out of its turn."

84th Regiment left Dublin, as arranged, on the 22nd inst., and proceeded to the Curragh Camp, to be stationed for the winter. The following officers accompanied the regiment, viz.:—Lieut.-Col. Wilson, Major Simpson, Capts. Peckitt, Theobald, and Power; Lieuts. Kirkpatrick (adjt.), Colhoun, Scholes, and Grosvenor; 2nd Lieuts. Cameron, Howe, and Woodford; Capt. and Pymr. Dougherty, and Qrmr. Boulger, V.C.

85th Light Infantry. The head-quarters and service companies are under orders to sail from Bombay on Jan. 16, in H.M.S. Jumna, for England, and are due at Portsmouth on Feb. 22.

86th Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies leave Dover this morning for Portsmouth, where they embark on board H.M.S. Crocodile for conveyance to Bermuda. The following officers go out with the regiment, viz.:—Lieut.-Col. Adams (in command), Major Gray, Brevet Major Crofton; Capts. Sir G. F. C. Travers, Bart., Chatfield, Stuart, Graham, and Jackson; Lieuts. Selby, Smyth, Haggard (adjt.), Gaussen, Swaine, Stewart, Armstrong, Scott-Plummer, Mulchinock, and Allen; 2nd Lieuts. Buckle, Herbert Welman, and Harvey Welman; Pymr. (Capt.) Luke, and Qrmr. Cleary. Capt. Stewart has been ordered to join the depôt at Belfast, pending his probable appointment to the adjutancy of the Royal South Down Light Infantry. It is thought that Capt. Harris will shortly elect to retire upon a pension. A correspondent writes:—"On the breaking-out, in 1857, of the Indian mutiny, the 86th Regt. found itself still in India, having just completed fifteen years of service in that country, the head-quarters being at Colaba, the military cantonment of Bombay, and the left wing at Aden. The two lieutenant-colonels were in command of brigades, and many of the senior lieutenants and most of the senior captains were on 'leave' in Europe and elsewhere, expecting not to have to return, as the regiment was supposed to be homeward-bound. However, the sad news from Meerut, received about May 26, changed the fate of many individuals, and the destiny for a while of this fine, soldierly regiment. People acquainted with the history of the Indian mutiny, and of the state of affairs in the Bombay Presidency, will know how Lord Elphinstone sent off every regiment he could spare to Bengal, which Presidency was in such great danger; and how for many months he had only the 86th Regt. to depend upon to guard many provinces in his own, the Bombay, Presidency. The junior lieutenant-colonel of the 86th gave up his brigade and rejoined his regiment; the wing was brought over from Aden, and the regiment was divided into five or six parts, and distributed between Surat and other places, in Guzerat, Mhow, Poonah, Belgaum, Bombay, &c. These several detachments of 100, or 150, or at most 200 men in each, had in each case to take quite the part of a whole regiment, to guard whole territories, to overawe the wavering native soldiery, and to maintain a show of superior force and of supremacy, until reinforcements could arrive from England. Their task has indeed an anxious and an arduous one, from the day the first detachment sailed from Bombay on or about May 29, until they all met together again at Mhow, about the middle of February following, to prosecute the Central India campaign, under Major-Gen. Sir Hugh Rose, which they had already commenced by the capture of Dhar and Mundesore. The capture of Chandairee, on March 17 (St. Patrick's Day), was their first achievement as an united body; and from that time until they recaptured Gwalior from the rebels, on June 18, 19, and 20, their progress through Central India, under their dashing General, was a brilliant march from victory to victory. Heat, fatigue, privation, and sickness were, so to speak, things of nought. Their colonel (South) never deserted his post; their senior major (Stuart) stood firmly by them. Unfortunately, their doctor, the senior one (Stack), was killed, the only life, amongst the officers, that was sacrificed. As an argument in favour of young hands, however, amongst the officers, a curious fatality may be noticed. The greater number of the captains were absent from the regiment on leave, or otherwise employed, and on the formation of the 2nd Battalions, which happened about that time, several of the senior subalterns were promoted out of the regiment; so that, with a few exceptions, the greater number of those who served all through the campaign, and the previous and succeeding field duties, were officers of from ten or twelve, down to two, years' service. The Indian papers were most enthusiastic at the time; the Bombay Press praised lavishly, the other papers echoed the praise. The names of Henry, Lewis, Jerome (V.C.), Mackenzie, Cochrane, Brockman, Sewell, Dartnell, &c., were at that period well known. Scindiah was reseated on his throne with great state, and it was said he wished to decorate with a Grand Star every officer who had assisted in the capture of his city. The regiment held Morar and Gwalior, and sent parties after Tantia Topee and other rebel chiefs, until it was itself despatched to England in the spring of 1859, after having been on field and active service for nearly two years."

92nd Highlanders. The head-quarters and service companies are to sail from Bombay on Jan. 11, with the 15th Hussars, in H.M.S. Euphrates, en route to England, and are timed to reach Portsmouth on Feb. 8.

105th Light Infantry. Capt. Whitehill has been selected for the adjutancy of the 1st West York Militia, in succession to Capt. Huskisson.

Rifle Brigade. The arrangements by which the 2nd Batn. was to have been brought home from Gibraltar on the return voyage of the Crocodile have been cancelled, and the battalion will be brought home instead by the Himalaya, now on the homeward voyage from India. The Indian troopship, on completing her tour in the West Indies, returns to Gibraltar with the 97th Regiment, and proceeds on to Bombay to aid in carrying out the programme of Indian reliefs.

23rd Brigade Depôt (Wrexham). The following promotions amongst the non-commissioned officers have taken place, viz.:—Qrmr.-Serjt. H. E. White promoted serjeant-major, vice Ward, discharged to pension; Pymr.-Serjt. W. Perris promoted quartermaster-serjeant, vice White; Pensioned Qrmr.-Serjt. R. McCully, late 2nd Batn. 23rd Fusiliers, has been appointed a 2nd-class pensioner-clerk in the pay office of the 23rd Sub-District, under Art. 728 Royal Warrant May 1, 1878, from the date Pymr.-Serjt. Perris vacates the appointment.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. The officers stationed in Ireland entertained Comy.-Gen. Sir E. Strickland, K.C.B., at dinner at the Shelbourne Hotel, Dublin, on the 21st inst., when the following officers were present:—Depty.-Comy.-Gen. Healy; Assist.-Comys.-Gen. Shortt, Sanders, Hunter, and Gattey; Depty.-Assist.-Comys.-Gen. Stevens, Parkin, Ward, Cousins, Winspear, Dunne, Creagh, Colebrook, and Edes; Depty.-Comy. Woollett; Vet.-Surg. Sewell; Capt. Power; and Messrs. Gallagher, O'Leary, Cooper, Collett, Phillips, and Nicholls. Numerous expressions of regret at not being able to attend were received from other officers of the department in the command.

Medical Department. Deputy-Surg.-Gen. B. Tydd died very suddenly at the Prestons, Ightham, Kent, on the 24th inst., aged 55 years. The deceased served in the Eastern Campaign of 1854-55, including the affair of Bulganac and battle of Alma (medal with a clasp, and Turkish medal). He joined the Army April 25, 1851, and became deputy-surg.-gen. March 9, 1879.

[The Editor will be glad to receive Contributions from time to time from Officers of Native Regiments who may desire to render this column interesting to friends in England.]

16TH BENGAL CAVALRY. Capt. C. A. Carthew, employed as D.A.Q.M.G., Khyber Brigade, and son of Gen. Carthew, died at Lundi Kotal, Afghanistan, on the 12th inst., aged 39 years. The deceased entered the Army, April 16, 1861; became lieut., April 1, 1865; and capt., April 16, 1873. He entered the Bengal S.C. from the 33rd Foot, and was appointed squadron-officer of the 16th B.C., Jan. 23, 1869.

4TH BENGAL N.I. Lieut.-Col. R. S. Robertson, second-in-command, from the Seconded List, has been appointed commandant, vice Col. Anderson, vacated, on proceeding to colonel's allowances, dated Sept. 2, 1880.

8TH BENGAL N.I. The regiment, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Fellows, arrived at Candahar, from Mandi Hissar on the 27th ult., and marched on the 28th to Girdab, in the Argandab Valley, where Brigdr.-Gen. James's Brigade, of which it forms part, was posted.

19TH BENGAL N.I. Lieut. C. W. Younghusband, from attached to 2nd Punjab Cavalry, has been appointed officiating squadron-officer.

34TH BENGAL N.I. Major C. S. Pratt, wing-commander, died between Calcutta and Madras, on the homeward voyage, on the 18th ult. The deceased, who was fourth son of the Rev. W. Pratt, of Hapley, Norfolk. Major Pratt joined the Army, Dec. 11, 1858; became lieut., May 27, 1860; capt., Dec. 11, 1870; and major, Dec. 11, 1878.

3RD GOORKHAS. Major R. E. K. Money, wing-commander, has been granted leave to England for two years, on medical certificate.

1ST PUNJAB CAVALRY. The Gazette of India states that the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council is pleased to sanction the admission of the under-mentioned men to the Third Class of the Order of Merit:—Duffadar Gholam Jelani: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Patkáo Shána, on July 1, 1880, in singly engaging and killing two of the enemy, armed with swords and rifles, himself receiving a severe wound in the encounter. Duffadar Chait Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Patkáo Shána, on July 1, 1880, on which occasion he killed three of the enemy, one of them being a deserter. Lance-Duffadar Mowaz Khan: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmed Khel, on April 19, 1880, on which occasion, observing that two Ghazis, armed with guns and tulwars, had taken post in a nallah, he dismounted and, holding his horse with one hand, engaged both of them, killing one in a hand-to-hand fight. Sowar Bootah Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Arzu, on April 23, 1880, in singly engaging and cutting down, in a hand-to-hand fight, two of the enemy. Sowar Jowahir Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmed Khel, on April 19, 1880, on which occasion he dismounted and attacked two of the enemy who had taken post in a nallah, killing one in a hand-to-hand encounter. Sowar Fazl Khan: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Patkáo Shána, on July 1, 1880, on which occasion he attacked and killed in succession three of the enemy, himself receiving two wounds in the encounter with the third.

3RD MADRAS N.I. Major A. W. L. Anderson has passed the examination qualifying for employment on the general or personal staff in India.

4TH MADRAS N.I. Lieut.-Col. G. C. Hodding, second-in-command, has been appointed commandant; Major J. Godson becoming second-in-command, Major J. H. M. Barnett wing-commander, and Lieut. De L. D. Passy wing-officer. Major J. H. M. Barnett has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

40TH MADRAS N.I. Capt. H. H. Kelly has passed the examination qualifying for the general or personal staff in India.

1ST SIND HORSE. Major J. Phillips, second-in-command, has returned to India, and resumed duty from leave in England.

1ST BOMBAY N.I. The following appointments have been gazetted:—Lieut.-Col. C. M. Griffith, officiating second-in-command, to officiate as commandant, vice Lieut.-Col. Anderson, wounded in action, and reported sick. Lieut. W. C. Aslett, qrmr., to officiate as second-in-command, in addition to his own duties, vice Lieut.-Col. Griffith. Lieut. F. Whitewell, wing-officer, to officiate as wing-commander, vice Capt. Grant, wounded in action, and reported sick, and also as adjt., vice Lieut. Hinde, killed in action, both in addition to his other duties. Lieut. F. Whittuck died at Candahar last month. The deceased was the younger son of Capt. Whittuck, late 82nd Foot. He obtained his commission in Jan. 1876, from the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. In Jan. 1877, he proceeded to India, and was gazetted from the Unattached List to the 17th Regt. as a probationer for the Indian S.C. He soon excelled in many of the native languages. In Dec. 1879, he was appointed wing-officer of the regiment, then in the Bolan Pass. He moved from there with the regiment to Candahar, and was present at the disastrous engagement at Maiwand under Gen. Burrows, from which he retreated on a baggage pony to Candahar, his own horse having been stolen from him. On his return, the duties in the citadel became very hard, owing to the paucity of officers. He was devoted to reconnaissance duty, and frequently volunteered to go out sketching the country. He was born on July 16, 1856, having just completed his twenty-fourth year. His sad death took place on Sept. 6, from dysentery, contracted by a severe cold whilst doing duty on the ramparts.

7TH BOMBAY N.I. Lieut.-Col. A. R. Wilson, second-in-command, retires on an ordinary pension of £365 and an annuity of £232 12s.

16TH BOMBAY N.I. "One Interested" writes:—"In your number of the 16th inst., you mention Col. Pierce's regiment as the 16th Bengal N.I. This is a mistake. It was a portion of the 16th Bombay N.I. which so gallantly defended Kuch against some ten times their numbers, beating off and pursuing the enemy, and inflicting heavy loss on them. The correspondent of the Standard at Candahar, in a letter which appeared in that paper on the 16th inst., speaks of the 19th Bombay N.I. as having behaved splendidly in the desperate sortie at Candahar on Aug. 14. Mention has been made, but particulars not given, of a successful attack made upon some stone works by a party of the 9th Bombay N.I., our loss being ten killed, besides wounded, amongst the latter being the major commanding the party. There being an endeavour to decry the Bombay Army just now, I think none of these favourable incidents should be lost sight of. How much better it would be if the eternal 'N.I.' were substituted by the words 'Bengal Infantry,' 'Bombay Infantry,' and so forth."

17TH BOMBAY N.I. Col. A. G. Plomer has returned to India from leave in England, and resumed command.

18TH BOMBAY N.I. Lieut.-Col. F. P. Forteath has returned to India from leave in England, and resumed duty as second-in-command.

27TH BOMBAY N.I. Major M. H. Nicholson, wing-commander, brig.-major 2nd Brig. 3rd Division, Northern Afghanistan Field Force, has been granted leave to England for eighteen months, on medical certificate. Capt. J. Grant has resumed duty as wing-officer, on return to India from leave in England.

6TH HYDERABAD INFANTRY. Col. E. W. Dun, commandant, appeared before a medical board at Bombay, and he embarked for England on a year's furlough. Col. H. A. Justice, second-in-command, officiates as commandant.

THE TERRITORIAL REGIMENTS.

"A General Officer" writes:—"The proposed redistribution of linked regiments which appeared in your last can hardly be rejected on the score of expense, as it will involve the shifting of only about 25 depôts, none probably very strong. The brigade depôt staff and headquarters would, of course, be unchanged, except, as you suggested, in numerical order. Soldiers enlisted specially for a particular brigade might be left behind with it, should they decline to accompany their depôts to a new sub-district, and this would materially decrease the cost of moving the depots. The following moves of depôts would take place:—73rd, Hamilton to Birr, vice 100th, removed; 100th, Birr to Derby, vice 95th, removed; 109th, Birr to Leicester, vice 45th, removed; 53rd, Shrewsbury to Birr, vice 109th, removed; 55th, Carlisle to Sunderland, vice 68th, removed; 68th, Sunderland to Shrewsbury, vice 53rd, removed; 106th, Sunderland to Pontefract, vice 65th, removed; 65th, Pontefract to Warrington, vice 82nd, removed; 84th, Pontefract to Warley, vice 56th, removed; 105th, Pontefract to Sunderland, vice 106th, removed; 63rd, Ashton-under-Lyne to Bodmin, vice 46th, removed; 82nd, Warrington to Cardiff, vice 69th, removed; 36th, Worcester to Devises, vice 62nd, removed; 69th, Cardiff to Devizes, vice 99th, removed; 62nd, Devizes to Worcestershire, vice 36th, removed; 99th, Devizes to Hamilton, vice 74th, removed; 95th, Derby to Lichfield (when built); 45th, Leicester to Lichfield (when built); 46th, Bodmin to Ashton-under-Lyne, vice 63rd, removed; 85th, Oxford to Pontefract, vice 105th, removed; 56th, Warley to Pontefract, vice 84th, removed; 78th, Fort George to Stirling, vice 74th, removed; 91st, Stirling to Hamilton, vice 73rd, removed; 94th, Hamilton to Fort George, vice 78th, removed; 98th, Lichfield to Oxford, vice 85th, removed.

"An Old Brickdust" writes:—"Allow me to record my protest against the arrangements for the 'territorial scheme,' as proposed by your correspondent, 'An Old Officer, with 35 Years' Regimental Service,' in your last issue, so far as sending the 53rd Shropshire Regiment to Birr. I can assure this 'Old Officer' that though his scheme does not abolish the time-honoured number of the 53rd, to have it carried out would be a very severe pang indeed to the regiment, of whose practical connection and sympathy with the county of which it bears the name, he must have but little knowledge."

"Highlander" writes:—"I quite approve of 'An Old Officer's' proposed linking of the 72nd and 78th Highlanders. Both regiments were raised by representatives and chiefs of the same great clan; the first by the grandson of the Earl of Seaforth, whose title was forfeited in 1715; he was created Viscount Fortrose in the Irish Peerage, and afterwards raised to the Earldom of Seaforth. The 72nd, raised in 1778, were originally the 78th, and wore the Mackenzie tartan. They even now bear the 'Caber Feidh,' as their regimental badge. The present 78th was raised in 1793, by the cousin of the last earl, who died without male issue. He, as next heir male, was created a baron of the United Kingdom, under the title of Baron Seaforth. There was a second battalion raised by him in 1794, which was afterwards disbanded. Let these regiments be united as 'An Old Officer' suggests; let them wear the same tartan,—Mackenzie; let the 72nd wear their original dress,—the kilt; let the facings be assimilated, and let the regiment be called by its old name, 'Seaforth's Highlanders.' I am not aware of any other family in Great Britain having given three battalions to the King's Service."

WINDFALLS FOR SOLDIERS' NEXT OF KIN.

SIR,—Ten pages of the latest number of the London Gazette are filled with the names and descriptions of soldiers who have died in the service of the State leaving unclaimed balances to which their next of kin are entitled. Some of these balances are of substantial amount, and would be very acceptable to soldiers' widows and orphans. Permit me, therefore, to send you the following extract:—

Pte. G. Wilson, 49th	46	12	9	Qrmr.-Serjt. Maxfield, F-A Brig. R.A.	335	9	8

If these lists were published in newspapers of universal circulation, likely to be seen by the relatives and friends of soldiers, the "Crown Windfall" (estimated at £4,000 a year) at present arising from these unclaimed balances would soon be appreciably reduced.—I am, &c.,

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1880.

THE point which has been reached in the inquiry into the causes of the loss of the Atalanta is one of extreme interest and importance, though it must be admitted that the present stage of the controversy is far from satisfactory to the non-professional public. We are often told that nothing is certain except that which can be proved by mathematics, and that it is possible to obtain absolute truth on those questions which lie within the range of mathematical science. We might, therefore, reasonably expect to find a perfect agreement between the conclusions of two such experts as Mr. Barnaby, the Director of Naval Construction at the Admiralty, and Mr. John, the Naval Architect to Lloyd's Registry of Shipping, upon what by its very nature must be a question of fact, and not of mere opinion. These two gentlemen are probably the two highest living authorities upon all matters connected with practical shipbuilding, and at the same time are two of the greatest mathematicians in this country. The question they have to determine is whether the Atalanta, as equipped for her last voyage, was capable of carrying the sail-power with which she was provided without capsizing. The data upon which they must proceed in their calculations are obviously the same as to the construction of the vessel, the stowage of her weights on board, and the dimensions of her sails. "The principles upon which the calculations are based are," to use Mr. John's own words, "so well-known, that you may as well test the multiplication-table by experiment as test them;" but the conclusions at which they arrive are for all practical purposes diametrically opposed, Mr. Barnaby maintaining that the Atalanta was a safe ship, Mr. John being of opinion that a very moderate wind-pressure would have been sufficient to capsize her. Clearly, if these gentlemen have both conducted their inquiries upon the same principles and data, one of them must have done his sum incorrectly, and the error in calculation ought not to be very difficult to ascertain; or if their calculations are equally correct, there must be some divergence of the principles on which they have based them. The question involved is a purely technical one, but it is one, nevertheless, which must be decided beyond all possibility of doubt, if we are ever to obtain any probable solution of the mystery which hangs over the fate of the Atalanta. It is even of more importance that this controversy should be settled in view of the future than of the past; for whatever may be the case as to her stability under sail, the Atalanta is unquestionably lost, and no post facto reasoning can avail her gallant crew; but if Mr. John's conclusions are ascertained to be correct, we may expect that no such catastrophe will ever again be allowed to happen. The Committee of Inquiry will, doubtless, take effectual steps to test the accuracy of the calculations made by Mr. Barnaby and Mr. John, either by referring the same questions to other independent experts, or by arranging a conference between the two gentlemen themselves, who could easily ascertain their point of divergence; and if this be found, as is most probably the case, to lie in some difference of opinion upon the principles underlying their calculations, it will be for other competent Naval architects to determine which of them is right. Nothing short of a complete and absolutely exhaustive inquiry will satisfy the public, nor, we feel sure, the Committee, who must be congratulated on the infinite pains they have already taken to collect all the evidence that in any way bears upon the subject of their investigation, and upon the wisdom they showed in submitting the question of the vessel's stability to Mr. John, instead of accepting the calculations of the Constructor's Department, a wisdom which is demonstrated by the conflict of opinion between Mr. Barnaby and Mr. John. It is reported that there are two documents which the Admiralty decline to produce to the Committee, one, a despatch of Sir Thomas Symonds, of March 2, 1876, in which he states his views on the subject of training-ships generally, with reference to the "present and proposed brigs;" the other, the Minutes of Admiral Hood and Admiral Wellesley, as Lords of the Admiralty, upon the report made by Sir Thomas Symonds, as Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, after his inspection of the Atalanta before her first cruise. It is to be hoped that the Committee will press for these papers, which would certainly seem from their description to be very material to the inquiry, and it is hardly possible to believe that their Lordships will persist in their refusal. Even should they contain confidential matter not pertinent to the inquiry, they might be confidentially submitted to the Committee, and need not be published in the evidence in extenso. To withhold them has the appearance of suppressing evidence, and the public will never be satisfied that this course is not intended to screen some high official from the consequences of neglect or bad judgment. Hitherto, everything has been so open and above-board, the whole of the proceedings have been made so public, that it would be a matter of regret if there were any semblance of concealment. It is, moreover, certain that if these or any other documents which the Committee are of opinion ought to be presented to them are withheld, the House of Commons will insist on their production.

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge and the following noblemen and gentlemen have joined the committee of the Afghan War Relief Fund, viz.:—The Earl of Northbrook, Lord Chelmsford, Hon. Edward Stanhope, General Sir A. Little, Lieutenant-General Sir John Adye, Major-General Sir G. V. Johnson, Colonel Sir Andrew Clarke, Sir Arthur Hobhouse, Sir Lewis Pelly, Sir Barrow Ellis, and W. Seton-Karr. All communications should be addressed to Captain Gildea, 20 Stafford Terrace, Kensington, W.

The regiments to return home from India with the present season's reliefs are now finally decided upon. The list is as follows, viz.:—The 15th Hussars, 2nd Battalion 1st Foot, 1st Battalion 5th Foot, 1st Battalion 6th Foot, 48th Foot, 59th Foot, 2nd Battalion 60th Foot, 66th Foot, 73rd Foot, 85th Foot, and 92nd Foot, together with I Battery C Brigade, R.H.A., and A, B, C, D, F, and G Batteries 3rd Brigade, R.A.

It will be seen that, as we anticipated, the 83rd Regiment has been struck out of the list of corps to return home, as published lately by the Quartermaster-General's Department in India.

The homeward relief season between Bombay and Portsmouth commenced on Tuesday, when the 48th Regiment left India in H.M.S. Euphrates. The 59th Regiment leaves to-morrow in the Orontes; the 2nd Battalion 1st Foot, on Friday next, in the Malabar; the 1st Battalion 5th Foot, on the 9th prox., in the Jumna; the 62nd Foot, to relieve the 1st Battalion 6th Foot at Aden, in the Serapis, on the 12th prox.; the 15th Hussars and 92nd Foot, in the Euphrates, on January 11; the 2nd Battalion 60th Foot, in the Crocodile, on January 16; the 66th Foot and 73rd Foot, in the Malabar, on January 20; the 85th Foot, in the Jumna, on January 25; and the several batteries Royal Artillery, in the Serapis, on February 6.

It has been arranged that the 2nd Battalion 1st Foot shall be stationed on arrival in Ireland, the 1st Battalion 5th Foot at Portsmouth, the 1st Battalion 6th Foot at Warley, the 48th Foot in Ireland, and the 59th Foot at Portsmouth. The stations of the 15th Hussars, 2nd Battalion 60th Foot, 66th Foot, 73rd Foot, and 85th Foot have not yet been decided upon, and will not probably be settled until the end of the year.

It may be remembered that we drew attention last year to the imperfect arrangements made on board the Indian transports for the accommodation of invalid officers, and pointed to the case of a young officer of the 63rd, Lieutenant E. C. Rothney, who, in the opinion of those on board the vessel in which he was taking passage, undoubtedly lost his life owing to the want of care which had been taken in the disposal of cabins. Though some time has elapsed since we wrote, we are glad to learn that our remarks did not pass unnoticed, and that in an order of the Secretary of State for India, recently communicated to the military authorities in India, it has been directed that "Cabin No. 9 in her Majesty's Indian troopships is in future to be appropriated for invalid officers only, on homeward voyages; and that the regular accommodation for ladies, heretofore provided for twelve per ship on such voyages, is to be restricted to eight."

The testimonial from the inhabitants of Aldershot to Provost-Marshal Trout, of the Aldershot Division, who is about to retire, after holding his appointment for a quarter of a century, has taken the form of a purse of 100 guineas and an illuminated address, referring in the most complimentary terms to Major Trout's long and most valuable services. The presentation was made a few days ago, Major Trout having already relinquished his duties, which he has carried out to the satisfaction of every General, Staff, and regimental officer who has ever done duty in the Aldershot command.

The appointment of Garrison Instructor at the Cape of Good Hope, vacant by the promotion of Captain W. E. Montague, 94th Regiment, to a substantive majority in his regiment, has been offered to, and accepted by, Brevet Major H. G. MacGregor, 29th Regiment, an officer who, on the grounds alike of war service and professional ability, possesses the strongest claims to the favourable consideration of the authorities.

Somebody has evidently been trying to "take a rise" out of the Editor of the Times. The following appeared in our contemporary's "Naval and Military" column on Wednesday:—"The colonelcy of the 21st Hussars will shortly become vacant, by the compulsory retirement of Lieutenant-General the Honourable James William Bosville Macdonald, C.B., who attains his 70th year on the 31st inst. Lieutenant-General Macdonald, who was for many years aide-de-camp and private secretary to the Duke of Cambridge, was only appointed to the 21st Hussars on July 1 last, the vacancy being caused by the death of General William Parlby." We may point out that General Macdonald will not lose his colonelcy on retirement; he not only was but is now private secretary to the Duke of Cambridge, and the colonelcy of the 21st Hussars was not rendered vacant by General Parlby's death, but by his transfer to his old regiment, the 4th Hussars.

Major R. H. Williams, Royal Engineers, having completed his seven years' service as an Instructor of Fortification at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, is to be retained in the appointment for a further period.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught rode over from Bagshot to Sandhurst on Thursday, attended by Colonel Sir H. Elphinstone, V.C., K.C.M.G., and Captain Cuffe, A.D.C., to witness the formation of a bridge from the shore to one of the islands in the Royal Military College lake by the Pontoon Troop, R.E. Train, under command of Major Bond, R.E., which was most successfully carried out with great rapidity, as well as breaking bridge, to allow of the passage of an imaginary vessel. The gentlemen cadets attended for instructional purposes, and notwithstanding the inclement weather, there was a large number of spectators. On the arrival of their Royal Highnesses, they were received by the Governor, General Napier, with whom and Mrs. Napier their Royal Highnesses afterwards partook of luncheon, which was followed by a parade of the gentlemen cadets, under the commandant, Colonel Middleton. After the parade, his Royal Highness expressed in warm terms his approval of the smart appearance of the gentlemen cadets, of their marching-past, and steadiness under arms. We hope the Duke of Connaught will repeat his visit at no very distant date, as this excellent institution has of late years been but seldom visited by Royalty, if we except the periodical visits of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, Commanding-in-Chief, who has always taken the warmest interest in the Royal Military College.

Lieutenant-Colonel W. J. Gascoigne, Scots Guards, has been appointed Commandant of the School of Instruction for officers of the Auxiliary Forces at Wellington Barracks, vice Lieutenant-Colonel W. E. Montgomery, Scots Guards, appointed Assistant Military Secretary to Lieutenant-General the Hon. Leicester Smyth, C.B., at the Cape.

We trust that for the present, at all events, the Military Authorities will pause in their career of sartorial reform. The invention of new articles of dress or equipment may prove very interesting to the æsthetic mind, but how about the unfortunate officers who have to pay for this amusement? A few weeks ago they had to put their hands into their scantily-furnished purses for the purchase of new-fashioned forage-caps. Scarcely has this been done, than out comes an order changing the badges of rank, &c. It is all very well saying that time is given to wear out the old tunics and jackets, but we may be sure that before long colonels will bring pressure on their officers to have there uniforms altered in accordance with the General Order. It is really cruel that the British subalterns should be continually taxed to provide a relaxation for the Authorities, and profit for Army outfitters. Not but what our uniform does want reform, for it is often in very bad taste, and almost always quite unfit for active service. But that change should be made for good and for all, and be decided on by a board of practical officers, not settled according to the caprices of amateur tailors.

The appointment of Chief of the Statistical Branch of the Army Medical Department in Whitehall Yard is vacant by the sudden death of Deputy-Surgeon-Major B. Tydd on Sunday last. The deceased officer took up the duties of the appointment on May 31, 1879.

In the new Prussian Army List there occur a few changes which require a passing notice, principally because they possess a personal interest. The name next to the Imperial Commander-in-Chief, being the senior Adjutant-General of the Emperor, is that of Field-Marshal Manteuffel, who appears for the first time as Commander of the Fifteenth Army Corps and Imperial Statthalter of Alsace-Lorraine. The number of Imperial Adjutants has now risen to twenty. In the War Ministry, General Kameke is observed for the first time decorated with the Order of the Black Eagle. Our attention is likewise attracted by the fact that the name of the Duke of Connaught figures, also for the first time, among the officers of the Zieten Hussars, his Royal Highness being described as "Arthur William Patrick Albert, Prince of Great Britain and Ireland, Duke of Connaught and Strathearne, Duke at Saxony," his close connection with the Prussian Royal House being marked by the distinction of the Order of the Black Eagle, with the Chain and the Star, with Swords of the Royal House Order of the Hohenzollerns, bestowed upon him. Field-Marshal Moltke has now placed against his name also the Star of the Order Pour le Mérite, by which the hitherto unparalleled case (in the Army) occurs that one of its members possesses three decorations of that Order—the Star with Oak Leaves, the Order with Oak Leaves, and the Order for Science and Arts. "Alexander I., Prince of Bulgaria," is placed amongst the officers à la suite of the Army. The number of Field-Marshals has been reduced by one, by the death of Count Roon. The place of the late Inspector-General of Artillery, General Podbielski, has been filled by General Bülow. As regards the lowest grades, figuring in the Army List, it is significant that of 105 regiments of infantry, only twelve have their full number of second lieutenants, the vacancies in the infantry of the Line amounting altogether to 410, the case being most unfavourable in the Baden regiments. The Cavalry is not much better off in this respect, the shortcomings being greatest in some of the crack regiments. The corps of officers most complete is that of the Field Artillery. There are now in the Army List 6,238 Landwehr and 5,034 Reserve officers, many of the old Prussian fighting families being strongly represented in the above numbers; thus we find 45 Arnims, 38 Bülows, and 33 Kleists.

It is very satisfactory to learn that Colonel Carrington has captured Lerothodi's village in Basutoland, with slight loss to the Colonial forces, and that the latter have had several successful skirmishes with the insurgents. Not quite so pleasant is it, however, to hear that two magistrates have been murdered, that more Basutos have taken the field, and that there are disturbances in the Transkei. The Colonial Government evidently consider that matters are serious, for they have ordered 2,000 Burghers into the field and called for 1,000 volunteers. Now that the Colony has to pay both in blood and money for its bellicose tastes, we fancy that moderate counsels will soon prevail, and that the glory of having a heaven-born military administrator, in the person of Premier Sprigg, will be deemed by some rather costly.

In bringing to notice the case of Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Brockman, 86th Regiment, as one deserving special consideration, we did so purely in the interest of the Servicc generally, in the hope that it would meet the eyes of the Military Authorities, who might reasonably and fairly deem the case worthy of at least official investigation, and possibly determine means for the early promotion of this officer to substantive rank. We are aware that the case of Colonel Brockman is only one of several, but all things considered, we still venture to think it a hard one, and worthy of exceptional treatment. We beg to remind our correspondent, "Umpire," who justly called attention in our last impression to the case of Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Twentyman, 19th Hussars, that the two cases are somewhat dissimilar. It is true that the latter officer is in rank senior to Colonel Brockman, but he is not so in service. Independently of Colonel Brockman having served continuously in his present regiment, it must be remembered that this officer was formerly in the Royal Navy, and as a midshipman earned a couple of war-medals. "Umpire" has also fallen into an error in asserting that Colonel Twentyman "is the senior captain in the Army, who is also a brevet lieutenant-colonel." Such honour belongs to Captain and Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel J. Mackenzie, of the Coast Brigade R.A., whose captain's commission is dated as far back as February 1, 1856, three years before Colonel Twentyman joined the Army. Colonel Mackenzie was commissioned while on service in the Crimea, and holds regimentally precisely the same rank now that he attained nearly twenty-five years ago. Socially, Colonel Mackenzie occupies a prominent position in the North of England, where, in addition to his military duties, he exercises magisterial functions. Colonel Mackenzie, some time since, made application to be permitted to retire on full pay, but his request was refused, on the ground of his not having attained the prescribed age, and this notwithstanding his long service of upwards of thirty-seven years. His case is one that well merits the attention of the new Deputy Adjutant-General of Royal Artillery.

In the November number of Blackwood's Magazine there is an article on Army reform which is well worth reading. The writer is a strong military conservative, with regrets for Purchase, a hatred for promotion by selection, and a fervent love for honorary colonelcies. He, however, treats the subject temperately, and, though he gravely rebukes Mr. Trevelyan for his impertinence and inaccuracy, he does full justice to Lord Cardwell. There is a touch of sarcasm in the style of this article which makes it very pleasant reading.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, Oct. 25, 1880.

cordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of Feb. 22, 1870, Navigating Lieutenant Edward Richard Connor has been placed on the Retired List of his rank from the 20th nst.; Assistant-Paymaster Ashley Norton Innes has been promoted o the rank of Paymaster in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of 21st nst.

APPOINTMENTS.

Sub-Lieutenants—Richard H. Gwynn, to the Minotaur; Richard H. L. Risk, to the Agincourt; Morris H. L. Thompson, to the Superb; John F. S. Sargant, to the Northumberland; Frederick H. Eagles, to the Boadicea; Edward L. Lowdell, to the Téméraire; Arthur Barry, to the Invincible; Richard H. Story to the Eclipse; George S. Walsh, to the Téméraire; Charles H. Dundas, to the Triumph.

Midshipman—H. G. King Hall, to the Minotaur.

Chaplain—Rev. Thos. Fox, B.A., to the Superb.

Deputy-Inspector-General of Hospitals—Henry Fegan, C.B., M.D., from R.M. Division, Portsmouth, to Jamaica Hospital.

Engineer—A. F. Brumage, to the Indus, for the Bruiser.

Assistant-Engineers—Henry A. Madge, to Pembroke, supernumerary; C. Hodder, to the Defence, as supernumerary.

Boatswain—John Widgery, to the Asia, additional, for service in Portsmouth Yard.

COASTGUARD.

Chief Boatman—Robert C. Munday, Ventnor, to be Acting Chief Officer, Rye Harbour, vice Langmaid, pensioned.

ACHILLES, Capt. E. Kelly, was undocked at Keyham Yard on Saturday, and remains in the basin to complete defects.

ALEXANDRA, Capt. Lord Walter Kerr, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir B. Seymour, K.C.B. The firing of spar-torpedoes from the steam pinnace of the Alexandra has, says the Hampshire Telegraph, been attended with considerable damage to the boat herself, and it is questionable whether practice of this kind will be continued from steam launches and pinnaces, as the officers and men could be as well instructed in the use of the spar-torpedo from less costly boats, using the steamboats only in time of emergency, when their speed would be of good service. Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour has given orders for a series of trials to be made with spar-torpedoes discharged from boats, the effects of such discharges being carefully noted and reported upon, so as to decide whether or not practice shall be continued from steamboats. It seems rather late in the day, seeing for how long a time spar-torpedoes have been in use, to discover that their discharge is damaging to the boats using them.

ASSISTANCE, Capt. C. E. Buckle, which arrived at Malta on the 23rd inst., would probably leave on Wednesday.

CARYSFORT, Capt. Stephenson, C.B., arrived at Vigo from England on the 23rd inst., having parted company with the Inconstant off Plymouth.

CHARYBDIS, Capt. Hotham, was taken into Devonport Harbour on Saturday, and took up moorings off the Dockyard. She will be paid off on Nov. 9, "all standing," as it is intended to hand her over to the Canadian Government for the purposes of a training-ship.

CONTEST, Lieut.-Com. Moysey, was en route from New Zealand to Halifax on the 16th inst., and after coaling would proceed to Bermuda.

DECOY, Lieut.-Com. Von Donop, will be detained at Gibraltar for some little time after her arrival, as she is to wait for her commanding officer, Lieut. Victor Von Donop, who has been considerately reappointed by their Lordships on the vessel being transferred from the West Coast of Africa to the Mediterranean. Some have been inclined to complain at this mark of consideration, whereby the officer who took temporary command, on Lieut. Von Donop giving up on the coast, has been deprived of his appointment. But it is to be hoped that while the Admiralty are doing a kindness with one hand, they will be enabled to find another command for the officer who took the place of the late, and present, commander of the Decoy.—Hampshire Telegraph. The Decoy left St. Vincent for Teneriffe on the 13th inst.

DIDO, Capt. C. Domvile, senior officer, was at Quitta on Sept. 20. She had arrived from Cape Coast Castle and Accra on Sept. 17, and was to sail on the 20th for Lagos, Brass River, and Fernando Po.

DRUID, Capt. Kennedy, will leave Newfoundland for Bermuda at the end of the season.

DWARF, Com. Bainbridge, was launched from patent slip at the Cape on the 2nd inst., and would be ready to join the Commodore off Knysna on the 14th inst.

EGERIA, Com. Charles Johnstone. The grounding of the Egeria off the island of Tugubau, about four months ago, is not likely to be attended with any awkward results to those responsible for the navigation of the ship, as it has been found that the waters are but incorrectly surveyed. It has been suggested, however, by those who are acquainted with the circumstances of the case that it might have been better had the commanding officer used his judgment as to anchoring, as the accident happened after sunset, and the Egeria was therefore performing the very risky task of groping her way in doubtful places after dark.—Hampshire Telegraph.

ENCHANTRESS, Staff Com. Hills, arrived at Devonport on Tuesday morning from Pembroke. Mr. Brassey, M.P., Civil Lord of the Admiralty; Mr. Shaw Lefevre, M.P., First Secretary; and Col. Pasley, R.E., Director of Works, who came round in her, left for London by the South-Western Railway. The Enchantress has since arrived at Portsmouth.

EUPHRATES, Capt. Henry Hand, left Bombay for England on the 26th inst.

FANTÔME, Com. Karslake, was refitting at Jamaica on the 7th inst., and would proceed to the north side of the island when ready.

FIREBRAND, Lieut.-Com. J. Sisson, would join the senior officer at Brass River by Sept. 26.

FLAMINGO, Com. W. H. Hall, arrived at St. John's, Newfoundland, on the 14th inst., and will proceed direct to Bermuda.

FOAM, Lieut.-Com. J. A. Baker, arrived at Quitta on Sept. 18, and would cruise, with Accra as head-quarters.

FORESTER, Lieut.-Com. S. G. Smith, was at Halifax on the 15th inst., and sails for Bermuda on arrival of mail leaving England on the 28th inst.

GANNET, Com. E. G. Bourke, was at Panama on Sept. 19, and was to sail for Honolulu on Sept. 24.

GRIFFON, Com. Boardman, was at Trinidad on the 9th inst., and would proceed to Antigua and St. Kitts. She would convey the President of St. Kitts to Anguilla at the beginning of November.

HELLESPONT. This ship has been withdrawn from Cyprus, not so much because there is any prospect of the Government giving up the island, as the fact that there is now but little call for her services, a contract having been entered into with a Liverpool firm to give passages to Government officials, &c., and stores in their line of steamers.

MIRANDA, Com. Hon. E. S. Dawson, arrived at Ascension from Madeira on the 5th inst., and sailed for Inaccessible Island, Tristan d'Acunha, and Simon's Bay on the 9th inst.

MONARCH, Capt. Tryon, C.B., sailed for the Gulf of Cattaro on the 23rd inst.

NORTHAMPTON, Capt. J. A. Fisher, flagship of Vice-Sir L. M'Clintock, was at Halifax up to the 15th inst., and would sail for Bermuda about the 26th inst.

ORWELL arrived at Castletown, Berehaven, from Bantry on the 23rd inst., and would return on the 25th inst.

PELICAN, Com. F. Dicken, arrived at Honolulu on Sept. 5, and sailed for Tahiti, on Sept. 14.

PENGUIN, Com. A. Paget, was at Callao on July 3, under orders for Honolulu.

PHŒNIX, Com. H. H. Grenfell, was refitting at Jamaica on the 7th inst., and would proceed to coast of Honduras when ready.

ROCKET, Lieut.-Com. V. Orlebar, was at Esquimault on Sept. 30, and would remain.

SEAFLOWER, Lieut. G. C. Higgins, left Plymouth Sound on Monday for Portsmouth, to lay up for the winter.

SHANNON, Capt. J. D'Arcy, was at Coquimbo on Aug. 5, and would be ready for sea by the middle of August.

SYLVIA, Com. Aldrich, arrived at Ascension from St. Helena on Sept. 25, and sailed for England on Sept. 29.

TAMAR, Capt. T. H. Royse, arrived at Teneriffe on the 24th inst., and sailed same day.

TENEDOS, Capt. Adeane, was at Antigua on the 9th inst., and would proceed to Montserrat, Barbadoes, and St. Vincent.

TOURMALINE, Capt. R. P. Dennistoun, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Saturday afternoon from Sheerness, and exchanged salutes with the Royal Adelaide. A few slight defects were made good and a supply of coal taken on board before the ship sailed to join the Detached Squadron, which she did on Wednesday, but had to put back, owing to stress of weather. The Tourmaline made a full-speed trial on her passage, and attained an average of 12·2 knots.

TRIUMPH, Capt. Markham. Letters have been received from the Commander-in-Chief, Rear-Admiral Frederick H. Stirling, in the Triumph, at Esquimault, up to Sept. 30; would sail for Callao, calling at San Francisco and Payta, on Oct. 2 (arrived at San Francisco on Oct. 8).

TURQUOISE, Capt. Medlycott, was at Society Island by last accounts, and was to return to Callao, on completion of six months' cruise.

TYNE, Com. J. E. Stokes, arrived at St. Vincent from Cape of Good Hope on the 25th inst., and proceeded to England on the 26th inst.

VIVID, Staff Com. J. R. Ryan, has been moved from Hamoaze into the basin at Devonport Dockyard to have defects made good, a leak having been discovered in her starboard coal bunker, just below the paddle-wheel.

The following men have been awarded medals for long service and good-conduct:—George R. Terry, yeoman of signals, of the Boscawen; Henry Hodges privats, R.M., of the Implacable; Richard Daly, gunner's mate, Duncan; William H. Earl, ship's steward, and William Clayton, caulker's mate, of the Vulture; Edmund Rowe, writer 2nd class, of the Excellent; John R. Newman, shipwright, of the Dasher; John C. Hughes, writer 1st class, of the Royal Adelaide; John Lewes, armourer, of the Alexandra; John Mahoney, A.B., of the Hibernia; William Winsor, chief boatswain's mate, of the Invincible; William Reid, leading stoker, of the Northampton; John Booth, shipwright, of the Flora; John Holloway, leading stoker, of the Pioneer; Tom New York, head krooman, of the Flirt; Thomas Follett, plumber's mate, of the Triumph; James Burrows, and Henry Rice (armourer), of the Charybdis; William H. Hobbs, John Smith, and James Pussey, commissioned boatmen, John Hopkins and John Stubbings, boatmen, of the Coast-guard.

USE MARGERISON'S REGISTERED WHITE WINDSOR SOAP, PRESTON.—The best and cheapest Soap in England for washing clothes, or any household purpose. In pounds, 4½d; squares, 2d. Ask for MARGERISON'S Soap, and see that the word MARGERISON is on every bar, as there are so many worthless imitations. Sold at Stores.

The Squadron is to visit Stanley, Falkland Islands, about Jan. 18 next. As these islands are now in direct postal communication with Antwerp, by the Hamburg Steam Navigation Line Cosmos, letters posted in London on Dec. 21, addressed viâ Antwerp, will most probably reach Stanley before the departure of the ships.

ADMIRALTY INSPECTION.

On Saturday evening the Enchantress, with Messrs. Shaw Lefevre and Brassey on board, arrived in Cork Harbour. Mr. Brassey visited the Guion Line steamer Batavia in the course of Sunday morning, and was honoured on leaving with a salute of five small guns. On Monday the Lords of the Admiralty landed at Haulbowline to inspect the works of the Dockyard, which have been so long in course of erection, and completed their official duties at Queenstown. Some of their Lordships returned to Plymouth by the Enchantress on Tuesday, but others preferred the passage home viâ Holyhead.

Referring to the recent Admiralty inspection at Devonport, the Western Morning News says:—"There seems to be very little question but what the scheme for providing a barracks for seamen will be realised, and that in the course of the next two or three months tenders for the erection of the structure will be invited. As to the cost involved in so elaborate and comprehensive an undertaking, a moderate estimate originally put it at a quarter of a million of money, but when the character of the work is considered, and when it is remembered over what an extent of ground a high boundary-wall will have to be carried, parties well capable of estimating the cost put it very much nearer the half than the quarter of a million of money. The erection of the structure will, of course, extend over several years, but the expenditure of so large a sum of money cannot fail to have other than a most beneficial effect upon the material interests of the locality. Colonel Pasley, R.E., who planned the Engineer Students' College, so excellently put out of hand by the contractor, Mr. Pethick, is the architect for the Naval barracks, and there is every reason to believe that in connection with the barracks, as is the case with the College, the ornamental will not be lost sight of. The Lords of the Admiralty, in the course of their recent visit to the College, expressed their very great gratification at the manner in which the structure had been completed by the contractor, and Col. Pasley was complimented on the character and style of his designs. The architect and contractor are the same in connection with the new dock in the yard at Devonport, and here again their Lordships expressed themselves highly gratified at the nature of the structure. The work, which has been in progress for nearly four years, will be completed within the next twelve months. Huge blocks of Cornish granite are now being let into the sides of the dock, which, when completed at a cost of a quarter of a million of money, will be the finest in existence in the world."

Admiral Sir George Elliot has accepted the office of chairman of the board of directors of the Imperial Continental Water Corporation, of which board Major-General Charles Hodgson, R.E., late chief engineer and secretary to Government, N.W. Provinces of India, is also a member. Reference to the prospectus, which will be found in another column, will give an idea of the vast field open to this enterprise, and the remunerative nature of waterworks is shown by a glance at the dividends now being paid by the Metropolitan companies, as well as by those in country towns such as Bristol and Portsmouth, both of which pay more than ten per cent. Indeed, the reported organised opposition of the Metropolitan companies to the suggested surrender of their property is a sufficient proof that water pays. But it is not alone in the supply of water that the Imperial Continental Water Corporation will look for its business, but also in the execution of waterworks, docks, canals, harbour works, drainage works, reclaiming, fertilising, and irrigating lands, or any public or other works, and to operate or maintain the same on the Continent, in the United Kingdom, or elsewhere. Already the Corporation has obtained an important concession for supplying the western districts of Vienna with water. The soundness of the undertaking may be judged from the fact that the staff of consulting engineers consists of the president, vice-president, and a member of the council of the Institution of Civil Engineers. Of the 50,000 shares, 7,565 have already been privately subscribed for and allotted, thus showing the confidence felt in the undertaking by those intimately acquainted with it.

MR. BARNABY AND MR. JOHN.

We have previously noted in these columns the progress of the controversy which has arisen between the Chief Constructor at the Admiralty and Mr. John, of Lloyd's, on the question of the stability of the Atalanta. The views of these gentlemen are so antagonistic that there is no room for doubt that one of them must be in the wrong, and we trust that this point will be fully cleared up by the Committee before they issue their report. To Mr. John's views Mr. Barnaby wrote a memorandum in reply, but the representative of Lloyd's sees no reason to alter his opinion, or to adopt in any way the reasoning of the Admiralty Constructor. On the contrary, Mr. John points to the arguments by which Mr. Barnaby has been misled, and says :—

"I have read Mr. Barnaby's memorandum on my evidence very carefully, and after having given it my best consideration, I am unable to find any grounds for altering or qualifying my evidence as to the stability of the Atalanta and the probability of her having been capsized in a squall. None of the curves of stability used by me for comparison with the Atalanta have been made since her loss, or for the purpose of this inquiry. They were made a few years ago, in connection with an extensive inquiry relating to the masting and stability under sail of vessels of the Mercantile Marine. The only sense in which they were 'selected' at that time was because they were considered typical ships, and likely to give wide scope and application to the results of the investigation. The Stuart Hahnemann had been included in this category before her loss. Having heard all the evidence at the official inquiry into the loss of the vessel, and had possession of the drawings and documents relating to the ship, and personally questioned the survivors, I do not share Mr. Barnaby's opinion that the reported angle of heel at which the ship was sailing before her loss indicates either less stiffness than estimated by me, or that the cargo might possibly have shifted. It reminded me, I may say, very strongly at the time of the inquiry, of the angle at which H.M.S. Captain was sailing just before she met with a similar fate. I am much surprised that Mr. Barnaby has refused to accept the method of comparison set forth on my diagram No. 4. He is quite mistaken in supposing that a small ship must appear at a disadvantage when compared in that manner with a much larger one. All ground for objection on this score is eliminated by the method of constructing the curves, and the comparison is really true so long as small ships and large ones are exposed to the same winds and storms. Mr. Barnaby's statement, as 'a fact well known to naval architects,' that 'as ships decrease in size so the number representing the sail-carrying power diminishes,' is to me most astonishing. Indeed, the statement itself, combined with the reasoning on which it is based, constitute to my mind a doctrine absolutely fatal to the safety of small ships, and one which I have never before heard advanced or seen acted upon. I have purposely made the foregoing comments as brief as possible, as I recognise the tendency of a controversy of so technical a character to become interminable, and I would proceed no further were it not for the fact that there is a very grave and important principle involved in the difference between Mr. Barnaby and myself as to the method of comparison adopted by me for illustrating the relative safety of the Atalanta with other ships under canvas. I have stated above that this mode of comparison does not, as Mr. Barnaby supposes, show small vessels unfavourably with large ones. This is a position which it is necessary I should establish in order to render my comparisons of any value. In my diagram No. 4, which shows the curves of comparative stiffness under canvas for the Atalanta, the Eurydice, the Stuart Hahnemann, and the Ariel, the ordinates are obtained, as I explained in my evidence, by multiplying the ordinates of the usual curves of stability by the displacement, thereby giving at each angle of heel the actual moment of statical stability, and then by dividing this by the moment of sails. The curve of statical stability alone is obviously of different significance according as the vessel has a greater or less spread of canvas, and the diagram objected to simply records this proportion between the moment of stability and the moment of sail. The only step necessary to be taken to transform these ordinates into direct representatives of wind-pressure is to divide each ordinate of each curve by the (cosine) (^{2}) of the angle of inclination. This being so, it will be evident that the method of comparison is one resting purely on a basis of wind-pressure, and has, therefore, no special reference to the size of the ship. To show this more clearly I have, at the request of the Committee, taken a vessel of nearly the same displacement as the Atalanta. This is the Lucy Compton, of 787 tons displacement, most of the particulars of whose stability had been investigated for the purpose of the inquiry in connection with the masting of vessels of the Mercantile Marine, before alluded to :—She is somewhat less in displacement than the Atalanta, but is the nearest in size to her that I have the necessary curves for. Her registered dimensions are 148 ft. by 26 ft. 9 in., by 14 ft., and gross registered tonnage 340. Her metacentric height is estimated at 3 ft. 6 in., as in the other merchant vessels cited, and this would be very nearly her ordinary condition of loading. The power to carry sail, as represented by the Admiralty formula, would be 20·45, compared with 16·4 for the Atalanta. On diagram No. 5 are shown the ordinary curves of stability of the Atalanta and the Lucy Compton. Diagram No. 6 shows the curves of comparative stiffness under their canvas, similar to those given on diagram 4, attached to my evidence,—viz., by dividing the moment of stability at each angle of heel by the moment of sails. It will be seen that here the Lucy Compton is far superior to the Atalanta, although she has 20 per cent. less displacement, instead of appearing 'at a disadvantage,' as the smaller ship would, according to Mr. Barnaby. In order still further to simplify the comparison, I have divided the ordinates of these curves by the (cosine) (^{2}) of the angle of inclination, and set up the results as ordinates of curves, as shown on diagram No. 7. These curves indicate purely and simply the wind-pressure per square foot that would be necessary to hold each vessel over to the respective angles of heel. On this diagram I have shown corresponding curves for the Captain, the Eurydice, the Atalanta (when equipped as the Juno, and on her last cruise), the Stuart Hahnemann, the Ariel, and the Lucy Compton. The comparison here is really identical in substance with that previously given in my diagram 4, but it is perhaps more instructive. It will be seen there is a great and characteristic difference between the curves for the Ariel and Lucy Compton on the one hand and the other vessels, three of which are known to have capsized; and the difference arises entirely from the fact that those two vessels, if thrown on their beam-ends by a squall, would have the power of righting themselves; whereas the other vessels would not be able to do so. Put in other words, it means that the effect of the wind on the sails of the Lucy Compton and Ariel, however severe the storm, would lose its effect before the vessels lost their stability; whereas, in the other vessels, whose curves turn down suddenly, as shown on the diagram, the stability might fail the vessels before they could get relief from the sail-pressure. This marks a most important feature as regards the safety of a ship in an emergency, and in view of the many known cases where ships have been thrown upon their beam-ends, it is a property to the possession of which sufficient importance has hitherto scarcely been attached, and the possession of it doubtless becomes more and more imperative the larger the spread of canvas is compared with the displacement of the ship. It is obviously as necessary to the safety of small vessels as large ones to be able to recover if thrown on their beam-ends, and this property is very commonly shared by well-laden sailing-ships of the Mercantile Marine, provided their cargoes are properly secured against shifting. On the other hand, it was greatly wanting in vessels of the Symondite type, and accounts, in my opinion, for many early losses, as well as for that of the Atalanta. And here it might be pointed out as a most essential difference between an ordinary merchant ship and a Symondite, that if the cargo be stowed in the former too high for absolute safety, the ship shows it by her tenderness the moment sail is put on her, and she would have to be re-stowed or nursed carefully on her voyage. She could not, in fact, appear stiff under her canvas at small angles, and still be capsizable. One other case of importance is worth discussing, viz., the effect of hurricanes on the vessels after sail has been shortened or taken in altogether. Obviously, in such cases the wind-pressure may become so intense that its action on the vessel's side alone may have an appreciable effect on the stability. Taking this in conjunction with the plain sail, the respective curves of sail-carrying power become modified (in the manner shown by diagrams to which references are given). (One curve given is that at which the Captain was sailing under double-reefed topsails at the time of her loss.) The wind-pressures are high in all cases, but it is in still water, and it appears much higher than it really would be with the vessel rolling at sea, and with a deep roller like the Atalanta it would certainly be reduced more than with a comparatively steady ship like the Captain. Another illustration may be given from the case of yachts. The difference betwen a vessel of the Atalanta type and those of the Ariel or Lucy Compton types is the same kind as between the American and English types of yachts. The former yachts gain large initial stability by means of large beam, but it is combined with a danger of capsizing (the Mohawk, said to have a range of 80 degrees, capsized at anchor); whereas the English yachts, by comparatively small beam and low ballast, combine the necessary amount of initial stability, with the power of righting themselves if thrown on their beam-ends. Having thus far established the soundness of my method of comparison, it is necessary to examine the arguments by which Mr. Barnaby has been misled. I will quote the exact words. He says :—'Now, it is a fact well known to naval architects that the usual or Admiralty practice of denoting sail-carrying power by numbers can only be safely applied in comparisons made between ships of similar type and of approximately the same displacement, and that as ships decrease in size, so the number representing the sail-carrying power diminishes. The reason of this diminution may be briefly stated. The total sail spread in a ship is usually determined with reference to her resistance, so that in similar ships of different sizes the sail spreads very approximately as the squares of the lineal dimensions. The moment of sail would therefore be, roughly, as the cubes of the lineal dimensions, whereas the moment of stability in similar ships similarly stowed would be as the fourth power. In such curves as those given by Mr. John in Fig. 4 the same thing holds good, and consequently, a small ship must appear at a disadvantage when compared in that manner with a much larger one. Hence we attach no importance to the comparison between the Atalanta, of about 1,000 tons displacement, and the Stuart Hahnemann, of nearly 4,000 tons.' This is at once disproved by the figures given in my evidence, and for the very ships themselves. As a matter fact, of the number representing the sail-carrying power obtained by 'the usual or Admiralty practice,' is almost identical, but slightly higher in the Atalanta, of 1,000 tons displacement, than in the Stuart Hahnemann, of 4,000 tons; is slightly higher than the Inconstant, of nearly 6,000 tons displacement, and slightly less than the Active, of 3,000 tons; and also less than the Lucy Compton, of 800 tons. Obviously, then, there is a fallacy contained in Mr. Barnaby's reasoning. It lies in the statement that the sail area is fixed with reference to the speed, and without reference to the stability. In ships built to exactly the same model and similarly loaded, the stability diminishes, it is true, as the fourth power of the lineal dimensions; but it is equally true that if the moment of sail is made to diminish only as the cube as stated, it is only a question of building a vessel small enough to insure that, designed on this principle, she will capsize. The argument is a curious inversion of the lines of thought that should guide naval architecture, and it could never be followed out in practice without disaster. The true deduction is that large ships and small ships must not be built, masted, and weighted from the same model, because if they are so the large one will be too stiff or the small one too tender; the one might be able to carry sails in a hurricane, the other might capsize in a moderate breeze, and, obviously, it is necessary that the stability should be made sufficient to enable vessels, whether small or large, to carry their sails with equal safety. The conclusion that the sail carried does not depend upon the stability, and that any law exists preventing the latter being made commensurate in proportion to the former in small ships as well as large ones is quite untenable, as is also the doctrine that small ships must appear at a disadvantage with large ones when submitted to a comparison that records simply the relative proportion of the moment of the sail to the moment of stability."

ROYAL SEAMEN & MARINES' ORPHAN SCHOOL.

At the annual meeting of the Portsmouth Royal Seamen and Marines' Orphan School and Female Orphan Home, held on Trafalgar Day, at the Home, Admiral A. P. Ryder, Commander-in-Chief at the port, presided, and amongst those present were :—Rear-Admiral and Mrs. Foley, the Revs. G. G. W. Clemenger, E. S. Phelps (hon. sec.), and H. Hawkes; Admiral Sir Lewis Jones, Rear-Admiral Raby, V.C.; Major-Gen. Alexander, J.P.; Capt. Sir M. Culme Seymour, Bart., R.N.; Com. Mathias, Capt. Jolliffe, Messrs. G. Long, J.P. (hon. treasurer), J. Griffin, J.P.; W. Treadgold, H. Lewis, &c. The boys and girls belonging to the school were in attendance. Letters of regret at inability to be present were received from Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy, Admiral Sir Thomas Pasley, Admiral Hallowes, the Rev. J. T. Maine, J.P.; and his Worship the Mayor. The hon. sec. read the annual report. The directors have decided to invite donations towards a fund for erecting an additional wing to the present building, to accommodate some 50 girls, taking them at a somewhat earlier age. The cost of the wing will be about £3,000, and in dependence upon the same liberality which has raised the institution to its present position, it has been resolved temporarily to invest a part of the balance in hand, in the hope that it may not be required for current expenses, but accumulate for the furnishing of the wing when built. There are now in the Home 138 girls. Nine have left for domestic service, eight have been withdrawn by relatives able to provide for them, and two have gone home, being constitutionally unfit for domestic service. There have been, as usual, some girls of delicate constitution requiring great care and attention, but the general health of the inmates has been such as to call for much thankfulness. The boys' school has been conducted as satisfactorily as heretofore. The breakfast, which was first given just before the last anniversary, has been much appreciated. Seventeen boys have left; seven for Greenwich school, one for Wandsworth, two for her Majesty's dockyard, five for private service, and two have left the place with their mothers. The Rev. E. A. Williams, chaplain, R.M.A., writes a favourable report of his examination of the girls' school at Christmas, and remarks that it was evident that "equal attention must have been paid by the teachers to all children alike." The Rev. S. Davies, H.M.S. St. Vincent, says that the examination of the girls' school at Midsummer had given him great pleasure, adding, "The teachers must have taken great pains with every child in the school, instead of, as is often the case, giving special attention to the most promising pupils." The Rev. G. W. Clemenger reports that he was much pleased with the result of his examination of the boys' school at Christmas, as also does the Rev. Thomas Ashe, H.M.S. Excellent, of his examination at Midsummer. The result of the examinations has been that in several classes of both schools more than one pupil has been recommended for a prize; and in consequence of a very liberal present of books by Lieut.-Col. Percy Smith, R.E., each pupil recommended at the two examinations will receive one. The First and other Lords of the Admiralty came to the establishment during their late visit of inspection to the port. It may be concluded that their Lordships were well satisfied with what they saw, from the fact that the Earl of Northbrook having given a donation of £25, and their Lordships conjointly £5 as a contribution to the ball fund. It is very gratifying to observe that a great increase in donations has arisen from ships in commission, the two Portsmouth Divisions of Royal Marines, from their offertories, canteen fund, and entertainments.

The Imperial Russian yacht Livadia, which left Brest last Tuesday evening, was compelled to put into Ferrol on Friday at noon for repairs, her temporary disablement being at first attributed to severe weather encountered in the Bay of Biscay. It is now stated that on Thursday morning, when the gale was at its height, "a great shock was felt at the bow of the Livadia, causing a leakage," and that "since anchoring at Ferrol, it has been ascertained by inspection that the bow was struck by some floating wreckage, which pierced the plating."

ROWLAND'S ODONTO is the purest and most fragrant Tooth Powder ever used, and contains no acid or mineral ingredients, which are so detrimental to the teeth and gums. All who have a good set of teeth, and wish to keep them, should use it; and they who, by early neglect or ill-health, suffer from discoloured or imperfect teeth, which are the forerunners of dyspepsia and indigestion, will find that ROWLAND'S ODONTO will keep them sound and white, and prevent and arrest decay. Its purity especially adapts it for the teeth of young children. Ask any chemist for Rowland's Odonto.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets, labelled—"JAMES EPPS AND CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London."—Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence, for afternoon use.

Obituary.

Major-Gen. E. W. D. Lowe, C.B., died at 11 Upper Berkeley Street, on the 21st inst. Gen. Low was son of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Hudson Lowe, K.C.B., Governor of St. Helena, who was in charge of Napoleon during his captivity in that island. He was born in 1825, and was consequently in his 56th year. He served with the 32nd Regt. at the first and second siege operations before Mooltan, including the attack on the enemy's position in front of the advanced trenches on Sept. 12, 1848, on which occasion he succeeded to the command of the companies of the 32nd that were engaged. He was also present at the action of Soorjkoond, storm and capture of the city and surrender of the fortress of Mooltan, surrender of the force and garrison of Cheniote, and battle of Goojeret (medal with two clasps). His services are thus enumerated:—He served throughout the suppression of the Indian Mutiny of 1857-59; commanded the 32nd during the defence of the Residency of Lucknow, till wounded on Sept. 26; commanded a sortie of 130 men of the regiment, when seven guns and the enemy's position were captured; commanded a party of the regiment sent out to assist the rear-guard of Havelock's force in protecting their heavy guns and ammunition on their coming into Lucknow (thanked in despatch); was slightly wounded on Aug. 20, and severely wounded on Sept. 26, 1857 (mentioned in despatches of Sir J. Inglis and the Governor-General, brevet of lieut.-col., and C.B.); commanded the 32nd at the defeat of the Gwalior rebels at Cawnpore on Dec. 6; was with it in the field in Oude from July, 1858, to 1859 (in command from Dec. 1, 1858), including the reduction of Fort Tyrhool; commanded an advanced post of all arms nearest to the fort of Amathee until Lord Clyde advanced upon it (medal with clasps, and a year's service for Lucknow). The deceased officer's commissions bore date as follows:—Cornet, May 20, 1837; lieut., March 12, 1841; capt., May 23, 1845; major, July, 1857; lieut.-col., March 24, 1858; col., June 2, 1863; and major-gen., Nov. 18, 1868.

Major-Gen. G. W. Osborne, on the Retired List, late of the Indian Army, died at 5 Lower Seymour Street, London, on the 21st inst., aged 72 years.

Col. T. Rattray, C.B., C.S.I., Bengal S.C., died at Grosvenor Lodge, Sherborne, Dorset, on the 21st inst., aged 60 years. Col. Rattray served the campaign of 1842 in Afghanistan under Gen. Pollock, and was severely wounded at the forcing of the Khyber Pass (medal). Served with the force under Sir Charles Napier against the hill tribes in Sind in 1844-45. In 1856 raised and disciplined a body of Sikhs (now the 45th Bengal N.I.—Rattray's Sikhs) for service in the Sonthal Pergunnahs; commanded them throughout the Sepoy mutiny of 1857-58, and present at the actions of Gya, Akherpore, Dhunchooa, Jugdeespore, Nonoodhee, and Kusma (brevet of major, medal, and several times thanked by Government). He joined the Army Dec. 10, 1839; became lieut., Jan. 24, 1842; capt., Feb. 1, 1854; brevet major, May 1, 1858; major, Feb. 18, 1861; lieut.-col., Dec. 10, 1870; and col., Dec. 10, 1875.

Capt. Henry Barnard Hankey, R.N., a younger brother of Capt. F. T. B. Hankey, R.N., died at Southsea on the 25th inst., aged 62. He entered the Navy in 1832, and served as mate in the Britannia, and for three years in the Agincourt, flagship of Sir A. Ommanney and Sir T. J. Cochrane on the Mediterranean and East India stations. He was promoted July 2, 1845, to a lieutenancy in the Hazard, Capt. F. P. Egerton. During an expedition conducted in July 1846 by Sir T. J. Cochrane, against the Sultan of Borneo, he officiated as beach-master, and assisted at the capture and destruction of the enemy's forts and batteries up the river Brune. He was paid off from the Hazard May 6, 1847, and from Nov. 1848 until 1851 served successively in the Hibernia and Queen, Capt. Charles Wise, in the Mediterranean. He was afterwards, from Sept. 30, 1853, until promoted to commander (April 26), 1855, flag-lieutenant at Portsmouth to Vice-Admiral Sir T. J. Cochrane, K.C.B. He became retired captain April 26, 1870.

Com. Hastings St. John de Robeck, R.N., second son of the late Baron de Robeck, of Kildare, Ireland, died at Malta of apoplexy on the 17th inst., in his 49th year. He served successively, as mate and lieutenant, in the Philomel, Com. John D. MacSkene, on the West Coast of Africa, from Sept. 16, 1853, until paid off in 1856, and in May, 1859, was appointed lieutenant of the Brisk, Capt. Algernon F. de Horsey, fitting for the Cape of Good Hope, where he remained until Aug. 1860. He was afterwards employed in the Ajax, Coastguard ship at Kingstown, from July, 1861, until April, 1863, when he was appointed flag lieutenant to Rear-Admiral H. R. Yelverton, C.B., in the Caledonia, fitting for the Mediterranean, and was promoted to commander, April 11, 1866. He was inspecting commander of the Coastguard Division at Queenstown, from April, 1870, until he retired in 1873, and in Jan. 1876, received the appointment of port superintendent at Malta.

Staff Surgeon Alexander Crosbie, R.N., M.D., died at Haslar Hospital, Gosport, on the 16th inst. He served in the Neptune, Capts. F. A. Campbell and G. T. P. Hornby, in the Mediterranean as assistant-surgeon from April 5, 1861, until paid off at the close of 1862; and in February, 1863, was appointed to the Terror as additional, for service at Bermuda Yard, and remained until promoted, March 5, 1867. He was surgeon in the Virago, in Australia, from April, 1867, until paid off, November, 1871; and staff surgeon in the Challenger, surveying and discovery ship, from November, 1872, until paid off in June, 1876. He was afterwards, from August, 1876, until August, 1879, staff surgeon in the St. Vincent, training-ship, at Portsmouth.

Paymaster-in-Chief Charles George Burney, R.N., died at 38 Victoria Road, Charlton, on the 19th inst., aged 58. He became a clerk in the Royal Navy, Nov. 21, 1842, and served successively as paymaster and purser in the Alert and Waterwitch, Coms. Charles J. Bosanquet and R. R. Quin, on the coast of Africa, from April, 1845, until June, 1851. In Aug. 1852, he was appointed to the Bittern, Com. E. W. Vansittart, fitting for the East Indies, and remained until 1857. He afterwards served in the Cornwallis, Coastguard-ship, in the Humber, from Oct. 1858, until Jan. 1862, when he was transferred to the Euryalus, fitting for the flag, at China, of Vice-Admiral Sir A. L. Kuper, and returned in her to England, and was paid off Sept. 23, 1865. From Dec. 1865 till Dec. 1868, he served in the Fisgard, at Woolwich, and on Jan. 1, 1874, attained the rank of paymaster-in-chief.

A London correspondent writes:—"The War Office recently proposed that lieutenants and 2nd-lieutenants of the Army should be bracketed together in the table of relative rank with officers of the Royal Navy, instead of being kept distinct, as at present. This, of course, meant nothing more or less than that 2nd-lieutenants should be given a step in relative rank which would have placed them before midshipmen, clerks, and warrant officers. The idea was perhaps ingenious, and it might have been hoped that it would have escaped opposition at the Admiralty, seeing how slow their Lordships are too often in protecting the dignity of the smaller fry of the Naval Service. But in this case I am more than glad to hear that the War Office has received a letter from the Department at Whitehall in which objection is made to the proposal on the ground that it would be unjust to deprive warrant and subordinate officers of the Navy of the place they have so long held on the table of relative rank."

The Imperial German corvette Hertha, Capt. Von Kall, put into Plymouth Sound on Monday. She is from Kiel, for Madeira and Australia, on a training voyage round the world. She will coal, and proceed to-day.

Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil.—Its Unequalled Efficacy in General Debility and Emaciation.—In cases of Debility and Emaciation, the powerful curative influence of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is graphically described by Sir Henry Marsh, Bart, M.D., Physician in Ordinary to the Queen in Ireland, who, after extensive use, strongly recommended this preparation, and observed:—"I have frequently prescribed Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil. I consider it to be a very pure Oil, not likely to create disgust, and a therapeutic agent of great value." This eminent Physician remarks:—"With strumous and emaciated subjects, and where the general health is impaired, this remedy tells with peculiar efficacy. The reviving and reanimating effects of a regular daily course of this animal Oil are highly satisfactory. Its favourable action on the system is renovating; it checks progressive emaciation, restores the yielding health, rebuilds, as it were, the tottering frame, and brings about a most remarkable and salutary change in all the vital functions." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s; with his stamp and signature and the signature of his sole consignees on the capsule, and the label under wrapper, by all chemists. Sole Consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77 Strand, London.

Amusements.

New candidates for distinction are being rapidly introduced at Her Majesty's Theatre during the present autumnal season of Italian opera at reduced prices. Of these, the most promising is Mdlle. Rosina Isidor, who has made her début in England as the heroine of "Lucia di Lammermoor." Long heard in Italy, her voice has lost much of its early freshness, but it is of pure quality; and her addition to the company is of undoubted importance. On Tuesday night another Norma was brought forward, in the person of Mdlle. Lorenzini-Giandi, whose reception was encouraging, but whose talents can only be critically estimated on future occasions. It is worth while to point out to officers stationed at Aldershot, Woolwich, Hounslow, &c., that the comparatively early hour at which it has been arranged for the performance to end enables them, as well those residing in the suburbs of London, to return by the late trains, without being hurried, or having to leave before the conclusion of the opera.

Mr. Dion Boucicault's new Irish drama, "The O'Dowd," first brought out in New York four years ago, is not drawing at the Adelphi those large audiences anticipated. The discovery that the prominent character is only an Hibernian version of Mr. Robson's Sampson Burr in "The Porter's Knot" was not favourable to the fortunes of the piece, and the absence of that novel presentation of Irish life, so obtrusively promised in the preliminary placards, undoubtedly provoked general disappointment. Mr. Boucicault the actor has, however, saved Mr. Boucicault the author from utter failure; and if the dramatist has done nothing else, he has certainly added a memorable picture to the stage portrait-gallery.

A new first part has been introduced into Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's always attractive entertainment at St. George's Hall. It is entitled "The Turquoise Ring," the libretto of an agreeable trifle by Mr. G. W. Godfrey and Mr. E. W. Craigie, being furnished with lively music by Mr. Lionel Benson. It proved perfectly successful. The new musical sketch by Mr. Corney Grain, entitled "The Haunted Room," is thoroughly appropriate to the season of mists and mysteries, and will form, for many a night to come, the subject of genial and ghostly discussion round the family fireside.

The burlesque of "The Corsican Brothers and Co. (Limited)," produced at the Gaiety on Monday night, is a harmless squib, and special reference is made by the two authors, Messrs. Burnand and Pottinger Stephens, to the entire absence of malice in their chaff. The latest burlesque of the drama, now being so successfully played at the Lyceum that extra morning performances are given every Wednesday, owes much to the varied talents of Mr E. W. Royce, Miss E. Farren, and Miss Kate Vaughan; while the substituted scene of the gardens of Mabille for the Grand Opera of Paris derives its chief attraction from the stilt-walking movements of the Rajade troupe, seen for some time at the Aquarium.

The new Princess's Theatre was announced to open for the season this (Saturday) evening, with "Hamlet," Mr. Edwin Booth, the American tragedian, playing the Danish Prince, a character closely associated with his popularity in the United States. But Mr. Walter Gooch writes to us to say that at the last moment he finds it advisable to postpone opening the theatre for a week, as he wishes all to be complete and in thorough order.

To-night will witness the production of the new comic opera, "Billee Taylor," by Messrs. Solomon and Stephens, at the Royal Aquarium Theatre.

A Healthy Trim versus Superfluous Fat.—Eno's Fruit Salt acts as simply, yet just as powerfully, on the animal system, as sunshine does on the vegetable world. It has a natural action on the organs of digestion, absorption, circulation, respiration, secretion, and excretion, and thus removes and hinders (by natural means) the unnatural and dangerous accumulation of Fat. It keeps the body in healthy Trim, by preserving and restoring health. Instead of being lowering to the system, this preparation is in the highest degree invigorating. It supplies the want of ripe fruit, so essential to animal economy, and may be taken as an invigorating and cooling draught under any circumstances from infancy to old age, and may be continued for any length of time, and looked upon as being Pure Fruit Salt, the product of ripe fruit. It is impossible to overstate its value; on that account, no household ought to be without it, for by its use many disastrous results may be entirely prevented. In the nursery, it is beyond praise.—Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

THE SOUTH-AFRICAN CAMPAIGN, 1879.

COMPILED BY

J. P. MACKINNON, late 25th K.O.B.'s, formerly 72nd Highlanders,

AND

SYDNEY SHADBOLT,

Of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

And Dedicated, by Permission, to Field-Marshal H.R.H. the DUKE of CAMBRIDGE, Commanding-in-Chief.

Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, and RIVINGTON will issue the above memorial work in the course of next month. It contains Cabinet Portraits, finely reproduced by the Woodbury process of photography, of the Officers of the British Army and Navy who lost their lives in the late war, together with Biographies compiled from materials furnished by their relatives and surviving comrades.

By permission of the Empress Eugénie, the list is headed with a Photograph and brief Memoir of His late Imperial Highness Prince Louis Napoleon.

Introductory to the artistic portion of the work there is a Sketch of the War, embodying detailed accounts of the various engagements, and containing Maps of the Country showing the movements of the Army.

Appended to the work is a complete List of all the Officers of the British Army and Navy who were engaged in the campaign, viz.:—Officers who were employed on special service; Officers of the King's Dragoon Guards, the 17th Lancers, the Royal Artillery, the Royal Engineers, the 2-3rd, 2-4th, 1-13th, 2-21st, 1-24th, 2-24th, 57th, 58th, 3-60th, 80th, 88th, 90th, 91st, 94th, and 99th Foot, the Commissariat Department, the Ordnance Store Department, the Army Medical Department, the Army Hospital Corps, and the Naval Brigade, with separate records of their services. The Appendix also includes summaries of the movements of the various Regiments.

Intending purchasers who may be desirous to obtain copies of the first issue of this work are requested to forward remittances to the Publishers,

The Directors of the IMPERIAL CONTINENTAL WATER CORPORATION, LIMITED, are prepared to receive application for 23,685 Six per Cent. Perpetual Preference Shares, and 18,750 Ordinary Shares of £20 each, forming together the unissued balance of Share Capital of the Corporation, payable :—

10s. per Share	on Application.
£2 per Share	on Allotment.
£2 10s. per Share	on the 15th January, 1881.

The Preference Shares will rank for dividend at £6 per cent. per annum from the date of payment of the amounts to the Bankers of the Corporation, and applicants so desiring will be allowed the privilege of paying the same in full on allotment, or at any time in anticipation of calls.

The IMPERIAL CONTINENTAL WATER CORPORATION, LIMITED, has been formed mainly for the purpose of establishing Waterworks in Great Britain, in the Colonies, on the Continent, and in foreign countries.

It is the intention generally to retain as the property of the Corporation the Waterworks constructed, thus forming a comprehensive Water Trust, but where, as in the following instance, the works are of considerable magnitude, they may, in the interest of the Corporation, be handed over to separate Companies.

An important concession for supplying the Western districts of Vienna with water has been acquired by the Corporation, and transferred to the Vienna (West) Waterworks Company, Limited, in consideration of that Company having granted to the Corporation a contract for constructing a comprehensive system of Waterworks, for supplying the above districts with a constant service. This contract is expected to be completed in about two years, and will yield a considerable profit to the Corporation, after providing for all contingencies.

Proposals for supplying several other important cities with waterworks are now under the consideration of the Board, and great care will be taken to accept only such undertakings as possess liberal government or municipal guarantees, or afford evidence of yielding a substantial return on the capital invested in their construction.

The field for the Company's operations in the United Kingdom alone is obviously a very large one. Comparatively few towns in Great Britain possess waterworks which are equal to the requirements of the population, and the necessity of taking steps to provide the Metropolis itself with a further and adequate supply of water has been now publicly and officially recognised.

Power has been taken in the Articles to acquire any existing waterworks, and to extend and improve the same, or to undertake any other public works which the Directors may consider desirable in the interest of the Corporation.

An efficient staff of Engineers has been appointed, who will devote the whole of their time and attention to the works of the Corporation; and the Directors have secured the co-operation of a gentleman who has carried out large undertakings in all parts of the world, and who arranged the Vienna business, to aid in directing their operations. Three eminent members of the engineering profession have also been retained as Consulting Engineers.

Waterworks are justly regarded by the public with great favour for investment, in consequence of the solid character of the security, the regular and increasing value of such properties, and the substantial dividends they pay.

It is the intention of the Directors to call up at present only £5 per Share, and to raise any further Capital required by the issue of Debentures at a low rate of interest. Subscribers for the Preference Shares will, however, be permitted to pay in full on allotment, or at any time in anticipation of calls, and such Shares will rank for dividend at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of such payments.

Having regard to the profitable business undertaken and also under negotiation, the Directors believe that the result of the operations of the Corporation will be very successful, and they fully expect that after providing for interest on the Preference Shares and all contingencies, the net profits will admit of Dividends of at least 10 per cent. per annum on the Ordinary Shares.

Applications for Shares must be made on the accompanying Form, and forwarded, together with the requisite deposit, to the Bankers or to the Directors of the Corporation.

Where no allotment is made, the amount paid on deposit will be returned in full.

No promotion-money has been or will be paid.

Prospectuses and forms of application for the Shares now for Subscription can be obtained of the Bankers, Solicitors, or at the Offices of the Corporation, 110 Cannon Street, London, E.C.

The following Agreements have been entered into :—

September 1, 1879, between this Corporation and the Tramways Construction Company, Limited.

September 18, 1879, two Agreements between this Corporation and the Vienna (West) Waterworks Company, Limited.

January 20, 1880, between this Corporation and D. Y. Stewart and others.

February 3, 1880, between this Corporation and William Henry Punchard.

June 16, 1880, appointment of George W. Usill, A.M.I.C.E., one of the Engineers to the Corporation.

THE

(LIMITED.)

FORM OF APPLICATION FOR ORDINARY SHARES.

110 Cannon Street, London, E.C.

GENTLEMEN,—

Having paid into your Bankers the sum of £ being the amount of deposit of 10s. per Share on Ordinary Shares of £20 each in the IMPERIAL CONTINENTAL WATER CORPORATION (Limited), I hereby apply for that number of Ordinary Shares, and agree to accept the same, or any smaller number that may be allotted to me, and to pay for the same according to the terms of the Prospectus of the Corporation; and I agree to become a Member of the Corporation, upon the terms comprised in the Memorandum and Articles of Association; and I authorise you to place my name upon the Register of Members in respect of the Ordinary Shares so allotted.

ARMY and NAVY HOTEL (Lim ited).—Established upon the principle of Co-operation. Shareholders of five Shares and upwards will be entitled to a reduction of 10 per cent. off the hotel tariff. Capital £100,000, in 20,000 Shares of £5 each, payable £1 on application, £2 on allotment, and £2 three months after.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The want of comfortable accommodation in London, with living on an equality with that of a regimental mess and at economical rates, has always been felt by officers of the Services. This it is now intended to supply, both for temporary use and also in the style of a residential club, so that Shareholders may retain private rooms or suites of rooms with good attendance, and the use of general dining, drawing, club, smoking, and other rooms, while they may be either boarded at very moderate rates or obtain their meals as required in club fashion.

The Army and Navy Hotel is established for the purpose of these requirements, and is intended for the use of the public as well as of the Shareholders, priority being in all cases given to the latter.

Baths of every description, including salt water, will be obtainable in the hotel.

Shareholders will be allowed the use of the smoking, reading, and writing rooms, thus providing all the accommodation of a club without any annual subscription, and, whilst bachelors will find all the advantages of a mess, married officers will not miss the comforts of home.

Visitors who may wish to make the Hotel their home during their stay will be received at a fixed and very moderate tariff. It is intended to fix the tariff at as low a rate as is compatible with the declaration of a dividend, and it is confidently anticipated that board and lodging can be provided for about the same cost as is now charged by other hotels for rooms alone.

Suites of residential chambers, for bachelors as well as married people, will form a distinctive feature in the Hotel.

Application for Shares can be made in writing to the Secretary, by giving name, address, rank, or occupation, and the number of Shares required, accompanied by deposit.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—WATCHES.

The Rev. Robt. Cass, Settle, Yorkshire, writes, February 19, 1880:—"The Ladies' Gold Lever Watch received from you for 70s in size, workmanship, and beautiful appearance, resembles a watch usually sold at £10. It gives entire satisfaction."

The Rev. James Arthur Kemp, Lew Down, North Devon, also writes, March 8, 1880:—"The watch I ordered of you at 25s, for my servant, arrived quite safely, and I am exceedingly well pleased with it in every way. It is an excellent timekeeper, very neat and handsome in appearance, and in my opinion worth far more than those that cost treble the money. I do not think anybody should be without a watch, when they can obtain from you such an excellent article at so reasonable a price."

"I am very much pleased with everything I have had from your Company. The watch (25s) has proved to be an excellent one, and is a marvel of cheapness. It is fully equal to, or indeed superior to, many I have seen purchased by regimental clubs for treble the money. I am positive your Company will prove itself a boon to Army men at home and abroad, particularly the latter, who are often compelled to pay enormous prices for very inferior articles indeed. Your Company is deserving of every success, and I deem it a duty, to you and the Army, to become an amateur agent, unpaid."

THE MIDLAND COUNTIES WATCH COMPANY supply their celebrated Watches direct to wearers, at very lowest wholesale cash prices. They guarantee watches supplied by them to be most perfect timekeepers, and honestly assert their price to be under one-half those charged by watchmakers; and as a guarantee of good-faith they undertake to return the full amount paid for any Watch if not to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

Catalogues, containing list of testimonials, and beautifully illustrated descriptions of more expensive watches, gold and silver jewellery, electro-plate, &c., are sent gratis on application. We may safely assert that the prices in same will be a surprise to all who see them.

Mr. S. HISSEY, Vyse Street, Birmingham.

On receipt of which any watch will be registered post free to any part of the United Kingdom, and for 2s 6d per watch extra to any part of the postal world.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—The sudden changes, frequent fogs, and pervading dampness sorely impede the vital functions and conduce to ill-health. The remedy for these disasters lies in some purifying medicine, like these Pills, which is competent to grapple with the mischief at its source, and stamp it out, without fretting the nerves or weakening the system. Holloway's Pills extract from the blood all noxious matters, regulate the action of every disordered organ, stimulate the liver and kidneys, and relax the bowels. In curing chest complaints these Pills are remarkably effective, especially when aided by friction of the Ointment on its walls. This double treatment will ensure a certain, steady, and beneficent progress, and sound health will soon be re-established.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' 'Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

A BRIEF HISTORY of the 13th REGIMENT in SOUTH AFRICA. By Private MCTOY, 13th Regiment.

"A Brief History of the 13th Regiment in South Africa" (Devonport: A. H. Swiss).—"This is a remarkable book. It is written by Private McToy, 1st Battalion 13th Foot, and in it there is a most reliable account of the doings of that regiment, as well as of the other regiments that were in South Africa during the Zulu and Sekukuni campaigns. Private McToy describes the march through Natal, the annexation of the Transvaal, the entry into Pretoria, the march to the north-east frontier, the expedition against Sekukuni, the battle of Tolyana, the fighting at Zlobanne, as well as other episodes of campaigning in South Africa. His book well deserves attentive perusal."—Broad Arrow, October 2, 1880.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has acquired Mr. De Bay's invention for propelling vessels, which has been protected by letters-patent for Great Britain.

It is an admitted fact that from 40 to 50 per cent. of the power expended by a pair of engines upon a screw propeller is wasted in churning water, setting up useless currents, or in overcoming the friction of screw blades; and when it is borne in mind that, with a thoroughly efficient propeller, one-third of the coal now carried by a ship might be left on shore, one boiler out of every three dispensed with, and that one engine of 200 horse-power could propel a screw ship as fast as one of 300 horse-power can now actually drive her, the importance of this subject in reference to the carrying trade of the United Kingdom alone cannot well be overrated.

For twenty years efforts have been made to augment the efficiency of the screw propeller by reducing the amount of power which it wastes, but hitherto without avail,—the advances which have been made in steam navigation have been attributable mainly to the improvements in the machinery which caused the propeller to revolve.

A consideration of these circumstances induced the Inventor to devote his attention to the possibility of economising the power expended upon the screw, and so render it more efficient; and as the result of his elaborate mathematical investigations, and after much study and repeated experiments, he produced the present Propeller.

The Invention consists in two screws of the same pitch, portions of the blades of which are cut out, the screws are fixed on two shafts, one hollow, the other solid and revolving within in it—the screws are made to revolve in opposite directions, the solid portions of each blade of one screw passing through the gaps cut out in the other, and vice versa.

The effect of this method of construction is that the action of each screw by its contrary direction of rotation, prevents the water caught between them from following the direction of either, and the water is thrust directly astern in a line parallel with the keel of the vessel, with the advantage that the unpleasant vibration ordinarily caused by the screw is entirely obviated.

The De Bay Propeller has been fitted to several vessels, and on each occasion progressively satisfactory results have been obtained; and those shown on the "Cora Maria" give the Directors every confidence that this Propeller can be safely adapted to vessels of any size and power.

On July 10 and August 10, 1880, four runs were made with the "Cora Maria" (831 tons net register, 2,800 tons displacement, 235 feet long, 31 feet broad, 18 feet 3 inches deep) over the measured course of 2.2 miles between the light-ship and buoy off Penarth, —the former with the ordinary screw, the latter with the De Bay Propeller—with the following results:—

	Ordinary Screw.		De Bay Propeller.
Total revolutions in four runs	4,279		3,314
Average revolutions per minute	65.32		65
Average steam-pressure	74.7		74.5
Vacuum	25.58		24.25
Average indicated horse-power	584.51		585
	Min.	Sec.	Min.	Sec.
Time—First run, with tide	12	5	9	4
Second run, against tide	20	27	16	42
Third run, with tide	12	3	9	6
Fourth run, against tide	19	56	16	10
	Knots per hour.		Knots per hour.
Speed—First run, with tide	10.924		14.557
Second run, against tide	6.45		7.898
Third run, with tide	10.954		14.505
Mean speed—Ordinary screw	8.73 knots.

584.51 indicated horse-power having been required with the ordinary screw to drive the vessel at a mean speed of 8.73 knots per hour, it would, with the same screw, have required 1256.69 horse-power to drive her at 11.28 knots (the speed attained with the De Bay Propeller), showing a gain of 115 per cent. in horse-power.

With the old propeller, the vibration of the vessel was excessive, causing the leading rods and chains from the wheel to the rudder to make a continuous knocking on the deck, while with the De Bay Propeller the ship was as steady as if under sail.

By the introduction of this Propeller, with suitable gearing and under proper management, the following results will be obtained:—In cases where speed is the essential object, and it is determined not to reduce capacity of the engines and boilers, a considerable saving of time as well as of fuel will be effected; in cases where economy of construction is the main object, machinery of considerably reduced power may be introduced into the vessels, and in both instances (to a greater or less degree) a great saving of space will be effected, and the room which is now required for the machinery and for the stowage of coal will be available for an increase of cargo.

The total cost of coal consumed by the British Mercantile Marine is estimated at nearly Fourteen million pounds sterling per annum, and the experience gained in the experiments before referred to, shows that by the use of De Bay's Propeller a saving to this country in the article of coal is estimated to amount to £4,500,000 per annum, to which must be added the corresponding amount of room gained for cargo.

The Company will grant letters of licence for the use of the Invention on a scale of royalties proportioned to the saving in fuel, increase of speed, &c.

The Invention was acquired by the Company absolutely in consideration of the allotment to the Inventor and the other parties interested of 20,000 Shares, credited as fully paid up, no cash whatever being paid. Of the remaining 5,000 Shares, 1870 have been subscribed for in cash and allotted, of which number 664 are entitled to a preferential dividend of 10 per cent. per annum, and further to participate in the surplus net profits (after payment of a dividend of 10 per cent. on the Ordinary Shares) pro ratâ with the Ordinary Shares. The further Ordinary Shares of £5 each, ranking pari passu as to dividend and otherwise with the Ordinary Shares already issued, now offered for subscription, are payable as follows:—£2 per Share on application; £3 on allotment.

Any failure to pay up the amount due on allotment will render the deposit liable to forfeiture.

The immense saving in fuel which it is estimated will be effected by the use of this Invention will, it is anticipated, enable the Company to earn very large profits from the royalties to be granted for the use of the Patent.

The Companies' Act, 1867, requires that every Prospectus or invitation for Shares should set forth the dates and names of the parties to all contracts entered into by the Company. This Company has in the course of business entered into many contracts since its formation in 1877; it is obviously impossible to specify these in the present Prospectus, and all persons applying for Shares must be understood as expressly waiving their right to object to the allotment or to make any claim on that ground.

The list of all contracts entered into by the Company, together with the Memorandum and Articles of Association, can be seen at the Offices of the Company, and a list of all contracts entered into before or in connection with the formation of the Company is subjoined hereto.

At the time the Company was formed, there were 38 gentlemen interested in the Patent, four of whom held legal assignments, registered at the Patent Office, and the remainder had agreed with Mr. de Bay that they should be entitled to an interest therein, but no formal deeds had been drawn up or registered.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

159 PICCADILLY, S.W.

GENTLEMEN,—I beg herewith to enclose the sum of £................., being a deposit of £2 per Share on.................Ordinary Shares of £5 each in the above Company, and I hereby request you to allot me the said Shares, and I agree to accept the same or any less number, subject to the Memorandum and Articles of Association and Regulations from time to time of the above Company, and to pay a further instalment of £3 per Share on receipt of Allotment Letter, and I authorise you to place my name on the Register in respect of the Shares so allotted.

It having been found impossible by the Company to set out on their Prospectus the dates and names of the parties to the contracts entered into by the Company since its incorporation as required by the Companies' Act, 1867, Section 38, I hereby expressly waive my right to have the dates and names of the parties to such contracts set out, and declare that the allotment of Shares of the above issue hereby applied for by me shall, notwithstanding such omission as aforesaid, be binding on me and my representatives, and I renounce all claims in respect of such omission.

MR. KINGLAKE'S "APOLOGY" FOR THE "WINTER TROUBLES."

IT is now more than six-and-twenty years ago* since there landed on the beach at Old Fort, in the Crimea—then charged with all the tumultuous life of the disembarkation of the Allied Armies—four civilians, of whom one alone had any sort of actual business in that venture, the others belonging to the inquiring, eager order of men familiar to the Camps later on in the war as "T. G.'s," or "Travelling Gentlemen,"—which order, in its great recent development, is known as that of the "Globe Trotters." These three were fellow-travellers, and, if I mistake not, they came from Constantinople together. One of them was Mr. (now Sir H. A.) Layard, late Ambassador to the Sublime Porte, then rejoicing in the superabundant energy which had enabled him to win his great fame as the exfoliator of ancient Nineveh, and all alive and glowing with the emanations of the fire which burnt in the breast of the second-in-command, whose guest he was, against the "timid councils" of the Admiral-in-Chief. The other was Mr. Delane, the "great editor," as men call him now, of the Times, who, taking a brief holiday, had come out to the East to witness with his own eyes the beginning of the enterprise to which he had given such vigorous impulsion and support. The third was Mr. Kinglake, who, by a single literary effort, had some time previously established his reputation as a writer of extraordinary brilliancy and humour, and had won the favour of the severest critics by the treatment, at once original and natural, of the hackneyed themes of Oriental travel, in Eöthen. As far as I know, his whole raison d'être as one of the invaders of the Crimea, was curiosity. To enable him to gratify that feminine passion, he came armed with letters of introduction, and he was besides, I think, personally known to at least one of those attached in a civil capacity to the Staff; but, as well as I can recollect, he landed free from cares connected with baggage or camp equipment, and till he was enabled to purchase or become possessed of the famous pony, which was destined to exercise such a remarkable influence over his subsequent career, he might be seen groping about, amid the bustle and excitement of the landing, on the shingle between the sea and the Salt Lake, filled with a wondering pleasure, which was imparted to those around him through the mild medium of his pince-nez. Of the fourth person, I am well qualified to speak, for it was myself; and I am obliged to speak of myself, in consequence of Mr. Kinglake's references to me in the new volume of his history. I had then the business—how hard it was none can know but myself—of Correspondent to the Times to fulfil, in due execution of which I had been, to my amazement, lured on—"drifting into war," as the Government had done,—from Malta to Gallipoli, from Gallipoli to Scutari, from Scutari to Varna, from Varna to Aladyn, from Aladyn to Devna, from Devna to Monastir, from Monastir to the coast again, and so to ships bound for the Crimea—ever and always in the field with the van of the British Expeditionary Force. My sole experience in such work before I landed at Malta had been acquired in a short visit in a similar capacity to Denmark, during the Schleswig-Holstein troubles, three or four years earlier; but whilst I was living with or near the Guards and the Light Division in camp and quarters, I had applied myself diligently to understand the workings of our military system, as far as in me lay; and I soon had occasion to come to the conclusion that they were so inharmonious, if not discordant, that the machine would very probably fall to pieces altogether, under the pressure of actual war. Already I had had abundant proof ere we landed at Old Fort of the absolute ignorance of London Departments of what was taking place under my own observation, of the recklessness of official denials; of the darkness, which refused to be enlightened, pervading the camera obscura of the War Minister. On my arrival at Gallipoli* with Sir George Brown and the Head-Quarters of the Light Division from Malta, I had to know that the sick men of the Rifle Brigade on board with us, had been landed without a mattress to lie upon or a blanket to cover them; and that of the things called "medical comforts," said to have been sent on from Malta, there were none, absolutely none whatever; whilst the French hospital was admirably provided with every requisite.† I saw that state of things with my own eyes. I visited the hospitals in company with Surgeon Alexander, afterwards Director-General of the Army Medical Department; and I then wrote home a plain statement of the facts, which duly appeared in the paper I served. And what followed? A question was asked as to that statement in Parliament,‡ and up got an important official|| and declared off-hand that the story was untrue, as he had reason to believe that blankets, mattresses, and every kind of medical comfort had been stored at Gallipoli! One might have thought that a moment's reflection would have caused any Minister of ordinary prudence and candour to admit that the probabilities of the case pointed to some inaccuracy in his own information, and would have induced him to make inquiry before he indulged in the luxury of hot-headed contradiction,—that the official answering for the War Office would have said, "Here is a very precise averment, from a person on the spot, as to the condition of our sick soldiers. That person apparently can have no motive to fabricate these charges,—nay, more, he has every motive for strict adherence to fact, for if he makes in a public print any assertion respecting matters of such interest as the state of our belligerent troops which is not absolutely true, he forfeits the confidence of his employers at home, and meets with instant exposure at the scene of his labours. I will, therefore, cause inquiry to be made, and let the House know the result." But, no! Indignant, contemptuous denial of what was true!—that was the official reply. And so it was to the end,—except when the facts were too obvious for the device to be made use of in public. Ere we reached Scutari, some few criticisms forced whilst I was at Gallipoli from my pen, which was, I may honestly aver, far more prone to praise than to censure, had been taken as an evidence of an unfriendly, carping spirit, by the young gentlemen around Lord Raglan, and I was represented, in such letters as those of the "Staff Officer," in the light of an ill-disposed writer, who sought to depreciate the English Army (with which I lived, and on whose good-will I was, in a sense, dependent for my comfort); and to exalt the French (with whom I had no relations at all, and from whom I had nothing to expect), and the good which might have been educed from my comparisons between the two armies was assiduously estopped by misrepresentation of my motives in making them. Previous to my departure from England, I had seen Lord Hardinge at the Horse Guards, and had been introduced and recommended by him to Brigadier Bentinck, who was going out in command of the Brigade of Guards. I was promised every facility in procuring quarters and rations, but on the establishment of Lord Raglan's Head-Quarters at Scutari the official countenance was darkened before me. I was exposed to such petty annoyance,—not, I am sure, with the sanction or by the express desire of the Commander-in-Chief, but in consequence of the disfavour of some of those around him,—as the compulsory shifting of my tent and the refusal of rations (which, however, I soon after received, by order from the War Department to the Commissary-General). Still, I worked my way on, and, with my tent, my humble establishment of horses and servants, lived and moved with the old Light Division in Bulgaria, making many friends (of whom there are yet some left, as I am proud to think, who remember me with kindness), till the camps there were broken up for the embarkation and the invasion of Russia, when I joined Sir de Lacy Evans and the Head-Quarters of the Second Division, and landed with them at Old Fort on September 14th, 1854. It was there I met the three gentlemen of whom I have already spoken; but we were doomed soon to part, for before the Army was set in motion towards the Alma, where we knew the Russians were awaiting us, Mr. Delane had to make haste to go to London, to take hold of the Times again; and Mr. Layard returned to Sir Edmund Lyons and the Agamemnon, from the masthead of which he penned an account of the Battle of the Alma, as seen from that vantage-coign, which attracted much attention and some adverse comment. Mr. Kinglake remained on shore, and on September 19th, when the Allies began their eventful march, he and I, in common with other non-combatants, rode with the Head-Quarters Staff, as its unrecognised, but not invisible, concomitants, till we came under fire, and were ordered by some of the Staff to keep away from Lord Raglan. The way in which Mr. Kinglake emerged on that day from that condition of unauthorised or merely permissive connection with the Staff is narrated by the author of the "Letters from Head-Quarters," written by Major Somerset Calthorpe :—

> "I must tell you a little anecdote of Lord Raglan and a certain author who is well known in the literary world. This morning, when Lord Raglan was waiting, surrounded by his staff, for the troops to get into their places, a gentleman joined us, on a handsome little grey pony. This pony began neighing and screaming in the most wonderful manner, and so continuously, that one could hardly hear what was said. At last, it attracted Lord Raglan's attention, and he said, 'I never heard a pony make such a row; does any one know who the gentleman is?' Some one of the staff said, 'I think he is one of the newspaper reporters, my Lord; shall I tell him to go away?' Lord Raglan laughed, and said, 'If you do, he will show you up, you may depend upon it.' It so happened that I had made this gentleman's acquaintance on the beach a few days before; so I told Lord Raglan that it was Mr. Kinglake, the author of Eöthen. 'Oh!' said my Lord, 'a most charming man!' and was going to speak to him, when Marshal St. Arnaud came up, so for the time he could not do so. About 11 o'clock, as we were nearing the Russian position, indeed, when within sight of them, Lord Raglan and his staff were riding in advance; presently a pony dashed past us at a furious pace, and who should it be but Mr. Kinglake. On he went, right through our skirmishers, with his horse's head between his legs; but, fortunately for his rider, the saddle got forward, and after a time went over the horse's ears; of course, the author of Eöthen went with the saddle. It was rather an absurd thing just before a battle. We all laughed, except Lord Raglan, who rode up to him, and inquired most kindly after him, offered him (I think) one of his own ponies to ride, and told his orderly to put the saddle to rights. Mr. Kinglake was all thanks. That night, after the battle, Lord Raglan met him wandering about, not knowing where to go, so he asked him to dinner; of course, he came, and delighted every one present with his charming manner and conversation."

This trivial camp courtesy has been repaid by life-long and passionate devotion, by the creation of a new religion, ardent, fierce, almost unreasoning, in a breast where what men call Faith had been a stranger,—a religion testified by the laborious erection of a great literary temple, where Mr. Kinglake, at once Architect and High-Priest, toils on year after year, in dim-eyed worship, decorating the statue of his Idol; forging thunderbolts for unbelievers; sacrificing innumerable reputations to the manes of his deity; hurling the anathemata of his ponderous volumes at the sceptics; flashing the lightnings of his wrath upon "the thrones, dominions, principalities, powers," the men, the women, the things belonging to the world outside his sacred shrine. By the force of what Mr. Kinglake would call "brain-power"—the phrase appears some twenty times in his present volume—Nicholson, who was killed at Delhi, established such an "ascendancy" over certain tribes in the Punjab, that they formed a religious sect for the worship of "Nicholseyn." By the prandial civility of the English General to Eöthen, the latter was made the Apostle of a new Avatar. The effect of the epiphany was not complete at first, but by continual contemplation of his own dogmas, the worshipper has now left himself nor eyes, nor ears, nor sense for anything but the one object,—like the Buddhist priest, in holy abstraction over the Sacred Tooth. Had Mr. Kinglake been wounded at the Alma, it is probable, from an incident I remember when we slept in the same tent a night or two after the battle, that the world would never have seen the six volumes, or any one of them, in which are contained the articles of the new faith. Happily, he was not hit on the occasion, and so year after year as he lives the doctrine is evolved, in tome upon tome, and the apothesis has not yet been fitly celebrated. Mr. Kinglake followed the Army from the Alma to Balaclava, where we "lay together," as soldiers say, in the same quarter; and then we went up to camp, outside the house in which Lord Raglan's Head-Quarters were established, and in which he died. We saw the preparations for the bombardment and for the assault against Sebastopol; we witnessed the opening of the Allied batteries on October 17th; the failure of the cannonade, and the postponement of the attack on the place; and then Mr. Kinglake, under the stress of the obligation which is imposed on a barrister by his conscience, or, rather, by his unconscious assent to the hope that a brief may drop on his head if he puts his wig on it, went off to London, "to be in time for the first day of Term," and was seen no more in the Crimea.* It is needless to say that I remained,—remained, as Mr. Kinglake would say, to the bitter, the very bitter end; how bitter, none but I can ever feel or know. And now comes the matter which has caused me to challenge the public judgment as between Mr. Kinglake and myself. After a quarter of a century, a distinct body of indictment has been raised by an eminent writer, in a form which enables me to grapple with it. It has been, doubtless, said in private and suggested in public over and over again, that the letters I sent to the Times from the Camp were full of danger to the Army and to the country, because they contained information which was of exceeding value to the enemy. I learn from Mr. Kinglake's present volume that on November 13 Lord Raglan wrote in that sense to the Duke of Newcastle, and made complaint to him against me, invoking at the same time the influence of the Government with the Editors of the Times and other papers to prevent the diffusion of mischievous intelligence from their Correspondents at the seat of war; but no complaints were ever made to me, unless it can be said that the incident to which I shall come presently can be put in such a category.

Now, the first count in the indictment filed by the Advocate-General, who is now prosecuting so many people, alive and dead, is contained in a letter of Lord Raglan, which is as follows, and there the points against me are put distinctly enough :—

> "[Private.] Before Sebastopol, Nov. 13, 1854.
> "MY DEAR DUKE OF NEWCASTLE,—The perusal of the article in the Times of Oct. 23 headed 'The War,' obliges me, in discharge of my duty, to draw your Grace's attention to the consequences that may arise from the publication of details connected with this army. The knowledge of them must be invaluable to the Russians, and in the same degree detrimental to her Majesty's troops.
> "I enclose the article itself, and a note of the principal points of information which it affords, and which, probably, were forwarded to and had arrived at Sebastopol by telegraph before the mail of the 23rd reached Head-quarters.
>
> "You will perceive that it is there stated that our losses from cholera are very great; that the Light Division encampment is kept on the alert by shot and shell, which pitch into the middle of it; that 40 pieces of artillery had been sent up to our park, and 12 tons of gunpowder safely deposited in a mill, the position of which is described, and which, of course, must be accurately known by the enemy; that the Second Division had moved and taken ground in the vicinity of the Fourth Division, in which a shell had fallen with fatal effect in a hut occupied by some men of the 63rd Regiment; and that the French would have 60 heavy guns, the British Army 50, and 60 more would be supplied by the Navy. The mention of the employment of red-hot shell was then adverted to.
> "The position of the 93rd is stated, as is that of the head-quarters of the Commander of the Forces; likewise, the possible dearth of round-shot, and of gabions and fascines.
> "I will not fatigue you by further alluding to what is announced in the letter, but I will ask you whether anything more injurious to the interests of this army could be effected than the publication of such details. I am quite satisfied that the object of the writer is simply to satisfy the anxiety, and curiosity, I may say, of the public, and to do what he considers his duty by his employers, and that it has never occurred to him that he is serving much more essentially the cause of the Russians, and is encouraging them to persevere in throwing shells into our camps, and to attempt the destruction of the mill where our powder is reported by him to have been deposited; but the innocency of his intention does not diminish the evil he inflicts, and something should be done to check so pernicious a system at once. I do not propose to take any violent steps, though perhaps I should be justified in doing so; but I have requested Mr. Romaine to endeavour to see the different correspondents of the newspapers, and quietly point out to them the public inconvenience of their writings, and the necessity of greater prudence in future; and I make no doubt that they will at once see that I am right in so warning them."

Now, that is all very true, and I subscribe to every word of it. Nor am I disposed to question what Mr. Kinglake, having mentioned me by name, goes on to say :—

> "He [Mr. Russell] perhaps thought it likely that the accounts he was sending to England (including those which laid bare the weakened state of our army) would soon be made known to the enemy by spies, deserters, or prisoners, and that information thus passing direct across only a few furlongs of ground would neutralise any advantage which the Russians might otherwise gain from intelligence sent home by himself, and only reaching Sebastopol after a circuit of thousands of miles; whilst, moreover, he may fairly have trusted that any dangerous statements imparted by his hurrying pen to the conductors of the journal at home would be there, after all, in the hands of men not only able, but anxious, to suppress hurtful truths. Be that as it may, he wrote freely; and the conditions surrounding him were such that, even if he had been wanting in that power of acute observation which he amply possessed, he could not have helped perceiving the state of weakness and suffering to which our army had been reduced."

I must ask my readers to pay particular attention to the dates. The letter of Lord Raglan was written on November 13, eight days after Inkerman, when there was great gloom in our camp, upon which the advent of a few hours more was to bring the tremendous calamity of the Storm, the cause of unnumbered woes. The letter of mine to which Lord Raglan drew attention was printed in the Times of October 23. Lord Raglan does not give the date when that letter was written and sent from camp. I can supply the omission. The letter was written thirteen days before October 17. And what of that? What signifies the date one way or other? Everything, as my readers shall soon see. When my letter was written, it was well known in camp that on October 17 was to begin and end the bombardment which every human being believed,—every one without exception, from Lord Raglan, down or up to Mr. Kinglake—believed was to effect that very day, and no later, the utter destruction of the defences of Sebastopol, and to make the triumphant entry of the British and French troops into the city ere nightfall a matter of certainty. Mr. Kinglake admits, what, indeed, no one can deny, that Lord Raglan was confident of the result—as "cocksure" as the young Artillery officer by my side, who, reconnoitring the town through his glass from the Woronzow road on October 16, the day before the fire opened, said, "That's the little crib I intend to roost in to-morrow," pointing to the Club-house in the city. When I made some remark to the Engineer Officer at Head-Quarters, from whose note-book I copied the emplacement of the guns in battery, &c., to the effect that the Russians would give a good deal to know what I had there, he said, "It would not do them much good. The place will be about their ears in a few hours more!" So, under an impression enforced on me by all around me, I did, in letters written between October 4 and 13, state what Lord Raglan read in the Times on November 13, one month later. Not a soul in camp up to October 17 thought there was any danger—the least injury—in telling people at home about our preparations and doings on the plateau for the capture of Sebastopol. When Mr. Romaine, with the Times paper in hand, walked across from Lord Raglan's room at Head-Quarters to my tent, which was about sixty yards away, and spoke to me in the sense of his Lordship's instructions, I pointed out to him the circumstances under which the letter was written, and Mr. Romaine at once admitted the justice of the ground of my defence; but when Mr. Romaine went on to say that Lord Raglan hoped that I would take heed in future communications not to make disclosures hurtful to the Army, coupled, as I understood, with an obscure hint that it might be necessary to consider the propriety of asking me to leave the Head-Quarters' Camp, if not the Crimea, I did not hesitate for a moment as to the course to be taken. I said, in as many words :—"The greatest favour Lord Raglan, or any one in power, can confer on me personally, is to order me to quit the Camp before Sebastopol in twenty-four hours! But as I understand, there is no such order. Well, then, as long as I am not compelled to abandon my post, I must stay here, and do what is my duty, according to the best of my ability. I do not and cannot pretend to decide or to know what is and what is not of military value in the information I send, and in the letters I write to be published in London, at the discretion of the editor; but if Lord Raglan desires me to do so, I shall send in every letter I write to the Military Secretary, or any other officer he may appoint at Head-Quarters, and let him deal with it as he thinks fit. In that case, I, of course, disclaim all responsibility for what may be forwarded to London, and I shall acquaint the Editor of the Times with the circumstance, and leave him to determine what course he will take regarding it." Mr. Romaine retired, and from that time (about the middle of November, 1854) till I left camp with the last detachment of the British Army, when the siege was over and peace was signed (May, 1856), I never had any representation, good, bad, or indifferent, addressed to me by or on account of the General-in-command in reference to my writings, or the information contained in them.*

* And I may say, to our great regret.

* On November 20, 1854, in consequence of the interview with Mr. Romaine, I wrote as follows to the Times:—"Newspaper correspondents are placed in rather a difficult position out here at present. In common with generals and chiefs, and men-at-arms, they write home accounts of all we were doing to take Sebastopol, and they joined in the prophetic cries of the leaders of the host that the fall of the city of the Czar—the centre and navel of his power in these remote regions—would not be deferred for many hours after our batteries had opened upon its defences. In all the inspiration of this universal hope, these poor wretches, who cling to the mantles of the military and engineering Elijahs, did not hesitate to communicate to the world, through the columns of the English Press, all they knew of the grand operations which were to eventuate in the speedy fall of this doomed city. They cheered the heart of England with details of the vast armaments prepared against its towers and forts—of the position occupied by her troops—the imbecility of the enemy's fire—of the range of the guns so soon to be silenced, of the stations of our troops on commanding sites, and they described with all their power the grandiose operations which were being taken for the reduction of such a formidable place of arms. They believed, in common with the leaders whose inspiration and whose faith were breathed through the ranks of our soldiers, that the Allied forces were to reduce Sebastopol long ere the lines they penned could meet the expectant gaze of our fellow-countrymen at home, and they stated under that faith and in accordance with those inspirations that the operations of war undertaken by our armies were undertaken with reference to certain points of position and with certain hope of results, the knowledge of which could not have proved of the smallest service to the enemy, once they had been beaten out of their stronghold. Contrary to these hopes and inspirations, in direct opposition to our prophecies and to our belief, Sebastopol still holds out against the Allies; and the intelligence conveyed in newspapers which we all thought we would have read in the clubrooms of Sebastopol has been conveyed to the generals of an army which still defends its walls, and has been given to the leaders of an enemy whom we had considered would be impuissant and defeated, where they have proved themselves to be, in reality, powerful and unconquered. The enemy know that we have lost many men from sickness; they know that we have so many guns here, and so many guns there, that our head-quarters are in one place, our principal powder-magazine is in another, that the camp of such a division has been annoyed by their fire, and that the tents of another had escaped injury from their shot; but it must be recollected that when these details were written it was confidently declared that, ere the news could reach England of the actual preliminaries of the siege, the Allies would have entered Sebastopol, that their batteries would have silenced the fire of the enemy, that the quarters of their generals would have been within the enciente of the town, that our magazines would have been transferred to its storehouses, and that our divisions would have encamped within its walls. It mattered little, therefore, if we pointed out the losses of our men, the number and position

Till my tent at Head-Quarters was blown down, in the gale of November 14, and I was driven to take refuge in a filthy hovel at Balaclava, where, ere I moved up to the Fourth Division at Cathcart's Hill, I passed part of the miserable winter, I was living within a stone's-throw of Lord Raglan's house, but I was down in Balaclava at the date of the next letter from his Lordship in reference to the same subject:—

> [Private and Confidential.]
> "Before Sebastopol, January 4, 1855.
> "My dear Duke of Newcastle,—I deem it my duty to send you a copy of the Times newspaper of December 18, and to draw your attention to an article or rather letter from its correspondent with this army. I pass over the fault the writer finds with everything and everybody, however calculated his strictures may be to excite discontent and encourage indiscipline, but I ask you to consider whether the paid agent of the Emperor of Russia could better serve his master than does the correspondent of the paper that has the largest circulation in Europe. I know something of the kind of information which the commander of an army requires of the state and condition of the troops opposed to him, and I can safely say, that during the whole of the war in the Peninsula, the Duke of Wellington was never supplied with such details as are to be found in the letter to which I am desirous of attracting your attention. Some time ago the correspondent stated, for general information, and practically for that of the Prince Mentschikoff, the exact position in which the powder for our siege batteries was deposited, and he suggests the ease with which the ships in Balaclava Harbour could be set on fire. He, moreover, affords the Russian General the satisfaction of knowing that our guns stick in the mud and our horses die under their exertions. But as regards intelligence to the enemy, the mischievous parts are so obvious, that I will not further trouble you with the recapitulation of them. It will be sufficient if I mark the parts which strike me as the most obnoxious. I am very doubtful that, the communications are so rapid, whether a British Army can long be maintained in presence of a powerful enemy, that enemy having at its command, through the English Press, and from London to his head-quarters by telegraph, every detail that can be required of the numbers, condition, and equipment of his opponents' force."

I was never in any way made acquainted with the contents of this "private and confidential letter," till I saw it the other day in Mr. Kinglake's sixth volume; but curiously enough, I am enabled, by an accidental circumstance, to meet the grievous accusations contained in it,—accusations which, if believed, ought, I submit, to have induced Lord Raglan to have caused direct representations to be made to me on the subject, or to have at once turned me out of the Crimea. Some few years back I had the honour of accompanying the Prince of Wales, in H.M.S. Ariadne, and, in conjunction with Colonel A. Ellis, C.S.I., of acting as a kind of guide, to the site of the camps in the Crimea. The Governor of the Crimea, His Excellency Aide-de-Camp-General Von Kotzebue, who was Chief of the Staff to Prince Gortschakoff during the siege, awaited His Royal Highness at Sebastopol, and on the day of our arrival dined on board the Ariadne. When it came to my turn to be presented to His Excellency, the Prince of Wales said, "I dare say you are glad to meet a gentleman who, I hear, gave you such excellent information by his letters to the Times." The remark was made with gracious gaiety, but I could not help feeling gratified when General Von Kotzebue replied, "I fear, Monseigneur, I have nothing to thank Mr. Russell for on that head. We were quite well aware of everything that passed within your camp, from Balaclava to the front, every day, within a few hours of its happening."[] And His Excellency told me subsequently, in the course of conversation, that "what was really of use to the Russians was the information in the shipping columns and naval and military intelligence of the London papers," which was regularly telegraphed to them, so that they knew at Sebastopol of every shipment of stores, guns, &c., and of every detachment embarked, before the ships which conveyed them had entered the Straits of Gibraltar. General Kotzebue added, moreover, that they had also accurate intelligence from Constantinople of every vessel which passed up the Bosphorus.[]

There, then, is the indictment,—there the querulous pleas of the prosecution. My answer to any charges based on such complaints as are now set forth must be in the form of what lawyers call "a plea of confession and avoidance." I confess that I gave publicity to facts which might have been useful to the enemy, if (a) the enemy would have otherwise been ignorant of them, or if (b) the enemy acted upon or made use of the facts in any overt way. If injury or danger of any sort were caused by my disclosures, I was, I say, entirely freed from all responsibility; and I maintain that it was Lord Raglan, and he alone, who was to blame, if blame there were, for any consequences which might have accrued from what I wrote to the Times, as it was the Times itself which was responsible for the publication of the letters I submitted to the discretion of the conductors of that journal. What was my position? I was a newspaper correspondent, —a person employed to write news to a public journal of great circulation and authority from the seat of war. The public at home were devoured by impatience to learn anything and everything from the seat of war. I selected such facts and such topics as I thought likely to be interesting, and wrote my letters from day to day, often, on the spur of the moment, chronicling the event of the hour or the minute,—not with the advantage of twenty-five years of meditation, selection, and revision. From Mr. Kinglake I now learn that Lord Raglan believed that there was one advantage—as I infer, one only —from the letters of "special correspondents;" it was this:—he thought "their writings would outshine all the letters from wrong-headed officers, and drive them out of the market" (p. 233), the wrong-headedness being evinced by the expression of any sort of dissatisfaction with what was going on in camp. But the way in which he regarded them—and I am not prepared to say wrongly regarded them, everything considered—was one which ought to have led him to take a decisive step in respect to those persons who wrote the letters; and any step Lord Raglan did take was, as we saw, short and feeble.

But, after all, the real questions to be determined are, —Did I give any aid or encouragement to the enemy which they would not have had but for my writings, or, if I did, was I responsible for any damage to the Army, with which my life and all my interests were, parva componere magnis, at the time as much bound up as those of any General in camp? To suppose, with Lord Raglan, that the Russians would be encouraged to throw shells into our camp—as though the practice needed encouragement—or to attempt the destruction of the mill, which, up to the fall of the place, they never once menaced, is almost childish. Was a single attack directed against any point in consequence of what I had written? Not one. Was one shell more or less fired in one direction or another because of my letters? Not one. Was a man of our Army killed or maimed by reason of my ill-advised writing? Not one. The most vindictive partisan cannot pretend that fireships were prepared or directed against Balaclava, or that attacks were addressed to the magazine in the mill,[†] or that any act, positive or negative, of the enemy originated in or was derived from my correspondence, —no! not one! On the other side, I make bold to say that much of the active aid, the saving sympathy, the generous national indignation, leading to overt acts of help, evinced by a sort of universal uprising of the public at home, were largely due to the representations which were made by me and others as to the real state of our suffering soldiery,—a state which—let Mr. Kinglake sophisticate as he may—was not made known even to the Ministry at home by the official or private correspondence of the General whom both the Duke of Newcastle and Lord Panmure, to Mr. Kinglake's ineffable surprise and wrath, accuse of leaving them without any information on the subject, far less to the nation at large.

So far, I have dealt with personal matters, which, after a quarter of a century has elapsed, have been put forward as part of an ingenious apology for the Winter Troubles before Sebastopol. In my next, I propose to make some general remarks on other portions of Mr. Kinglake's aggressive defence.

William Howard Russell.

At a meeting convened by the Mayor of Sheffield, on the 3rd inst., in aid of the sufferers by the loss of the Atalanta, only about half-a-dozen persons were present, the explanation for so small an attendance, and for the little sympathy shown in the matter, being that Sheffield was an inland town, and, therefore, had no interest in the Navy; and that Government ought to maintain the widows and orphans of those who perish in their country's service. For the credit of Englishmen, we are glad to record that this is the first instance in which it has been publicly asserted that the inhabitants of a large inland town can have no interest in the Naval Service of the British Empire. To argue with persons who could set forth such a doctrine, would be like casting pearls before swine; but we should like to say a few words to the public generally on the value of the Navy to their hearths and homes, and then ask the pertinent question,—Can any town, village, or hamlet say that it has no interest in its welfare? First, let us go back to the days when England could boast of no navy, and what do we find? Why, that the Romans, Danes, Normans, and others landed with ease upon her shores, and soon overran the country, not confining themselves to the sea-coast, but carrying terror and dismay from south to north, and from east to west; and so it was from time to time, until the islanders awoke to the fact that they lived on an island, and that prowess at sea could alone keep off the invader. Passing over the intermediate period during which the Naval power of England was gradually but surely becoming stronger, until the days of Queen Elizabeth, and what do we read in history with regard to the general panic spread throughout the country at the approach of the Spanish Armada, that formidable fleet which would have landed its thousands of soldiers on our shores and brought the terrors of the Inquisition to our homes, but for the prompt action and gallant bearing of Drake and Hawkins, Howard and Frobisher, with others, backed by their crews, who fought to the death for the salvation of their country. What did Sir Francis Drake say at this period, but that "England is a land which can never be conquered, whilst the Kings thereof have the dominion of the sea"? And it has further been said, in the time of King William III., that "the honour and safety of this nation, under the providence of God, chiefly depend upon our strength at sea." Advancing still in history, and coming nearer to our own days, what would have been the result to England when Napoleon massed his troops for invasion, if Nelson had lost Trafalgar, and if other Naval heroes of that date had been lacking in their duty? There is little doubt that if any powerful nation was capable of destroying our Fleet, and thereby ensuring free transport of troops to any point of our coast, it would not be long before the people of Sheffield and other large manufacturing inland towns would be made to feel the horrors of war by the presence of an invading army, and scenes of bloodshed and rapine would be enacted there, as they have been in many a Continental city. It is a fallacy to suppose that the safety of the coast towns alone depends upon the efficiency of the Navy; on the contrary, the whole country relies upon it, both for its mercantile prosperity and its exemption from the presence of a foreign foe, and therefore the inhabitants of inland towns should honestly take as much interest in the welfare of our seamen and their belongings as should those who come face to face with them day by day in the seaports. The second point, having to do with the maintenance by the Government of the

of our guns, the site of our quarters, the position of our magazines, or the range of the Russian cannon. How much knowledge of this sort the enemy might have gleaned through their spies, or by actual observation, it is not needful to inquire, but undoubtedly, without any largely speculative conjecture, it may be inferred that much of the information conveyed to them, or said to have been conveyed to them, by the English Press, could have been ascertained through those very ordinary channels of communication, the eye and ear, long ere our letters had been forwarded to Sebastopol, and translated from English in usum superiorum. However, it is quite evident that it is not advisable to acquaint the enemy with our proceedings and movements during a siege which now promises to assume the proportions and to emulate the length of those operations of a similar character in which hosts of men, conveyed by formidable armada from distant shores, set down to beleaguer some devoted fortress."

[*] It must be remembered that at first Balaclava was full of Russian Greeks; that Tartars came in and out of our camp; that the Cossack post on Canrobert's Hill looked down on Balaclava, and that deserters soon began to go over to the enemy, who were also able to take prisoners in their night sorties.

[*] As an instance of the modes by which Mr. Kinglake works towards the attainment of his ends, I may call attention to the following passage, and the note upon it, at pp. 238-239. Writing of me as one who was the type "of the merry species of priest often found in his" (my) "native land, who seemed charged, notwithstanding his (my) drollery, with commissions to bind and to loose,"—he insinuates that I derived power in camp from the idea in men's minds, after a while, that I could influence their prospects by speaking well or ill of them in the Times. And he goes on, "So long as his tent remained pitched amongst those of the Head-Quarters Staff, statements useful for his purpose" (whatever that might be) "were not, I think, largely offered to him; but from the time he moved to the camp of the Fourth Division he became surrounded by willing informants, whose communications were not unmixed with sharp criticism of the men in authority." And then there comes this foot-note,—"A division in camp is apt to take a tone from its chief, and Cathcart, as we saw (see ante, Vol. IV.) was in a highly critical frame of mind. It was natural that after his death, on November 5, the tone should for some time continue." Now, if words mean anything, Mr. Kinglake wishes his readers to believe that whilst I was at Head-Quarters I was kept in a state of harmless ignorance, but that I was dangerously informed by malevolent critics when I got up to the Fourth Division, and that Sir George Cathcart had, in some way, inspired the criticism. It so happens that the first letter I wrote, which called for Lord Raglan's comments, was penned in his own camp; that the second letter was written at Balaclava, and that I did not move up to Cathcart's Hill and to the Fourth Division Camp till after Inkerman, after the worst part of the winter, and long after Cathcart's death. I had indeed spoken with Cathcart several times ere he was killed, and had learned that he quite disapproved of the dilatory processes which Mr. Kinglake condemns in the operations against Sebastopol; but I had not given expression in any way to his sentiments or opinions. It is most unjust to the Staff and officers of the Fourth Division to impute to them any share in what Mr. Kinglake calls "the disparagement of the ruling Administration," which was conveyed in my statements of what seemed to me to be facts deserving of notice.

widows and orphans of those who die in the Service, has more reason on the face of it, and we hope yet to see the day when pensions will be provided. Till then, however, let us not hold back the hand of necessary charity, because what ought to be is not yet provided.

The communiqué in the Times of Monday, respecting the Committee on Military Reform, which is represented as being hard at work on the very important subject set forth in the article, would create an impression that there was some new machinery set to operate on the never-ending, still-beginning reorganisation of the British Army. In point of fact, there is only a development of the ordinary business which besets the Horse Guards at this time, when the War Office is preparing the Estimates; and for years past the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has been accustomed to hold weekly councils with the Adjutant-General, Quartermaster-General, and the chiefs of departments, and the Committee now sitting is only a strong manifestation of official activity. That the attention of the War Office and of the Horse Guards Authorities is not most intensely fixed on the present state of the Army, and that their best energies are not given to the consideration of the various schemes for its improvement, we should be sorry to deny; but we fear Mr. Childers will not be ready with a complete and well-digested plan for the reconstruction of our shattered military system when Parliament meets. It is unnecessary to point out the evil effects of constant changes on the minds of officers and men. No one knows where he stands. It is true, as the Times remarks, that Mr. Childers has the assistance of very able and experienced officers in elaborating the methods to which he will seek the assent of Parliament for the removal of existing defects, and for the permanent efficiency of the Service; but it may be, too, that he will find difficulty in reconciling the advice he will receive from one set of councillors with that of others of his advisers. The Duke of Cambridge represents the feelings of the mass of regimental officers,—what may be called the traditions of the British Army; but it would be unjust to charge him, as he has been by implication charged, with the faults inherent in the new system of service, and to imply that it has been worked in a half-hearted manner,—that, in fact, it has not had fair-play, in consequence of Horse Guards' opposition or dislike. Sir Charles Ellice may be taken as the type of an intermediary between the old system and the new,—willing to accept what is good in either, but, on the whole, averse from change in itself, and anxious to see the Army well manned and disciplined, but he is not a man of original ideas, or, we may add, a violent theorist. On the other hand, the Quartermaster-General may be regarded as the champion of the Short-service system, and of a Reserve at any price; and his fertility of argument, force of conviction, and practical knowledge — not as a regimental officer, but as a man who has commanded forces in the field—will be devoted to push what he conceives to be needful reforms to the utmost extent. And in many of his ideas he will receive the support of Sir John Adye, another reformer of an exceedingly advanced sort, who, without any regimental knowledge beyond that acquired as an artillery officer in command of a battery, has studied our Military organisation from his own point of view with assiduity, and has vowed that, on one question at least affecting discipline and the means of punishing crime, he will carry his views into effect, or retire. Of Major-General Bulwer's qualifications as an officer, those who know him speak with high respect. The localisation idea is, we are told, to be carried out to its greatest expansion; and surely if it can be developed to working dimensions, no one can do more than rejoice at the success of the scheme, even though he feels regret that so many old traditions must be sacrificed in achieving it; but we confess to the existence of the gravest doubt that it will ever be possible to adapt the principle of localisation to an army which has such extraordinary duties to perform outside the country in which it is supposed to be localised. What, for instance, would be more hopless than to carry out "localisation" in Ireland? It is almost ludicrous to see the old East India Company's regiments transferred nominally to Irish towns and counties, and to look over the actual distribution of so-called Irish regiments. In the same way, there are counties in England where it would scarcely be possible to raise the military unit constituting a local regiment on the foreign system; and localities in Scotland which have given their names to famous regiments which could not or would not now send up a full company. We do not say that the scheme cannot be carried out, but that we do not see how the difficulties in doing so are to be overcome. It is satisfactory to perceive that "short service," as it is at present, is condemned by its devoted admirers. It is practically given up, and it is admitted not "to be adapted to the necessities of our foreign garrisons." As regards the creation of a Reserve, there has been a certain measure of success; but we maintain that it has been gained at the expense of the first or fighting line, and its warmest advocates deprecate the idea of employing it as a feeder for the active Army, or as anything but a reserve, to be called out in a national emergency of war. Colonel Stanley confessed that the efficiency of the Reserve was suffering diminution, and it has fallen far short of Lord Cardwell's estimate, and is 3,000 short of the estimate put forward three years ago, when it was put at the modest amount—for such a nation—of 22,000 men. The great battle-horse on which the reformers love to prance is "the 27,000 recruits a year," produced, they say, by short-service; but their steed comes to a standstill when it is put to the fence, for these recruits do not yield materials for non-commissioned officers, and are too young, and often inferior in other ways, for the ordinary work of the British soldier, filling the hospitals on service, and frequently requiring the care of the Authorities at home in stronger edifices. However, if the War Office and Horse Guards agree in trying the new system, with the changes which are admitted to be necessary, the country will, no doubt, give fair-play to their wisdom, and will be thankful for improvement. As to the body of officers to be operated upon, it is not likely there will be any such tolerant spirit in them, and the besom which has been so often applied to sweep away "the rubbish of vested interests," is apparently to be provided with a new handle and fresh twigs. It would be premature to express any opinion respecting the changes which are said to be under consideration, till we know the details; but the country and Parliament will not, we feel sure, sanction any extension of the system of compulsory retirement in the case of officers who entered the Service with distinct guarantees for their future, and will watch with jealousy the introduction of a system of "selection," pure and simple, for promotion and command, especially in connection with the increased control which recent changes have given to political parties over the officering and personnel of the Army.

The skill of our Sailors, which served in the past to raise England to the proud position she now holds among the nations of the world, seems to be sadly deteriorating. The introduction of "the kettle" on board ship was the signal for a change by which our seamen were transformed into steam tacticians, and the theorist, to a great extent, superseded the practical seaman. It should be remembered, however, that it is only the true seaman who can handle and fight a ship with any chance of success; and that the theoretical gunner, although useful in determining the armament of a ship, is of little service when that armament has to be used. The thirty vessels which, under Lord Howard of Effingham, attacked the one hundred and twenty-nine ships forming the Spanish Armada, were commanded and handled by seamen. In seamanship and gunnery the Spanish crews were inferior to those manning our ships, and their great floating castles were no match for the active little English vessels. The lesson then learnt has long been forgotten. Naval Constructors, in their jealousy of one another, have each endeavoured to design the largest monster it is possible to float. The search after the "extreme limit of endurance," as it was called by Mr. Barnaby, C.B., has gone on year by year, until great floating machines, far exceeding those of past times in unwieldiness, have taken the place of more handy vessels, in which alone a man can efficiently learn all that appertains to the duties of a sailor and become a skilled seaman. It was by means of the active little vessels that England was wont to send out that her flag became supreme on the seas, that English commerce penetrated to the farthest corners of the earth, and that British colonies were rooted on the shores of both the Old and the New Worlds; while the national intellect, stimulated by the excitement of the years of triumph and splendour which followed on the defeat of the Armada, took shape in a literature which is an eternal possession to mankind. But our modern ironclad is destroying seamanship. The very knowledge of the fact that it is possible to "dowse sail" and "up steam" upon the slightest emergency, tends to lower the naval skill of our sailors. They no longer study their profession with a view of learning how to perfectly handle a ship under all circumstances of wind or weather. It is not considered necessary. "Steam will do all that may be required. Why bother one's head, then, any farther?" Such are the thoughts which now-a-days prevail with the young seaman, who forgets that, even in a steamer, the man who would handle her properly must be, as it were, one with the ship, so as to understand her thoroughly, and be able to manœuvre her properly. It is only the seaman who can fight a ship, be she a sailing vessel, an auxiliary steamer, or a mastless ironclad; and to allow seamanship to deteriorate in the Navy because we have adopted the later type of fighting machine, is to court defeat and disaster in the future. It is therefore with satisfaction that we witness the departure of Lord Clanwilliam's squadron, and we trust that a detached squadron of ships, which can and will make most of their cruises under sail, will be kept constantly on the move, and that years may not again be allowed to elapse between the equipment of such a necessary training-school for young seamen.

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, Admiral-Superintendent, spent most of last week in inspecting Coastguard stations, viz., on Tuesday, Oct. 26, Ramsgate, Pegwell Bay, North Shore, Shingle End, No. 2 Battery, Northend, and Walmer. He remained the night at Walmer Castle, the guest of Lord Granville. Wednesday, Oct. 27, Kingsdown, St. Margaret's Bay, Cornhill, Casemates, Townsend, Lydden Spout, Folkestone, and Sandgate; Thursday, Oct. 28, Grand Redoubts, No. 1 and No. 2 Battery, Romney, Littlestones, St. Mary's Dymchurch. All the stations along the coasts from Ramsgate to Dungeness (except Hythe) were inspected in these three days, and the inspection of Grand Redoubts, 1 Battery and 2 Battery (all of which are on Dungeness Beach) took place during the height of the gale on Thursday forenoon. The north-east coast will probably next be inspected.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales has personally presented to Lieut. Graham, R.N., of the Royal yacht Osborne, at Marlborough House, the medal of the Royal Humane Society, which he was awarded for his gallant conduct in saving life in Portsmouth Harbour on the night of September 14.

With reference to the notice which has appeared in the daily papers, that letters for the Detached Squadron sent to the Cape de Verde Islands should be despatched on the 6th inst., we have received later information from the Admiralty that these letters will be in time if posted in London on the evening of the 8th or the morning of the 9th inst.

The November Navy List notifies the death of Paymaster B. T. Colley, and the following removals from the Active List:—Acting Sub-Lieutenant T. W. Shortland, unable to pass; Engineer (for temporary service) Samuel J. Williams, resigned; Chief Gunner Timothy Donohue, pensioned; Gunner George Starks, dismissed by court-martial; Boatswain Alfred Miller, pensioned.

There would seem to be rather an unexpected breakdown on the part of the Hertha, German frigate, at Plymouth. Having defects in her hull, orders have been received for her to be surveyed by the dockyard officials, who will report as to her being docked at Devonport for repairs, or whether she should return to Kiel, to turn her cadets over to another ship. The Hertha was, we believe, going on a lengthened cruise.

Captain Henry Eden, R.N., who died last week, took part in the Euphrates exploring expedition under Colonel Chesney. He was afterwards wrecked in the Tigris in 1836. As First Lieutenant of the Dido, during the closing operations of the first China war, and in command of her boats, destroyed the forts and magazines at Woosung.

Wednesday last being the tercentenary of Sir Francis Drake's arrival in Plymouth Sound after circumnavigating the globe, the mayor took occasion to point out that the town had no public monument to that hero, and he thought that day a fitting occasion to invite co-operation in erecting a monument to Sir Francis Drake's memory, towards which he would himself subscribe £50. We wish every success to the movement thus set on foot by the mayor, Mr. Derry, who has done much in times past for Plymouth.

The remains of the late Lieutenant Irving, of the Terror, recently discovered by Lieutenant Schwatka's Franklin Search party, will, at the request of General Irving, be sent over to this country, at the expense of the Admiralty, for interment in Edinburgh. We are glad to see that a proposal is being made, in the columns of the Army and Navy Journal of New York, to present Lieutenant Schwatka with a testimonial from his brother-officers of the United States Army, the subscription to be limited to one dollar. We trust the enterprise of this explorer will meet with the recognition it so justly merits.

An addition to the Fleet was made on Tuesday by the launch, by the Barrow Shipbuilding Company, of the two composite gunboats Banterer and Espoir, which are sister-ships to the Grappler, Wrangler, and Wasp, launched from the same yard a few weeks ago. These vessels are 125 ft. long, 23 ft. 6 in. in breadth, and 12 ft. depth of hold, the displacement being 455 tons. The engines are 360 indicated horse-power. Each vessel will carry four guns, two 64 and two 25-pounders.

Admiral Sir A. Cooper Key, K.C.B., and Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay, C.B., accompanied by Vice-Admiral Sir W. H. Stewart, K.C.B., visited Chatham Dockyard on Wednesday. The chief object of their visit was to inspect the Superb. An inspection was also made of the Polyphemus, which will be launched early next year.

Several captains of the Royal Marines under five years' service recently submitted to the Admiralty the hardships under which they laboured by Clause 3 of G.O. No. 131, of October 1, 1880, which provides that captains must serve five years in that rank before they are permitted to pass for their majority, from having been a lengthened period before obtaining their companies, and prayed that some amelioration of the order might be made in their case. We are glad to be able to record that their Lordships have been pleased to issue directions that captains of the Royal Marine Light Infantry and Royal Marine Artillery, who have completed seventeen years' service, will be permitted to pass their examination for the rank of major under existing regulations, instead of those which come in force on January 1 next, provided they go through their examination before that date.

Although the new Dress Regulations for the Army were issued on October 20, with instructions that the alterations of distinctions of rank should be carried out without delay, we have not seen that any orders have yet been issued from the Admiralty for the Corps of Royal Marines to follow suit.

Rear-Admiral Curme, Superintendent of Devonport Yard, struck his flag on board the Indus on Monday, and proceeded on leave of absence, transferring his duties temporarily to Captain Chatfield, of the Steam Reserve.

Staff Commander John T. Partridge has accepted an appointment as dockmaster at Liverpool.

The Navy List for November contains the following new names of ships. Three composite gun-vessels of the Espoir class are called the Starling, Raven, and Stork, and are all building at Messrs. Samuda's; the new Mutine, building at Sheerness, is named the Satellite; the two composite gun-boats of the Merlin class, building at Devonport, are named the Heroine and Hyacinth; and the new Porcupine, also building by Messrs. Samuda, the Triton.

Professor Nordenskjöld certainly did good service for a small sum of money, as it is reported that the total expenses of his expedition in the Vega amount to no more than twenty-five thousand pounds. M. Nordenskjöld is now engaged in writing the history of the Vega's voyage, which will be published in England, France, Russia, Italy, and Germany, simultaneously.

The Mayor and Corporation of Rochester have petitioned the Admiralty to have the Middle Buoy at Sheerness lighted with gas. The matter has been referred to the Hydrographer, but his well-known liking for ancient hydrography will, it is feared, prevent his falling in with any such "new-fangled notion" as gas-lit buoys.

Commodore Wilson was at Melbourne in the Wolverene on the 1st inst., having arrived there to be present at the Exhibition.

Vice-Admiral Robert Coote, C.B., was at Chefoo in the Vigilant on September 13, awaiting the arrival of his flag-ship, after her docking and repair.

Vice-Admiral Hood, C.B., has been directed to be ready for sea with the Channel Squadron under his command on Tuesday next, the second-in-command at Plymouth having also been ordered to be ready by that date. The Squadron will not, we are pleased to learn, be sent to cruise off Vigo at present, but will at once proceed to Queenstown.

The fitting of the gun-gear of the Majestic will be undertaken by the firm of Armstrong and Co., and we believe the cost of these fittings will be just £25,000.

It is proposed to alter the dates on which the torpedo and gunnery courses are now begun, so as to better suit the commencement of the term at the Royal Naval College.

The Magpie has done good service to a Chinese steamer named the Kang-chi, and certainly should have a claim for salvage. The steamer struck on the Hainan Banks, which are now being surveyed by the Magpie, and was well hard and fast when the Magpie heard of the accident at Hoihow, some forty miles distant, and immediately went to render assistance. After considerable exertions, she managed to tow off the steamer, with loss of rudder, and towed her to Hoihow. There the artificers of the Magpie set to work, and soon fitted the merchant steamer with a temporary rudder, and sent her on her voyage once again.

However conservative the Chinese may be in some of their customs, they are certainly as wide awake as most nations in adopting the latest novelties in gunnery. How fully alive they are to what is going on elsewhere is seen by the fact that although the gun movement, invented by Mr. Fawcus, has not been taken up by our Government, he has received an invitation from China to allow it to be introduced into the Chinese Service.

Mr. Andrew Baillie, Naval-Instructor of the Superb, has passed the examination required for the grade of interpreter in Italian, and has obtained a first-class certificate.

The value of the services of Mr. Rowsell when he retired from the arduous duties of Director of Navy Contracts was recognised by his nomination as a Companion of the Bath. His later services in Egypt have just met with a further mark of favour by his appointment as Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. His old friends at the Admiralty, who know how zealously he worked in the organisation of the department over which he was placed, are glad to see him thus rewarded; and it is gratifying to know that the Contract Department maintains, under its present chief, that reputation for efficiency which it gained under Mr. Rowsell's management.

Staff Commander Osborn having proposed some improvements in the torpedo gear of launches, directions have been given for a steam-launch of the Superb to be fitted upon that officer's plan, with the view to its being tried and reported upon.

There is no present intention of interfering in any way with the table of relative rank of Naval and Military officers. A proposal made by the Horse Guards to allow 2nd lieutenants of the Army to be placed with lieutenants, thus giving them a step in relative Naval rank, has been opposed by the Admiralty as an injustice to midshipmen, and will not, therefore, be carried out.

The frequent failure on the part of Naval cadets to pass out of the Britannia, and the consequent notices of their having been "discharged, unable to pass," which have been inserted in the Navy List, has been looked upon as a great grievance by the parents of boys thus unsuccessful. Their Lordships have now hit upon a plan which will render it no longer necessary to advertise those who are rejected, for their names will not appear in the Navy List, and, therefore, there will be no cause to note their "removal." Remembering that the Britannia is, after all, no other than a school, and that the boys under training are only there on trial, it is far more sensible that the insertion of their names among the list of officers of the Royal Navy should be deferred until such time as they have shown themselves fit for the service, and have passed out of the Britannia.

The Committee for Reorganising the Staff of Admiralty Messengers has completed its labours, and the recommendations embodied in the report have been submitted to the Treasury to decide whether the proposed scheme shall be carried out. The report is as yet a closed book, but we believe that if the recommendations are carried out in their entirety, there will be an enormous reduction in the number of established messengers, their places being taken by men hired "for the job," by the day or week. By this means it is sought to avoid all claim on their part for pensions, or for leave during sickness, there being a growing opinion among a certain class of "liberal-minded" people that any reward for past services is a mistake, and that pensions as a whole are vicious. We hope, however, that, come what may in the future, the services of the past will not be forgotten so far as the existing established messengers are concerned. There is no reason why the same system, as was applied to the clerical staff on its recent reduction, should not be applied to the less important officials. The clerks who went under the War Office and Admiralty Act received not less than half their salary as a pension, and an addition in the shape of a bonus for each year served on the Junior List. In justice to the messengers, the same system should be applied in their case.

The Greenwich Hospital pension of £25 a year for gunners, vacant by the death of Mr. Charles Chamberlain on October 9, has been awarded to Mr. Thomas Westlake.

We are informed that ten commissions in the Royal Marine Light Infantry will be given to competitors at the approaching examination for admission to the Royal Military College. Gentlemen desirous of being placed on the list of candidates for these appointments should apply to the Secretary to the Admiralty for the necessary form of application. It is to be understood that the fact of being placed in such list does not in any way debar a candidate from accepting an appointment to Sandhurst, should the place he obtains in the competition entitle him to admission.

A good-service pension of £200 a year, for General Officers of the Royal Marines, has become vacant by the death of General Brown-Grieve, C.B., at the age of 85 years. The deceased officer had received the war medal and the Turkish medal for services on the coast of Syria. He was awarded the good-service pension in 1870.

The Ikbal Dowleh, mentioned by the Standard as the commander of the troops which inflicted a severe defeat on the Kurds, is very probably the Ikbal-ood-Dowlah—one of the ex-Royal family of Oude—who has been for some years living on a pension at Bagdad, and who lately visited London.

The Lord Mayor of London elect and the Mayor of New York elect for 1880-1881 are Irishmen. Mr. McArthur comes from Londonderry; Mr. Grace, the chief magistrate of the great American city, is the son of a poor emigrant from Ireland, who settled in Lima many years ago. These gentlemen have got on very well without fixity of tenure.

We are informed that the Chilians will probably make an attempt to capture Lima very soon, and it is thought they will be successful. They can land an army and turn the defences of Callao, so as to sit down before the capital, which is not defended by permanent fortifications of any kind.

A Cavalry Pioneers' class will in future be assembled annually at the School of Military Engineering, Chatham, on February 20. A subaltern officer and one serjeant will be selected from each cavalry regiment at home, exclusive of the Household Cavalry, for instruction at the class. The officer and non-commissioned officer will be selected mainly on account of their possessing a natural aptitude for the work, in order that they may not only become efficient themselves, but also be able to instruct others in the special duties of pioneers.

We are glad to find that Colonel Collingwood has at length had his services as the commander of a brigade during the greater part of the Zulu war recognised, by being made a C.M.G. The reward is not a great one, considering the custom of the Service, and its value has a good deal deteriorated owing to the delay in bestowing it. Why is it that officers' rewards come so tartily?—so tardily, indeed, that in some cases, as in that of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Cleland, the intended recipient is dead before the gazette appears.

It has been arranged that the following batteries, Royal Artillery, shall proceed to India with the cavalry drafts sailing from Portsmouth in H.M.S. Malabar on December 15, viz., B and G Batteries 1st Brigade, and N and O Batteries 3rd Brigade.

Colonel G. T. Chesney, Royal Engineers, leaves England in time to embark at Brindisi on the 15th inst. for Bombay, en route to take up his appointment as Secretary to the Government of India, vice Colonel Allen Johnson.

It is most earnestly to be hoped that the movement to establish coffee-houses for the soldier in garrison towns may be attended with success, and that such institutions as that which was opened by the Duke of Connaught at Woolwich last week may find favour with the rank and file. It is now a good many years since the Officers of the Guards founded and opened a coffee-house for the men, in which newspapers, games, and means of innocent amusement were liberally furnished; but we have not heard that it was very largely patronised, or that it succeeded in weaning the soldiers from the public-house, the music salon, and the haunts which so often lead to their misfortunes. Let us trust that the institution was not quite a failure. The Duke of Connaught's earnest and worthy efforts to elevate the status and to promote the comfort and well-being of the soldier, entitle him to the thanks of all who feel and know how much depends on the sobriety and morality of the Army at large. The proceedings at Woolwich were eminently satisfactory, and those who have laboured so strenuously in establishing the coffee-house are to be congratulated on the fair start which his Royal Highness has given them, and on the unmistakable marks of sympathy which their work received from the population of the town wherein it has been established.

It is certainly rather cool, as the Globe pointed out last Monday, for a correspondent to make authoritative statements respecting the condition of things in Cabul from his office in Calcutta. Up to November 1, no news from Cabul later than October 16 had come to hand anywhere. It seems waste of powder to telegraph from Calcutta to London the contents of General Brooke's despatch respecting the measures he took to cover the retreat of the Maiwand fugitives to Candahar, satisfactory as they were, and creditable to him and his officers. Another morning paper contained a very interesting letter from a correspondent with "the burying force," as it may be termed, in which precise details of the battle—with a very bitter feeling and strong bias against General Burrows—were given; but he might as well have left out the discrediting remark that some of the soldiers disgraced themselves by breaking open the mess-stores, and getting hopelessly drunk in the horrible scramble of the retreat,—men maddened with thirst, and loosed from all control. The evening paper we have mentioned seems to overlook the fact that our morning contemporary had on November 1 a telegraphic despatch dated Candahar, October 31.

In reference to complaints respecting changes in officers' uniforms—or, rather, the frequency of them—it is right to say that the Duke of Cambridge does not originate them or it, and that these emendations in lace, insignia, buttons, and wearing of belts and sashes are of extraneous growth, though who "the military Pooles" are to whom one of the evening papers alludes we have no means of determining. One thing is quite certain, that the most unbecoming, graceless garment ever devised—not barring the serge jumper of the simple soldier—is the hideous shell-jacket in which our officers—not all of them Apollo Belvederes—appear even at country balls. A Major of sixteen stone, with an upper work of scarlet cloth and an unmeasurable rotundity of pantaloon, swoln as the cheeks of Æolus, backing and filling in a ball-room, is really an outrage on decency, not because he is a major of that weight and of a peculiar breadth of beam, but because of the exposure he makes of proportions which would be merely suggestive of great solidity of base, if concealed without undue "fitness" beneath a tunic.

Judicial proceedings of more than passing moment have recently occurred in Volunteer matters, demonstrating, we think—what has long been patent to us—that our citizen-soldiers, splendid men and intelligent entities as in most cases they are, nevertheless lack in a great degree that which the Duke of Wellington, with characteristic terseness, averred constituted the difference between an army and a mob, namely, discipline. That it is so, that it is not an arbitrary conjecture, and that it can be otherwise from an army stand-point, is a self-evident axiom, incident to their organisation, and cognisable by all but the most superficial observer. These remarks are not meant to reflect on in any way or to be disparaging to the force. A fiasco à propos of the foregoing has recently occurred at Croydon, to prevent the recurrence of which it would be commendable to initiate some remedial measures. Whilst marching at attention through the streets, a Volunteer of thirteen years' service obtruded himself in plain clothes on the right of a section of fours, forming an integral part of the local corps, and, in consequence, obstructed the march, talking and acting in a manner antagonistic to the attributes of a soldier. The adjutant of the corps, an officer from the Black Watch, acted as every right-minded soldier should; he, with the hand not required to hold his sword, moved the private out of the line of march, without using more force than was necessary so to do, as was testified by an officer and serjeant who witnessed the act. The private, doubtless for justifiable reasons, has been dismissed from the corps, which presupposes that he was equivalent to what in the Service would be called a "bad character." Out of vindictiveness, the adjutant suffers the indignity of being summoned for assault; and the local magistrates, instead of dismissing the case, have adjourned it, leaving the matter sub judice. Either Volunteer adjutants must abdicate their functions, if such scenes are to be allowed to recur, or they must be upheld, and measures framed or enacted protecting them from frivolous actions by ex-members of dubious character who, having been disgraced, pose before the magistrate as injured, innocent parties, and subject the disciplinary agents sent straight from the Army to gross indignities.

We see that M. Phillipoteaux, a French artist, charged to do a large painting of the siege of Plevna, has just returned after a long voyage in Russia, Roumania, and Turkey. His performance will, therefore, not be wanting in local colour. In the various episodes represented in this panorama, it would be curious to find a sketch of the Russian Commander-in-Chief, after the great repulse of his columns, writing his appealing despatch to Prince Charles, to send the Roumanians to his rescue. The Prince, when he consented, had little idea of the reward in store for him.

The De Cissey case, which has caused such a commotion in France, especially among military men and journalists, will shortly come on before the civil courts, for the War Minister will not hear of granting his predecessor a court-martial or a court of inquiry. He has removed General de Cissey from his command, and has nothing to do with ulterior charges, which the General must deal with on his own account. As far as a court of inquiry is concerned, it is said it would be difficult to form such a court, which would have to be composed of three marshals and two generals of division senior to General de Cissey. Now, France only possesses three marshals—Canrobert, MacMahon, and Lebœuf, who is under a cloud—and ten generals senior to the ex-War Minister, most of whom could not support the fatigue of an inquiry. A court-martial would be more easily formed, and it would have been possible to have brought General de Cissey before such a court, on the charge of having been guilty of an arbitrary act. General Farre, however, preferred removing General de Cissey from his command to resorting to this court, which would have been composed of officers who had served under the orders of the ex-Minister of War. This he considered would be detrimental to discipline. It seems that French military men are in hopes that their slandered comrade will be able to justify his conduct, and heap confusion on his enemies. In the event of his triumph, several editors will be mulcted in heavy damages, and will have leisure to repent in prison charges made in haste and under the influence of political spite.

Skobeleff is getting on with his railway. The first section, from the port of Michaelovsk to the inland post of Mulla Kari, 15 miles, is open for traffic; the second, to the Goloff Cossack post, 20 miles further east, is nearly complete, and the Lenkora navvies have already commenced levelling the ground for the third section of the line. The nastiest part of the 150 miles of road intervening between the Caspian at Michaelovsk and the commencememt of the Akhel Tekke oases at Kizil Arvat is the initial stage from Michaelovsk to post Mulla Kari, traversing waterless sands. Beyond this water and forage are everywhere found, the road skirting in succession the fertile slopes of the Big and Little Balkans. In the columns of English daily newspapers, the region about to be traversed by the invading army is commonly spoken of as a vast expanse of sandy desert. Nothing can be more foreign to the truth. In the Russian language are two words to express the condition of the Central Asian plains,—"poostina," an empty waste, and "steppe," a prairie. Russian explorers like Stebnitski, Petroosevitch, and Gloukhovsky all concur in describing the region between Krasnovodsk and Akhel as "steppe" land. The term is simple and easily understood. In South Russia the treeless, grassy steppes stretch from the Don to the Dnieper, and north to the heart of the empire. During seven months out of the twelve they afford an immense supply of grass and corn, and during the remainder they are hidden by a mantle of snow. East of the Caspian and south of the Ust Urt Plateau a fall of snow is rare in winter, and it never remains more than a few hours on the ground. During seven months out of the twelve the plains are covered with grass, during the remainder they are rendered in many places completely bare by the intense heat of the sun and the absence of water. Thus, practically speaking, the torrid season of Turkmenia is the winter season—in the popular acceptation of the term as implying a period of dead vegetation—while the chilly wet season of November and December and the warm months of the early year constitute the period of Nature's activity in that region. This latter season has been chosen by Skobeleff for his campaign against the Turcomans of Akhel Tekke.

The cavalry standard question is under discussion just now at the Russian Ministry of War. Owing to the largeness of Russian cavalry regiments, and their numerous squadronal subdivisions, during an engagement, the regimental standard is rarely able to be of much use for rallying or other purposes, and during the Russo-Turkish war was repeatedly left at the rear by the commanders. It is now proposed that the carrying of the regimental standard into action shall be optional on the part of the commander, who shall be allowed full discretion on this point. In place of the standard, it is suggested that each squadron shall have its own znatchëk, or guidon, each of a special colour, as is the practice in the Caucasian and Turkestan armies. During the late war, several of the Russian regiments followed this practice, with great satisfaction to officers and troops. The 7th Hussars, of Beloroosk, and the 7th Dragoons, of Kinburn, had each squadronal guidons, consisting of bright tufts of silk depending from gilded bamboos, presented to them by Russian ladies previous to the outbreak of the war. A special guidon was carried behind the commander. Generals Skobeleff and Gourko are said to have greatly approved of the plan,—the former, indeed, trained in Central Asia, introducing it into several of the regiments under his command.

The examination of officers for their promotion in the Army, though only introduced a comparatively short time ago, has had a very stimulating effect in encouraging the study of their profession among officers of all branches of the Service. It was evidently a step in the right direction, but, like many others, the system on which it is worked is capable of considerable improvement. The present practice is for all officers to be examined by a "mixed board," i.e., by officers belonging to other regiments than those to which the candidates belong, the reason for which must be, that the Authorities are either afraid or convinced that, the officer of their own regiments would "favour," or "not report honestly," on those who presented themselves for examination. This may be called a system of "distrust," and consequently one of the very worst that a Government jealous of the tone of its Army should foster or encourage. The examination of all officers for promotion, up to the rank of captain, should be conducted by the adjutant of the regiment, superintended, not passively, but actively, by a major, the latter reporting in detail to the commanding officer of the regiment on the satisfactory or unsatisfactory qualifications of the candidates. The examination of captains for promotion to field rank should, on the other hand, be conducted by "mixed boards," as it embraces a much wider range of subjects, and should always contain questions on branches of the Service other than that to which the candidate belongs. This examination should be much more comprehensive and practical than the others, as officers on attaining this rank are placed in much more responsible positions than previously, and therefore require correspondingly higher qualifications.

We wonder will that most useless article of military equipment—the sabretasche—ever be withdrawn. It would be impossible to conceive anything more inconvenient, for it is ever in the way of the man when he is dismounted, and the only argument which can be used in favour of its retention is that it is an old "institution." But in times of practical soldiering we look for utility rather than show. The mounted trooper is quite sufficiently weighted as it is, without his being encumbered with a host of things which are only carried in order to add to his picturesque appearance.

PURCHASE CAPTAINS.

"Dragoon" writes:—"I have read with much interest the various letters that have appeared from time to time in your valuable paper respecting the 'Purchase Captains.' They are, I am sure, most grateful to you for having drawn attention to their hard case. There is, however, one feature which I consider is particularly hard on them, and all Purchase officers, which, as far as I can recollect, has never been pointed out. According to the new rules, every one after serving a certain number of years is entitled to a certain pension. As retirement is compulsory for all after a certain period, I presume that every one is under these new rules, and, therefore, entitled to the pensions laid down by them according to their service and rank. It has, however, also been ruled that any one taking a pension forfeits his commission money. This cannot be just. Surely they should, when compelled to retire, receive back the money they have paid, in addition to their pensions, to put every one on an equality. In many cases the loss of their money absolutely prevents their being able to take a pension at all. This is especially the case in the Cavalry, where those who purchased their troops generally gave £5,000 or £6,000 for them. They, therefore, cannot afford to lose such a large sum for the sake of a pension of £200 or £300 a year. Consequently they get nothing when compelled to retire, but their own money back again. Why, too, are Purchase officers, when placed upon compulsory half-pay, obliged to leave a certain amount of their purchase-money in the hands of Government when others pay nothing for their half-pay. The whole thing is an anomaly, and most unjust to the older officers, who certainly never would have paid such large sums had they thought it likely that they would be compelled to retire after a certain number of years' service on such much worse terms than their juniors."

The result of the recent annual examination of engineer students has been promulgated. Seventy-two were examined. The maximum number of marks obtainable is 8,500, the subjects being as follows:—Arithmetic, 600; algebra, 700; geometry, 800; trigonometry, 700; differential calculus and conic sections, 750; mechanics and hydrostatics, 750; physics and chemistry, 600; English grammar and composition, 450; geography and history, 400; French, 250; and engineering, 2,500. The first four on the list belong to Portsmouth:—D. J. Bennett, five years ten months' service, 4,359 marks for general subjects and 1,925 for engineering; C. W. Gregory, five years ten months, 3,835 and 1,825; G. Goodwin, three years ten months, 4,545 and 1,038; and F. Hobbs, three years ten months, 3,986 and 1,518. Next in order of position come F. Curtis, Devonport, five years eleven months, 3,246 and 1,955 marks; G. F. Gorfett, Portsmouth, 3,169 and 1,965; F. Flood, Chatham, four years ten months, 3,371 and 1,561; J. J. Carey, Devonport, five years eleven months, 3,292 and 1,565; W. J. Anstey, Portsmouth, four years ten months, 2,827 and 1,814; A. E. Westaway, Devonport, five years eleven months, 2,863 and 1,775; S. Rawling, Devonport, five years eleven months, 2,783 and 1,745; P. Marrack, Devonport, four years eleven months, 2,994 and 1,391; W. C. Burrett, Portsmouth, three years ten months, 3,240 and 1,112; J. E. Jenkins, Portsmouth, five years ten months, 2,386 and 1,900; and A. W. Gibbs, Portsmouth, five years ten months, 2,662 and 1,570. Bennett, Gregory, Curtis, Gorfett, Carey, Westaway, Rawling, Jenkins, and Gibbs have passed for entry into the Royal Naval College. In the lower division, composed almost exclusively of engineer students belonging to the Marlborough, 138 were examined, three belonging to Devonport being reported absent. The maximum number of marks given is 3,600, apportioned as follows:—Arithmetic 400, algebra 450, geometry 500, trigonometry 450, mechanics and hydrostatics 450, physics and chemistry 400, English grammar and composition 400, geography and history 300, and French 250. The lowest score obtained was 330, and the first batch on the list is:—S. Morish, two years' service, 2,708; S. Screech, two years and six months, 2,674; H. Gregory, two years and six months, 2,586; R. W. Jones, two years and six months, 2,586; B. Watkins, two years, 2,484; F. W. Austin, two years and six months, 2,326; A. Pattison, two years, 2,316; S. Haddock, two years and six months, 2,299; F. H. Lister, one year, 2,230; W. Ransom, two years, 2,171; G. Taylor, two years and six months, 2,117; and G. Webster, one year, 2,109.

The Irish Times states that "the Military authorities in Dublin are taking further steps to meet the apprehended disturbances in the South and West Districts of Ireland by the despatch of strong parties of troops to the localities in which they are likely to occur. In a few days a troop of the 19th Hussars will march to Navan, and take up quarters there for the winter, and it is also now contemplated to send a detachment to Killarney. On the 15th of this month, Tuam and Headford will be garrisoned by strong detachments of infantry, and on the same date a contingent from the Royal Marines will arrive at Bantry from Kinsale, and will occupy the workhouse there."

The Army.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards. H.M.S. Orontes arrived in Bombay Harbour on the night of the 14th ult., from Natal, with the regiment on board. She left on Sept. 29, and experienced favourable weather on the voyage. The strength of the regiment was: 1 field-officer, 6 captains, 8 subalterns, 5 staff officers, 11 staff serjeants, 24 serjeants, 6 farriers, 6 trumpeters, 24 corporals, and 373 privates—total, 464. The following officers arrived in the Orontes, viz.:—Col. Alexander, Capts. Benthall, Gibbings, Thompson, Douglas-Willan, Vetch, and Rogers; Lieuts. Sadlier, Alexander, and Lowry; Sub-Lieut. Harkness; 2nd Lieuts. Goold-Adams, Willett, Wright, and Hearn; Pymr. (Capt.) Elliott, Lieut. and Adjt. Nicholas, Rdgmr. Crowdy, Qrmr. O'Donnell, Vet.-Surg. Longhurst, Surg.-Major Maunsell, and Surg. Clark. The regiment landed at the Sassoon Dock on the afternoon of the 15th, and proceeded during the course of the evening in special trains to Deolalee, en route to Meerut, where it is stationed. Lieut. Leslie is under orders to proceed to India in H.M.S. Malabar, which leaves Portsmouth on Dec. 15. He takes out a draft of the Carabiniers.

6th Dragoon Guards. A draft of fifty-eight men embark for India on Dec. 15, in H.M.S. Malabar, in charge of Lieut. Leslie, King's Dragoon Guards.

8th Hussars. Capt. Field and Lieut. Davidson embark for India on Dec. 15, in H.M.S. Malabar, the former in charge of a draft of seventy-two men for the 13th Hussars, the latter with a draft of fifty-four men for his own regiment.

10th Hussars. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Wood is under orders to embark for India on Dec. 15, in charge of cavalry drafts proceeding out in H.M.S. Malabar. 2nd Lieut. Allsopp also proceeds out in the Malabar, in charge of a draft of thirty-one men.

12th Lancers. Capt. Hon. W. J. Stewart embarks for India on Dec. 15, in charge of a draft of 62 men, proceeding out in the Malabar. Lieut. Hon. G. Vernon has rejoined his regiment at Secunderabad, but it is said that the circumstances of his recent arrest at Poona have been reported to the Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Presidency.

13th Hussars. The Times of India says:—"The 13th Hussars have been ordered to proceed to Candahar, as soon as relleved at Lucknow by the 10th Hussars." A draft of seventy-two men proceed to India in H.M.S. Malabar on Dec. 15, in charge of Capt. Field, 8th Hussars.

14th Hussars. Lieut. M'Call embarks for India on Dec. 15 in H.M.S. Malabar, with a draft of 52 men. Lieut. Hamilton has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya.

17th Lancers. Lieut. Steele has been appointed musketry-instructor, vice Capt. Russell. Lieut. Neeld has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya. 2nd Lieut. Renton embarks for India on Dec. 15 in charge of a draft of 36 men, proceeding out in H.M.S. Malabar.

19th Hussars. Major Williams took his farewell of the regiment on Friday last at Island Bridge Barracks, Dublin. At his request the non-commissioned officers assembled in their mess-room, when Major Williams, in a short and effective speech, expressed his regret at leaving, and, referring to the many happy days spent with them, both in India and at home, presented them with a very handsome testimonial, viz., a silver ink-stand. The regimental serjeant-major, on behalf of the non-commissioned officers, thanked Major Williams for his valuable present, expressing how deeply his loss would be felt by them, and wishing him every success and happiness in the future. Major Williams's retirement is deeply regretted.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut. J. D. Kirwan and W. A. Plant, B Brig. R.H.A., have been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

Brevet Col. T. P. Smith, B Brig. R.H.A. (late Bengal), is in command of the Royal Artillery with Major-Gen. Phayre's Division at Candahar, having Capt. E. Blaksley, 2nd Brig., as his adjt.

Major and Brevet Col. H. J. F. E. Hickes, commanding B Baty. A Brig. R.H.A., has been promoted Lieut.-Col., and posted to the 7th Brig., and ordered to hold himself in readiness to proceed to Gibraltar for duty.

Major W. R. C. Brough, L Baty. 5th Brig., now with the Khyber Force, has been posted to the B Baty. A Brig. R.H.A., at Dublin, and been ordered home for duty with his new battery.

The Irish Times announces that Major Sir George Strahan, K.C.M.G. will remain about 12 months at the Cape before being relieved by Sir Hercules Robinson. On transferring his duties, he will proceed direct to Tasmania, to take over the Governorship now temporarily held by Major-Gen. Sir John Lefroy, K.C.M.G.

Col. C. E. Oldershaw, C.B., leaves England to-day in the s.s. Strathleven for Bombay, to assume command of the Royal Artillery at Mhow.

Capt. W. Law, provost marshal, took up duty as brig.-major, 1st Infantry Brigade, Candahar Field Force, on July 30, vice Capt. P. C. Heath, killed in action. Capt. Law, when we heard from Candahar, had been obliged to apply for sick leave to England.

Good-conduct medals were presented on Wednesday to the under-mentioned non-commissioned officers and men attached to the District Staff at Woolwich. The medals were presented at a full-dress parade of the whole of the Royal Artillery Regimental Staff, under the command of Col. R. Oldfield. The recipients were Serjts.-Major J. J. Croce, B. Copeland, C. Hesketh, A. T. Rowley, S. S. Dowkes, R. Orson, and W. Jennings, Serjt. J. Poole, Armourer-Serjt. A. Cox, Master-Cook J. Seapens, Serjts. J. Goodhart and J. Warnock, Schoolmaster R. Gooding, Qrmr.-Serjt. C. Buckland (Royal Artillery Band), Corpl. J. M'Leod, Gunners J. Ingham, H. Samuel, J. Carmichael, G. Stokes, C. Maples, S. Wood, E. Chapman, C. Hookway, R. Brunton, J. Reeson, and Driver D. Luckhurst. At the close of the presentation, Col. Oldfield, addressing the men, dwelt at length on the desirableness of young soldiers who had witnessed the distribution trying to compete for this much-coveted prize, and told them that if they persevered and continued in good conduct the reward would undoubtedly be theirs in the end.

Richard Wharton, late Horse Artillery, pensioned at 9d. per diem on Oct. 1, 1814, which amount was increased to 1s. 6d. on June 30, 1874, died at Stourbridge on the 16th ult. He served during the Peninsula war, was wounded in the leg and thigh, and received the Peninsula war medal.

Lieut. J. de W. Lardner-Clarke, 9th Brig., sailed from Portsmouth on Saturday in H.M.S. Crocodile, for Bermuda.

The following officers are to return home from India before Jan. 1, for the purpose of joining the School of Gunnery at Shoeburyness, viz.:—Capts. H. Pipon, A Brig. R.H.A.; F. L. Graves, 11th Brig.; J. P. Ewing, Supernumerary List; P. K. L. Beaver, 9th Brig.; W. T. G. Denny, 8th Brig.; and A. J. Dunnage, 6th Brig; Lieuts. P. F. P. Hamilton, B Brig. R.H.A.; J. M'Donnell, C Brig. R.H.A.; R. Oakes, C Brig. R.H.A.; E. Vaughan-Hughes, A Brig. R.H.A.; N. Maxwell, G Baty. 2nd Brig.; and H. M. Sandbach, Supernumerary List.

The remnant of E Bat. B Brig. R.H.A. had left Candahar for India on the 8th ult.

Capt. and Adjt. A. T. Wintle (late Bengal) and Lieuts. P. L. Williams, 4th Brig., have been granted leave from India to England, for six months.

Lieuts. M. W. Saunders, A Brig. R.H.A.; J. Temple, C Brig. R.H.A.; G. H. W. Beaumont, A Brig.; P. L. Williams, 4th Brig.; and E. D. H. Buckley, 8th Brig., have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Brevet Major E. P. Leach, V.C., Field Engineer, took up duty as brig.-major of Royal Engineers, Candahar Field Force, on Aug. 1, vice Lieut. Henn, killed in action.

The following officers have been employed with the Engineer Department attached to the Division of Major-Gen. Phayre, C.B., at Candahar, viz.:—Lieut.-Col. J. G. Lindsay, commanding R.E.; Lieut. W. W. Whiteford, adjt.; and Lieuts. C. F. Fuller, W. W. Robinson, G. Davidson, G. H. W. O'Sullivan, J. Neville, S. A. E. Hickson, W. Coles, and M. J. Slater, assist.-field engineers. Lieut. H. O. Selby has been employed as a brigade transport officer.

The Bombay Gazette says:—"With regard to the recently-published despatches, a matter which has attracted much attention is the omission of all mention of such men as Major Blackwood and Lieut. Henn, both of whom died fighting gallantly to retrieve the mistake that had been made. Out of Lieut. Henn's little company of 40 men, including three European non-commissioned officers, he himself, the three non-commissioned officers, and 27 native sappers were killed, and nine wounded. Mention of such gallant men should find place in a General's despatches, in justice to them and for the encouragement of their fellow-soldiers, who may be called upon for similar noble self-sacrificing service."

Lieut.-Col. R. de Bourbel (late Bengal), superintending engineer, 1st class, consulting engineer to the Government of India for Guaranteed Railways, Lucknow, has been transferred in the same capacity and rank to Calcutta, vice Col. F. S. Taylor, deceased.

Lieut.-Col. R. C. B. Pemberton (late Bengal), superintending engineer, 1st class, director of State railway stores, has been appointed consulting engineer to the Government of India for Guaranteed Railways, Lucknow, vice Col. de Bourbel.

The following officers have been granted leave from India to England, viz.:—Lieut.-Col. D. Ward (late Bengal), superintending engineer, 2nd grade, Military Works Branch, Punjab, P.W. Dept., for two years; Major P. Lambert (late Bengal), examiner, 2nd class, 1st grade, temporary 1st class, 3rd grade, officiating examiner, P.W. Accounts, Bombay, P.W. Dept., for one year; Brevet Major R. G. Woodthorpe, assistant superintendent, 2nd grade, Survey of India, for one year; Capt. C. H. M. Kensington, executive engineer, 4th grade, Mysore, P.W. Dept., for one year; and Lieut. St. G. C. Gore, assistant superintendent, 3rd grade, officiating 2nd grade, Survey of India, for two years, from Nov. 15, 1880.

It was rumoured at Poona, when the mail left, that the Chairmanship of the Bombay Port Trust had been given to Major G. L. C. Merewether (late Bombay). If this rumour should prove correct, says the Bombay Gazette, Government will have made again a very good selection. Major Merewether has had a good deal of experience in harbour matters, having been acting superintendent of the Kurrachee Harbour-works during their construction under Mr. Parkes; he was also executive engineer of Harbour Defences here at Bombay for some years. He is a man of ability, and of great devotion to his work, and there is no Army officer we known of who would be more acceptable to the mercantile community.

H.M.S. Crocodile sailed from Portsmouth on Saturday for Bermuda, having on board the 9th, 15th, and 20th Companies from Chatham, under the command of Capt. Georges and Lieuts. Sankey and M'Carthy; Capt. Clarke and Lieuts. Glubb and Johnstone; and Capt. Washington and Lieuts. Laffen and Hussey.

Capt. E. M. Larminie and Lieut. W. H. Chippindall have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya.

1st or Royal Scots. The 2nd Batn. was to have sailed from Bombay yesterday in H.M.S. Malabar, for conveyance home. The batn. on arrival in Ireland from India will most probably be stationed at Fermoy.

2nd Queen's. Capts. Ilderton and Montgomery and Lieut. Rusbridger leave England for India on Dec. 19, in charge of a draft of 154 men of the 2nd Batn. 2nd Lieut. Bunbury, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 25th Bengal N.I., on probation.

4th King's Own. Col. Bray, C.B., has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya, on vacating command of the 2nd Batn. Lieuts. Bonomi and Carter, 2nd Batn., have been placed under orders to return home from India, to join the regimental depôt.

5th Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. is to sail from Bombay on Tuesday next in H.M.S. Jumna, en route to England. Lieut. Biddulph, 2nd Batn., is employed as superintendent of Army signalling with Major-Gen. Phayre's Division at Candahar.

6th Regiment. We learn from Aden that the 1st Batn. leaves that station for England about the 25th inst., their place being taken by the 62nd Regt. The 6th will be much missed in Aden, where it has become most popular, and the good-conduct and excellent discipline of the soldiers have been matters of common remark. Lieut. Scott, 2nd Batn., is under orders to return home from India, for duty with the regimental depôt.

7th Fusiliers. Capts. Groube and Manning, and Lieut. Thunder, 2nd Batn., have been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate. Capt. Sweny, Lieut. Donald, and 2nd Lieut. Hardy are under orders to leave England on Dec. 19, in charge of a draft of 117 men, in H.M.S. Jumna. 2nd Lieut. Forbes, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

8th King's. Lieut. Maisey, 2nd Batn., is under orders to return home from India to join the depôt companies.

9th Regiment. Lieut. Straghan, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months. 2nd Lieut. Lugard, 2nd Batn., has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya.

10th Regiment. Lieut. Richardson, 1st Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 37th Bengal N.I., on probation.

11th Regiment. Capt. Andrews, 2nd Batn., is employed as brigade-major to Brigdr.-Gen. Walker, commanding a brigade of Gen. Phayre's Division at Candahar.

12th Regiment. Capt. Williams, 1st Batn., is under orders to return home from India to join the depôt companies. Capt. Brooke, 1st Batn., who was attached to the pay office of the 66th Brigade Depôt on probation for appointment in the Army Pay Department, has left Naas for Bury to act as pymr. to the 17th Brigade Depôt.

13th Light Infantry. Lieut.-Col. England, 2nd Batn., is under orders to embark for India on Dec. 19, in command of drafts proceeding out in H.M.S. Jumna.

15th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Cuthbert, 2nd Batn., has been granted an extension of leave to remain in England from India until March 7 next, on medical certificate. Sub-Lieut. Daly, 2nd Batn., a probationer officiating squadron-officer, Corps of Guides, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from June 3, 1878.

17th Regiment. Brevet Major Bradburne is to sail for India on Dec. 19 in H.M.S. Jumna, in command of a draft of 205 men, for the 1st Batn. Capt. Bernard, 44th, and Lieut. Morrice, 34th, do duty with the draught on the voyage. Lieut. M'Kinstry has been appointed assist.-musketry-instructor, 2nd Batn.

19th Regiment. The 1st Batn. will embark at Bermuda about the 15th inst. in H.M.S. Crocodile, for conveyance to Halifax, N.S. Capt. Phayre, 1st Batn., is employed as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Phayre, C.B., commanding the 2nd Division of the Candahar Field Force.

24th Regiment. Lieut. W. W. Lloyd, 1st Batn., a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to the 7th Bengal N.I., on probation.

33rd Regiment. Lieut. Brooke has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya.

36th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Beamish has completed his term of service with the depôt at Worcester, and has been ordered to rejoin head-quarters at Cork on the termination of his leave of absence on Dec. 31.

41st Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Wavell, who has been gazetted D.A.A. and Q.M.G. on the Staff at the Cape will take up his appointment in December, and will not be seconded until March next.

ROYAL MARINES.

Medals for long service and good conduct have been awarded to Corpl. James Bishop, R.M.A., and Corpls. F. Soper and W. H. Meakin, R.M.L.I.

Four privates of various trades, &c., embarked in the Humber on the 3rd inst., for passage to Ascension.

54th Regiment. Capt. Wilkinson has arrived home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya. Capt. Joyce leaves for India on Dec. 19, in charge of a draft of 77 men, in H.M.S. Jumna. 2nd Lieut. Hall is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 41st Bengal N.I., on probation.

59th Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies sailed from Bombay on Sunday last in H.M.S. Orontes, en route to England.

62nd Regiment is to embark at Bombay on Thursday next in H.M.S. Serapis, for conveyance to Aden, to relieve the 1st Batn. 6th, ordered home, Lieut. Wallace, a probationer, officiating wing-officer, 5th Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from Aug. 28, 1879.

64th Regiment. The depôt companies are about to be moved from Templemore to Lichfield.

65th Regiment. Capt. Arthur, and Lieuts. Tabbett and Brooke leave England for India on Dec. 19 in H.M.S. Jumna, in charge of a draft of 92 men. "G. O." writes:—"As it appears to me that both you and your correspondents, when commenting upon some lately-made promotions of lieutenants of one regiment to companies in another in the same sub-district brigade, have forgotten that such are duly provided for by G.O. No. 32 of 1873, I enclose an extract of it. By it you will see that all officers appointed to the Service since the date of its issue (April 8, 1873) are entitled to, and, therefore, expect, brigade promotion; and that those alluded to might have had cause to grumble, had they not been so promoted." Appendix to G.O. No. 32, 1873, specially issued April 8:—"General Regulations and Instructions in connection with the Localisation of the Forces:—Her Majesty has been pleased to approve of the following arrangements. . . . . . Linked battalions.—The single-battalion regiments, which are linked together to form the Line portion of a sub-district brigade, will, so far as regards the sub-lieutenants thereto appointed, and the soldiers therein enlisted, after the date of this order, constitute one corps for all military purposes. The officers and soldiers who may be so appointed to any brigade will, for reliefs, for all duties at home and abroad, and for every military purpose whatsoever, and in whatever ranks they may thereafter respectively hold, be interchangeable between the Line battalions of their brigade indifferently, without regard to the particular battalion to which they may have been first appointed to serve. . . . . . When officers are transferred from one battalion of any brigade to the other battalion thereof, the public will bear the cost of the necessary change of uniform, except when such transfer may take place on the promotion or on the application of the officer so transferred."—[We had not lost sight of this General Order, but we still think that the purchase subalterns have an undoubted cause for complaint at finding young non-purchase officers of only a few years standing promoted over them.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

66th Regiment. The correspondent of the Times of India telegraphs from Candahar on Oct. 11:—"Major Oliver, 66th Regiment, died last night of small-pox, and was buried this evening with military honours. The Candahar News, noticing his death, recalls his bringing back the remnant of his regiment from Maiwand and the disastrous retreat on Candahar. On the eve of his departure for India and England he was struck down by a fell disease, and in little more than a week we have had to deplore the loss of a fine soldier, a brave officer, a good companion, and a staunch friend. I take this opportunity to contradict the allegation that Major Oliver was one of the first to return to Candahar. He was not; he came in with his men." Capt. Beresford-Peirse is performing the duties of musketry-instructor. Lieut. Faunce has been approved acting adjt. vice Lieut. Rayner, killed in action, and Lieut. Melliss officiating qrmr., vice Lieut. Chute, killed in action.

68th Light Infantry. Capt. Westropp is under orders to proceed to India in H.M.S. Malabar, sailing on Dec. 15, in charge of a draft of the 70th. Qrmr. Shea embarks on Dec. 19 with drafts, proceeding out in H.M.S. Jumna.

70th Regiment. A draft of 56 men proceeds to India in H.M.S. Malabar, on Dec. 15, under command of Capt. Westropp. Major Greatwood is under orders to embark for India on Dec. 19, doing duty during the voyage with drafts proceeding out in H.M.S. Jumna.

72nd Highlanders. Capt. Hughes-Hallett sails for India on Dec. 19, in H.M.S. Jumna, in charge of a draft of 113 men. Major Kelsey also does duty with the drafts proceeding out in the Jumna.

75th Regiment, strength 14 officers and 542 men, left Aldershot on Saturday, and proceeded to Chatham, where it is to remain for the winter. Brevet Major Essex has been appointed D.A.A. and Q.M.G. at the Cape, and will take up his duties on an early date.

76th Regiment. Capt. Gore has arrived home from India, in H.M.S. Himalaya, on vacating his Staff appointment.

78th Highlanders. Capt. Justice and Lieut. Carfrae sail for India on Dec. 19, in charge of a draft of 81 men. Lieut. Mackenzie has been for some time past employed as brigade transport officer with Major-Gen. Phayre's Division at Candahar.

81st Regiment. Lieut. Palmes is under orders to return home from India, to join the depôt companies.

83rd Regiment. Capt. Cooke-Collis is employed as brigade-major to Brigdr.-Gen. H. H. James at Candahar. It has now been definitely arranged this week to carry out the original order, by which the regiment was to have been brought home from India, and orders have been telegraphed out for it to be held in readiness to embark at Bombay in H.M.S. Jumna, on Jan. 25, in place of the 85th, whose departure will, consequently, be delayed for a couple of months. Lieut. Thompson is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 1st Bengal Cavalry, on probation. 2nd Lieut. Burrows is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 25th Bombay N.I., on probation.

85th Light Infantry. The regiment, which was to have embarked at Bombay for England on Jan. 25, in H.M.S. Jumna, has had its sailing orders countermanded, in consequence of the decision to bring home the 83rd. According to present arrangements, it will not leave India until March 31, when it will be conveyed home in H.M.S. Euphrates. Lieut. Bulmer passed the lower standard in Persian at Kurram on Sept. 15.

8[illegible]th Regiment. The head-quarters and service companies sailed from Portsmouth on Saturday last in H.M.S. Crocodile, en route to Bermuda. The following officers embarked with head-quarters:—Lieut.-Col. Adams; Majors Mackenzie and Gray, Brevet Major Crofton; Capts. Chatfield, Sir G. F. C. Travers, Bart., Stuart, Graham, and Jackson; Lieuts. Selby-Smyth, Haggard (adjt.), Seton, Gaussen, Swaine, Stewart, Scott-Plummer, and Allen; 2nd Lieuts. Buckle, Welman, and H. Welman; Pymr. (Capt.) Luke; Qrmr. Cleary. A correspondent writes:—"Although my remarks are penned merely from the view of an interested looker-on, I must certainly fully sympathise with any of the members of these two gallant regiments who may, in the one case, desire to return to England speedily; and in the other, not to leave it quite so soon as they have had to do. I have observed from time to time certain paragraphs in your excellent paper (which I now and again see), which shows me you have already commented on the subject. 'Tommy Atkins's' long letter, which appeared in your issue of Saturday last, sufficiently speaks for the 83rd Regt. and its claims to be considered. I understand that the 86th Regt., which is, in fact, the battalion linked to the 83rd, possesses equally strong claims. I believe I am not inaccurate when I say that this regiment has not had the advantage of much over 20 years, in all, in Great Britain and Ireland, during the present century. It has now just left our, to it, rather inhospitable shores for the fifth time, for foreign service, within almost the memory of some now living. However, not, in the absence of official records or documentary evidence, to venture upon data of embarkation, early in this nineteenth century, for India, and again, later on, for the West Indies, you will perhaps kindly allow me to state what I know from actual fact. The 86th embarked for India in 1842, and returned from that country in 1859, having, within the two years prior to its homeward voyage, taken an active and noteworthy part in the suppression of the great Indian Mutiny, and having highly distinguished itself during the Central India Campaign. It enjoyed a little over a year in England, and was then sent to Ireland for four years, and was despatched to Gibraltar in 1864. In 1867, it was again ordered to 'move on,' the Cape of Good Hope, the West Indies, and the Mauritus being in turn selected for its temporary abiding-place. Finally, on its voyage to this latter station, it was disembarked at Port Elizabeth, and after many months of much discomfort, it was taken on to its destination, the then fever-stricken island of Mauritius. Very quickly the numerous victims of the epidemic had to be sent back to the Cape of Good Hope, whither the regiment itself also soon proceeded; and in 1875, the gallant, good-tempered County Downs landed at Cork for a further period of 'home service,' having spent some few years in Cape Town, where they were highly appreciated. After a couple of years in their native isle they were at last brought over to England, and have enjoyed the proud privilege of serving in it for about three more. Truly those among them wishful to remain a little longer in England, or of sufficient age and service to remember or be acquainted with facts, must think justice is very rigorously dealt out to them. The regulation five years on 'home service,' and then any station that may require a relief! And as the 83rd are not to return for another year, or may be more, being, as it is said, struck off the list of reliefs, the 86th have not the poor satisfaction of knowing that, in their case, the so-called 'linked-battalion system' is being carried out. The poverty of such a reason in the case in point is shown by the longer period of home service of the 50th Regt. and the shorter of foreign of the 2nd Batn. Rifle Brigade, and other variations in the rule might be named. All this suggests the query,—Where is the colonel of the regiment, and does he take no interest in a corps for the nominal command of which he draws large pay? My paper is full, and I fear your space is already too much taken up. The 2nd Batn. has departed, the 1st has not arrived, and those who take an interest in the 'Ulster Fusiliers' are like the writer, Solitary."

93rd Highlanders. Lieut.-Col. Macpherson leaves England on the 10th inst., en route to resume command. Capt. Hannay has rejoined head-quarters at Gibraltar from leave in England. Capt. Prevost left England for Gibraltar on Wednesday, to rejoin head-quarters.

95th Regiment. Lieut. R. E. F. Taylor is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 35th Bengal N.I., on probation.

98th Regiment. The depôt companies are about to be moved from Templemore to Lichfield. Lieut. Bunkley has been ordered to embark for India on Dec. 19 with a draft of the 72nd, proceeding out in H.M.S. Jumna.

101st Fusiliers. 2nd Lieuts. Whitehead and Cutler sailed for Halifax, N.S., on Saturday last in H.M.S. Crocodile.

Rifle Brigade. Among the passengers for Europe by the last mail steamer from Bombay, was Lieut.-Col. Lord E. P. Clinton, 1st Batn. His lordship has been a very popular commanding officer, and there was quite a demonstration of feeling at the Poona railway-station when he left for Bombay. Officers and men loudly cheered as the train started, and the band of the regiment struck up "Auld lang syne." His lordship comes home to arrange for his retirement.

Ordnance Store Department. "O. S. B." writes:—"About two years ago a letter was published respecting the arrangement by which non-commissioned officers in the Ordnance Branch, Army Service Corps, are allowed to remain in the Service after the completion of their allotted period of 21 years. I trust you will permit me space in your valuable columns to refer to the same subject. I believe, in other branches of the Service, both non-commissioned officers and men are very rarely permitted to remain after they have completed 21 years' service, unless under special circumstances. In the Ordnance Branch, Army Service Corps, this seems a prerogative to all staff serjeants. At the present time, there are about a dozen staff serjeants (principally 1st-class) in the Branch who have completed 21 years' service, and who are, in most cases, entitled to the maximum rate of pension; their remaining on is detrimental to the Branch at large. In the first place, it hinders, in the case of a 1st-class staff serjeant, eight steps of promotion being filled up; secondly, it stops at least three rates of departmental pay, which would become vacant on the promotion of a serjeant to 3rd-class staff serjeant, as it rarely occurs that a senior serjeant is in receipt of less than the first or second rate of departmental pay; and thirdly, it hinders many old and deserving non-commissioned officers from making the increased pension to which they are justly entitled. I trust the above will come to the notice of Mr. Childers, who, with his usual sense of equity, cannot fail to see the justness of the complaint, and that he will give it his favourable consideration."

Medical Department. Deputy-Surg.-Gen. A. Smith, M.D., C.B., has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate. Surg.-Major A. F. Preston has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate. The Commander-in-Chief in India has sanctioned an exchange on the Indian roster of service between Surgs. W. H. Allen and G. B. Hickson. Brig.-Surg. W. Carden Roe is about to retire on half-pay, and will be relieved from duty at the Royal Infirmary, Dublin, by Surg.-Major Jackson. Surg. A. Keogh, M.D., sailed for Bermuda on Saturday in H.M.S. Crocodile. Depty.-Surg.-Gen. J. L. Jameson, and Surg.-Major J. Land, M.D., have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Himalaya.

Army Hospital Corps. Capt. of Orderlies A. Platt sailed for Bermuda on Saturday in H.M.S. Crocodile.

Veterinary Department. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India has sanctioned that the administrative duties connected with the office of the inspecting veterinary surgeon, Simla, 2nd Circle, shall be carried on by Vet.-Surg. (1st class) R. Poyser, of the 6th Carabiniers, during the absence of Dr. Griffiths Evans, I.V.S., on special duty in the Indus Valley, near Dera Ismael Khan. The Times of India says:—"The letters and telegrams from our special correspondent continue to show the great difficulty in procuring proper supplies of forage. The best military writers at home, in the Times and elsewhere, were anxious from the first that the 'forage biscuit' should have been tried on a considerable scale, and with these biscuits, it might have been possible to have accelerated the advance of Gen. Phayre's column. It is rather late in the day now, but we are glad to hear that the Bombay Government have determined to give a fair trial to Cox's Compressed Horse Food, a patent taken out by Vet.-Surg. Cox, of the 4th Madras Light Cavalry. In a Government resolution, dated the 11th ult., Col. Willoughby writes:—'In view of the difficulty of supplying the Bolan with forage, which difficulty will be intensified as the cold season advances, his Excellency the Governor in Council is pleased to order that a supply of one hundred tons of Cox's Compressed Grain Cake shall be obtained from the Madras Presidency and forwarded to Sibi.' A splendid experiment should be made with 100 tons, but the fact that such a large quantity has been ordered goes to prove that previous experiments have convinced the authorities of the excellence and portability of this preparation. The Compressed Horse Food will be useful now, but it would have been invaluable a month ago." Vet.-Surg. W. B. Spooner has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate. The following officers, having recently arrived in India from England, have been posted for duty as follows, viz.:—Vet.-Surgs. R. Rowe, R.A., to Lucknow, for duty with the 10th Hussars; E. Day, to Sialkote, for duty with the 6th Dragoon Guards; R. Moore, to Campbellpore, for duty with the 8th Hussars; H. T. W. Mann, to Rawul Pindee, for duty with the R.A.; and H. A. Woodroffe, to Kirkee, for duty with the R.A.

MILITIA.

"Militiaman" writes:—"Can any one explain why non-commissioned officers (non-pensioners) now serving on the permanent staff of Militia regiments should be deprived of the medal granted after a combined service in the Army and Militia of 21 years and upwards? Many of these non-commissioned officers bear an irreproachable character, and have never been hitherto convicted by court-martial or entered in the regimental defaulters' book during the long period of their service, and they seem to have a right to be treated with the same consideration which is extended to others of their class."

"A Parent" writes to the Times:—"May I ask for a small space in your columns to point out the hard case of the 68 Militia subalterns who in the recent military competitive examination for commissions in the Line were declared to have duly qualified for commissions, and to have satisfied the examiners; Ninety commissions were actually given, and these unfortunate 68 admittedly qualified candidates were told 'that as there were no further vacancies, they would have to go up to another competitive examination in March next.' This seems very hard, for not only will they have to be examined again in all the subjects in which they were declared qualified before, but also, in consequence of a new regulation, in three others besides. Nor is this all, for there are sure to be many fresh competitors from all parts of the kingdom, who have in the meantime fulfilled the necessary conditions, and these will have had nearly a year to get up these three fresh subjects in, while the 68 who qualified at the last examination will have barely four months. The tax on parents is very serious, for these special extra subjects require specially qualified military instructors, whose charges are, as a rule, very high. I earnestly hope it is not yet too late for the military authorities to reconsider their decision, and at least allow every other vacancy as it occurs in the Line to be filled up by one of these already qualified 68 young men, some of whom, by being over the stipulated age in March next, will thus have their prospects in life thoroughly blighted."

THE VOLUNTEERS.

11th (late 20th) Middlesex Rifles. We are glad to learn that Lieut.-Col. Gore Browne has at length decided to do away with the present hideous garb in which his excellent battalion has been clothed since its establishment, in favour of the national colour. The old 20th has been for some years one of the best regiments in the Metropolis, and it will now appear to advantage, which hitherto it has not done, owing to its most unsoldierlike uniform. Capt. G. T. Wickenden has obtained a field officers' certificate at the School of Instruction, Wellington Barracks.

22nd (late 40th) Middlesex Rifles (Central London Rangers). This regiment continues to make steady progress, both in numbers and efficiency. Last year it returned 625 efficients; this year the return shows a steady advance, the number of efficients being 656, out of an enrolled strength of 678. Col. Malet and the officers entertained Major Miller at dinner on Tuesday evening, at their mess at the Freemasons' Tavern, on his retirement, when they presented him with a testimonial, consisting of a couple of valuable silver models, representing an officer and a private of the regiment in full uniform, as a mark of their respect for him, and in recognition of his long service in the corps. The models, which are perfect works of art, were from the world-renowned firm of Hunt and Roskell, of New Bond Street. Covers were laid for 40, and many of the late officers of the regiment attended.

23rd (late 46th) Middlesex Rifles. Lieut.-Col. Routledge, whose interest in his command is still as great as ever, has to congratulate himself this year on having had to sign the most favourable annual report ever submitted from the orderly-room in Great Smith Street,—770 efficients, out of an enrolled strength of 787.

The twenty-first official year in the history of the Volunteer Force terminated on Sunday, and although it will necessarily be some weeks before the return of the number of efficients is issued by the War Office, there appears every reason to believe that they will show a considerable increase, as the reports from all parts of the kingdom of the condition of the Force are satisfactory. Last year there was a grand total of 197,485 efficients, out of an enrolled strength of 206,250 of all ranks and arms, and now it is expected that the efficients will exceed the 200,000 recommended as the maximum strength by the War-Office Committee in the early part of 1879. There is, however, a loss of 19 officers in the number gazetted in and out of the Service during the 12 months, and as these do not include those who have died during that period, it is clear there will be a considerable diminution, which can be ill afforded, in the number of gentlemen holding commissions. The process of consolidating the Administrative Battalions, recommended by the committee, has now been completed, as has been the renumbering of the regiments.

17th Bengal Cavalry. Brevet Lieut.-Col. M. H. Heathcote, squadron-commander and second-in-command, has been granted leave to England for one year 182 days, on medical certificate. Lieut. C. J. Roberts has applied for leave to England, on medical certificate.

19th Bengal Cavalry. A regimental order, dated Sept. 7, makes the following appointments, consequent on the departure on sick-leave of Major G. Biscoe:—Capt. G. M. Abbott, squadron-commander, to officiate as second-in-command, vice Major A. G. Owen; Capt. E. Bruce, squadron-officer, to officiate as squadron-commander, vice Biscoe; and Lieut. H. S. Massy, squadron-officer, to officiate as squadron-commander, in addition to his other duties, vice Abbott. A subsequent order, dated Sept. 10, makes the following appointments, consequent on the departure on sick-leave of Capt. E. Bruce:—Lieut. H. S. Massy, squadron-officer, to officiate as squadron-commander, in addition to his other duties, vice Major W. W. Biscoe; and Lieut. G. W. Younghusband, officiating squadron-officer, to officiate as squadron-commander, in addition to his other duties, vice Capt. G. M. Abbott. The Gazette of India announces that H.E. the Governor-General in Council is pleased to sanction the admission to the Third Class of the Order of Merit of the under-mentioned native officer, non-commissioned officers, and men:—Jemadar Mahomed Khan: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, in defending his commanding officer, Col. P. S. Yorke, from the attacks of the Ghazis, by whom he was assailed; also for conspicuous gallantry in action at Patkao Shana on July 1, 1880. Kot-Duffadar Hubboob Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, in charging with a few men a superior number of the enemy who had suddenly attacked the flank of the squadron to which he belonged; also in rescuing Jemadar Gulab Sing, who was wounded, dismounted, and surrounded by the enemy. Kot-Duffadar Hookum Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Patkao Shana on July 1, 1880, in charging singly five of the enemy, and killing two of them. Duffadar Hurdit Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, on which occasion he, although already severely wounded, engaged and cut down two of the enemy who were attacking Sowar Bowar Boota Sing. Duffadar Nowrung Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Patkao Shana on July 1, 1880, on which occasion he was very forward and killed several of the enemy. Duffadar Alum Ali Shah: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, in rescuing Duffadar Hookum Sing, who was badly wounded and surrounded by Ghazis. Duffadar Mahomed Ishak: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, in charging three of the enemy who were attacking Sowar Saidal, 19th Bengal Lancers, killing two of them, and saving the sowar's life; also in action at Patkao Shana, on July 1, 1880, on which occasion he dismounted and singly attacked seven or eight of the enemy, who had taken post behind some rocks, and killed four or five of them. Lance-Duffadar Kair Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, in saving the life of Ressaldar Gunda Sing, 19th Bengal Lancers, when the latter was attacked by two of the enemy; also, on the same occasion, in singly charging a group of eight or ten Ghazis, and killing two of them. Lance-Duffadar Sirdar Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, in charging, with Kot-Duffadar Hubboob Sing, a superior number of the enemy, who had suddenly attacked the flank of the squadron to which he belonged, and killing two of them. Sowar Kushal Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, in rescuing Kot-Duffadar Kurram Sing, 19th Bengal Lancers, who was severely wounded and nearly overcome in a conflict with two Ghazis. Sowar Ram Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, in charging three of the enemy's horsemen who were rushing on Surg. W. R. Murphy, killing one of them, and saving that officer's life. Sowar Gulab Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, in dismounting and leading an attack, under heavy fire, on a number of the enemy who had posted themselves in a ditch, killing more than one of them, and setting an excellent example to the other men with him. Sowar Utter Sing: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, on which occasion, although wounded in two places, he charged two Ghazis, killed one of them, and saved the life of Duffadar Narain Sing, whom they had beset. Sowar Kait Ram: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmad Khel on April 19, 1880, in charging, with Kot-Duffadar Hubboob Sing, a superior number of the enemy who had suddenly attacked the flank of the squadron to which he belonged, and killing two of them in personal conflict. Sowar Khan Jan Khan: For conspicuous gallantry in action at Ahmed Khel on April 19, 1880, in dismounting and attacking a number of the enemy posted in a deep ditch, jumping into the ditch among them, cutting down two of them, and saving the life of Sowar Gulab Sing, himself receiving a wound in the conflict.

8th Bengal N.I. Lieut.-Col. R. Smith, commandant, has been granted leave to England for one year 182 days, on medical certificate.

WAR OFFICE, Pall Mall, Nov. 2, 1880

Cheshire—The under-mentioned officers resign their commissions:—Capt. J. Kennedy and Sub-Lieut. J. H. Murray (both dated Nov. 3).

INDIA.

Major-Gen. C. Harris, Bengal S.C., and Col. A. W. Lucas, C.B., Bombay S.C., have been placed on the Indian Gradation List, the former as lieut.-gen., and the latter as major-gen.

The Times of India says:—"It is believed that Gen. Roberts favours annexation with the rapid completion of the railway to Candahar. He is reported to be of opinion that the Khojuck can never prove a good frontier line, as it is passable in several directions; even if the present roads were destroyed, the railway is necessary for the support of any garrison at Candahar, as the loss in baggage animals would always be great."

TERRITORIAL REGIMENTS.

"Constant Reader" writes:—"As the subject of linked battalions and territorial regiments is engrossing so much attention, the enclosed suggestions, for which I beg space in your valuable paper, may not be uninteresting to some of your readers, in view of the formation of territorial regiments:—

Regiment.	Title.	Brigade Depôt.
25th …………	King's Own Borderers …………	Dumfries, from York
26th and 75th	Cameronian …………………………	Hamilton
30th and 99th	Duke of Edinburgh's ……………	Burnley
39th and 62nd	Dorset and Wilts………………	Devizes
41st and 53rd	Shropshire, Prince of Wales's…	Shrewsbury
45th and 59th	Notts, Sherwood Foresters ……	Nottingham
69th and 109th	South Wales Light Infantry …	Cardiff
71st, 74th, 91st	Highland Light Infantry………	Stirling
72nd and 78th	Mackenzie, or Ross-shire Buffs	Inverness

It will be seen in the above list, Dumfries, Newport (Mon.), and Nottingham are substituted in lieu of York, Warrington, and Dorchester, as depôt centres; but York has Brigade Depôt No. 10 (14th Regiment), and a regiment of cavalry, Warrington has the depôts of the 8th Regiment, and Dorchester a battery R.H.A., so they are not wholly denuded of troops by the proposed change. I would suggest that the 71st, 74th, and 91st be united as a three-battalion regiment of "Highland Light Infantry," and the 72nd given the kilt and linked with the 78th."

THE EXAMINER OF RECRUITS.

"Inquirer" writes:—"In section 577, clause 150, of the Army Circulars for June, 1880, it is laid down that medical officers are responsible for the accordance between the apparent ages of recruits and the schedules given in General Orders from time to time. Further on, attention is called to a table printed in the appendix, which has been compiled for the purpose of showing the average height, weight, and chest-measures of individuals from the ages of 12 to 21 years, and which is to be a guide to the medical officer in forming his decision. On referring to the table in question, it is found to contain the result of observations on over 2,000 individuals, and to give besides the average measurements, the maxima and minima for each age, and various other details. Having a large number of recruits passing through my hands in the course of the year, I have endeavoured to put this table to the use for which it was intended, but find that when it comes to practical working it is, in my hands at least, utterly useless. In fact, to judge of a recruit's age, we are given three quantities,—height, weight, and chest-measure,—each variable, and each related to the other in an indefinite manner. In the printed table the numbers look very well, and the unequal progression of height, weight, and chest-measure in an individual as he advances from the age of 12 to that of 21 are very clearly shown; but in the presence of actual recruits I find it quite impossible, even with the information the table supplies, to say this man, who says he is 20 years of age, is really so, or is 19, or 21, or any other age. Other medical officers may, however, have been more successful in working the problem, and I should be grateful for any information that any one may give on the subject. To put my question into as small a compass as possible, and to raise a definite issue, I will just give the measurement of three recruits that have just passed through my hands:—

No.	Chest-measure in inches.	Height in inches.	Weight in pounds.
3	34½	65¼	132

OFFICE—40 CHARING CROSS, S.W.

This Asylum was opened in February, 1854, to provide a home for the widows of non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army, of not less than 50 years of age.

There are 57 widows in the Asylum.

Each widow has a furnished room, and receives seven shillings weekly, besides a monthly allowance of two shillings and sixpence for coals.

The funded income of the charity yields only £617, with an additional £50 from the Princess Mary's Fund for Nurses, to meet an estimated expenditure of £2,300 per annum.

An annual subscription of half-a-guinea, or a donation of five guineas, entitles to one vote at each election, with the right of nominating a candidate.

J. A. STEWART, Colonel, Secretary.

CHARTALINE BLANKETS,
BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT,

Which are the LIGHTEST, the WARMEST, and the CHEAPEST BLANKETS in the WORLD, and, being portable, are particularly adapted for Military purposes. Railway wheels have been made from paper, so are HENRY'S CHARTALINE BLANKETS. The paper is specially prepared, perforated, and lined with a thin layer of cotton-wool. Price, according to size:—3 ft. by 5 ft., 1s 6d per blanket; 3 ft. 6 in. by 5 ft., 1s 9d do.; 4 ft. by 5 ft., 2s do.; 5 ft. by 5 ft., 2s 6d do.; 5 ft. by 6 ft., 2s 11d do.; 5 ft. by 7 ft., 3s 5d do. They ensure perfect cleanliness and health, and are very durable. Are used as ordinary blankets, and are equal to the warmth of two pairs of woollen. Are sold in three colours, viz., Cream, Scarlet, and Blue. The Court Journal says:—"They mitigate the privations of a hard winter." J. M'Grigor Croft, M.D., M.R.C.P., guardian of the parish of Marylebone, says:—"I can strongly recommend them for health, warmth, and comfort, to rich and poor." J. J. Pope, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., L.M., late Staff Surgeon Royal Artillery, is of opinion that too much prominence cannot be given to Henry's Chartaline Blankets. ......For bed-clothing they are, indeed, excellent." Can be obtained from all Drapers, &c., throughout the Kingdom. HENRY and CO., 12 Dantzic Street, Manchester, forward five blankets, carriage paid, to any Railway Station in the United Kingdom, on receipt of P.O.O. (or money in Registered Letter). No stamps.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1880.

WHEN the Lord Mayor spoke of the British Army as being "fit to go anywhere and do anything," his Lordship used a complimentary phrase referring to an abstract army, such a one as may be produced by-and-by, as the outcome of the anxious deliberations at the War Office, of which we were told this week; such a one as that which the Great Duke created, and of which he spoke the words used by the Lord Mayor; but the Duke of Cambridge, who returned thanks for the toast, is not the man to take the assurances of the Chief Magistrate of London on such a matter. His Royal Highness, in his speech, explained, not for the first time, the reasons why this country cannot follow Continental example in the application of universal obligation to Military service to the population. The Empire and its obligations are far beyond the limits of these Isles. The State has no right to force its citizens to armed exile. Well, admitting that to be so, there is surely a corollary from the Duke's proposition,—the State has a right to call on its people to defend their own homes? So that if there were a purely Territorial Army, there would be a logical propriety, if not necessity, to fill it by conscription. If the Militia fell short, if the Reserves were not satisfactory, the Ballot should be used to fill them for home service. It is plain that the country is on the eve of having submitted to it great changes, which may or may not be accepted by it. If the Army—meaning by that, the whole body of the Queen's forces intended for home defence and for Colonial and Imperial purposes abroad—can be made so popular that the youth of the country will enter the ranks in sufficient numbers to keep up the full strength in the First Line and in the Reserves, the question is solved,—"There's the rub." The Duke of Cambridge, who is an admirable judge on such points, spoke in high terms of the German Army, which he has just inspected; but, if we are rightly informed, Sir Garnet Wolseley does not express such an elevated opinion of it as his Chief. It is plain that the organisation of that army must be an ideal—whether beau or laid—which our Military Authorities admit they cannot follow. But when his Royal Highness, with all the force of his high authority and the weight of his illustrious name, went on to speak to the great citizen whose guest he was of the social status of the soldier, as it is regarded in "the City"—and out of it—he was rendering the Army and the country a signal public service, by holding up to well-deserved scorn the conduct of those who affect to regard the emblems of the most honourable of callings and the uniform of the Queen as badges of unfitness for admission to decent society. "It is a positive fact, though it seems almost incredible, that the unform coat of an ordinary soldier is regarded as a bar to his admission to many public assemblies. Is that the way to elevate and make the soldier respectable?" And there were cheers, in answer to this indignant question! Well, let us see what fruit these words will bear. It is not to concert-rooms or drinking-saloons, or such places, where the respectable "snobbery" of the proprietors or of their customers forbids the soldier's presence, that we desire to see his uniform admitted; but it is to places of public resort of a more healthy and profitable character that we desire to have soldiers welcomed, and treated with every respect, as long as they deserve it. And depend upon it, the men so treated will prove worthy of consideration. His Royal Highness told the Lord Mayor and his guests, the Royal Academicians, and the fair ladies who are very willing to admire the soldier in the abstract, but who would probably scold their Abigails for keeping "low company" if they were seen with sweethearts in uniform, some plain truths, and we take pleasure in reproducing them:—

> "Why, in my opinion, a well-conducted soldier is as respectable a citizen of this great country as any of us here to-night. I cannot see, therefore, why you should debar a man simply because he is in the uniform of his Sovereign—that uniform in which he is ready to go at a moment's notice to any part of the globe, and fight his country's battles—from freely entering any public assembly. Now, that is a matter in which every one I am addressing, and every one circulating in this great city, can be of great assistance in improving the condition of the Army. Let the self-respecting soldier be respected by his fellow-citizens of every rank in life. If that feeling of equality of citizenship as between soldiers and civilians were more disseminated, I believe that more and better men would be willing to enter the Service who now keep away from us, and that many bad characters would be kept out of the Service who are now unfortunately in it. I am sure that a great deal of good may be done on this point, and you, my Lord Mayor, your fellow-citizens, and every one who has the opportunity, may do good work in assisting the Commander-in-Chief and the heads of the Army in keeping the Army efficient. I endeavour to do so in regard to its discipline; but in regard to its position or general status in society, I repeat that great good may be done in the way I have suggested, and I feel sure I may count on the cordial support of those whom I now have the honour of addressing."

These are weighty words. It is to be hoped that those who heard, or who read them, will seek to give them effect.

We are glad to be able to announce that it has now been decided to bring home the 83rd Regiment from India. The regiment will embark in H.M.S. Jumna in place of the 85th, leaving India on January 25, the departure of the 85th being delayed until March 31, when it will embark in H.M.S. Euphrates.

Up to the present time, nothing has been decided as to the rewards which are to be given to the officers lately employed under General Roberts's command at Candahar, it being the intention of the Military Authorities to await General Roberts's arrival in England before taking any steps in the matter.

Surgeon H. R. D. Cross, Army Medical Department, has been appointed Assistant-Instructor to the Army Hospital Corps at Aldershot, vice Surgeon H. Bradford.

We have not observed any mention of the gallant conduct of Lieutenant Torrens, of the Scots Greys, who, with a scratch crew of different regiments, went off in a boat from the Pigeon House Fort, in Dublin Bay, during the height of the storm on Thursday week, and succeeded in rescuing the crew of a shipwrecked vessel. Such conduct as this deserves to be brought under the notice of the Authorities.

Captain H. M. Jackson, Royal Artillery, has been appointed Assistant-Colonial Secretary and Treasurer at Sierra Leone. Captain Jackson was lately on the staff of Sir John Glover in Newfoundland.

The following appointments have been made to the Royal Horse Artillery, viz.:—Brevet Major W. G. Knox, from No. 11 Battery 10th Brigade, at Weymouth, to E Battery A Brigade, at Peshawur; Lieutenant J. D. Cunningham, from L Battery 2nd Brigade, at Aldershot, to B Battery C Brigade, at Meerut; Lieutenant E. N. Henriques, from Depôt 1st Brigade, at Woolwich, to I Battery B Brigade, at same station; and Lieutenant A. C. Bailward, from A Battery 3rd Brigade, at Meerut, to A Battery B Brigade, in India.

It is believed the further reduction of Artillery lieutenant-colonels which will be recommended by Lord Morley's Committee will amount to over twenty.

Lieutenant F. M. Goold-Adams, Royal Artillery, has been selected to succeed Captain P. L. MacG. Skinner, R.A., as Second Assistant-Superintendent of Experiments at the School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness, on the latter officer's appointment to the Department of the Director of Artillery Studies.

We believe the nominations to second lieutenancies in the 7th Fusiliers have been placed entirely in the hands of General Lord Airey, as colonel of the regiment, as those for the 10th Hussars and Rifle Brigade have been for many years past in the hands of the Royal Family.

The removal of General Sir Edward Warde, R.A., to the Retired List, on the 13th inst., will cause the promotion to major-general of Colonel J. Pennycuick, R.A. This officer has been some years in India, but has not held the command of any brigade to which his Army rank and seniority might have entitled him. He now, owing to a strange system, passes over the heads of nearly the whole of the regimental colonels of Artillery.

Colonel D. S. Greene, C.B., R.H.A., has, we understand, at last proceeded to take up his command in India, and the departure of Colonel W. B. Saunders, R.H.A., is, we hear, actually fixed for January, if a suitable berth can be found for him in a troopship.

Captain Roberts, R.A., has lately completed a new range-finder. It differs in principle from any existing English range-finder, and in most points, it is said, it differs for the better. It has not yet been officially tried, but we are told that it combines simplicity with accuracy. There are numerous other improvements also in the field.

We understand the 67th Regiment would have accompanied the force under General Roberts to Candahar, but for the health of the men, no less than 150 of whom were sent back to India sick, in August last.

The following additional noblemen and gentlemen have joined the committee of the Afghan War Relief Fund, viz.:—The Marquis of Hartington, Lord Lawrence, and Generals Mark Kerr Atherley, Sir James Brind, and Sir Dighton Probyn.

It is more than probable that the 2nd Battalion Rifle Brigade on arrival from Gibraltar next month will be quartered at Woolwich, the 2nd Battalion 60th Rifles, from India, proceeding to Winchester. These arrangements, however, have not been officially sanctioned, though it is pretty certain that one battalion will go to the Depôt head-quarters, and the other take over a station as near London as possible.

We understand the War Office contemplate removing the Rifle Depôt from Winchester to a quarter nearer the Metropolis, from which it draws the greater number of its recruits, and where the head-quarters of its affiliated Militia battalions are stationed. The removal of this depôt would thus enable the brigade depôt of the Hampshire Line regiments, the 37th and 67th, to be quartered in their county town, and at the Militia head-quarters, instead of at an obscure fort in the Gosport lines.

The appointment of medical officer of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, has fallen vacant by the expiration of Surgeon-Major E. H. Roberts's period of service in that post. Mr. Roberts was appointed in December, 1875.

Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., the publishers to the Indian Office, have concluded arrangements this week for a new work on Central Asia, by the author of Grodekoff's Ride to Herat. It is called Merv, the Queen of the World; and the Scourge of the Man-stealing Turkoman, and contains information from every Russian source bearing upon the menaced Tekke oases of Akhel and Merv; together with ten maps, illustrating Russian plans for the invasion of India from the Caspian. A Russian official map, with the future Russo-Persian frontier running like a wedge between Meshed and Herat, and General Petroosevitch's account of an easy road from Geok Tepe to Merv, avoiding Sarakhs, are features in the work that promise to provoke a controversy.

Lieutenant W. C. Savile, Royal Artillery, has been appointed Inspector of Warlike Stores and Firemaster at Bermuda.

We hear that the Russian Minister of War is so satisfied with the experiments conducted with the heliograph during the recent manœuvres, that he has appointed General Kositch, of the 7th Cavalry Division, who introduced it from England last February, to make arrangements for its general use throughout the Russian Army.

We announced before the 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade left England for India that Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Edward Clinton had decided to take his battalion out to Bombay, and retire if no chance offered for him to see service. Our statement is now confirmed, as his lordship has returned home, in view of his being gazetted out.

The latest intelligence from the Cape is conveyed in a telegram dated the 1st inst. We learn that Mr. Walsh, the magistrate in Umditchwa's country, who was at first reported to have been murdered by the natives, has arrived in safety at Umtata. Fears are entertained that the Tembus may break out into open rebellion, some of the lesser chiefs showing great disaffection. Sangelizwe, the paramount chief of the tribe, who has throughout professed loyalty to the British, has placed himself under the protection of Major Elliot. Colonel Clarke has burned Moletsane's village, and is expected soon to make an attack upon the chief's stronghold. A detachment of the Colonial forces has made a raid on Maseru, and succeeded in carrying off forty horses. The enemy's loss was heavy, while on the side of the attacking party Lieutenant Nelson was killed, and six men wounded.

The 48th Regiment, now on passage home from India, which, with the 2nd Battalion Royal Scots, is to take up duty in Ireland on arrival, is proposed to be stationed at Tipperary, and the Royal Scots will, we understand, most probably be quartered at Fermoy.

We may point out that the first volume of the work by Lieutenant-Colonel Hugo von Helvig, of the Bavarian Army, treating of the important question of infantry tactics, a later volume of which we noticed last week, appeared in 1874, and the second in 1875. Both volumes were translated into English by Colonel Sir Lumley Graham, Bart., the first volume being published by Messrs. H. S. King and Co. in 1877, and the second by Messrs. C. Kegan Paul and Co. in 1878.

Having in view the impending changes foreshadowed in the Times of November 1, it becomes an important matter for Major-Generals and Colonels that the at present existing rule of two promotions for every three vacancies should be punctually and strictly carried out. Otherwise, should the new arrangements come into force next year, several Major-Generals will be deprived of the higher scale of pay contemplated, besides being compulsorily retired on account of age, and worse than all, some Colonels will be deprived of their long-looked-for advancement to the higher grade. Without, on this occasion, going further back than January 1, 1880, we find that twenty-eight vacancies have taken place up to October 31 inclusive, as per following list. These should have given promotion to nearly nineteen colonels, whereas it will be perceived that only fifteen promotions down to Colonel Peel on July 11, have been gazetted at the time we write. Consequently, a step is now due to Colonels Knight, Earle, Robertson-Ross, and Gall, the latter an officer of upwards of 45 years' distinguished service. List of vacancies in 1880:—January—Scudamore, Cadogan, Munro (dead); Malcolm (retired). March—Dennis and Stuart (retired); De Salis (dead). April—Armstrong, Hill, and Bourke (dead); Crutchley, Hodge, Budd, and Taylor (retired). May—Whimper (dead); Lugard, Curtis, Gibsone, and Griffiths (retired). June—Conway (retired). July—Lord G. Paget, Crawley, and Raikes (dead); September—Little (retired). October—Lowe (dead); Michel, Lacy, and Macdonald (retired). Total, 28 vacancies. Promoted—Colonels Woods, Whitmore, Feilding, Burroughs, Daniell, McLeod, Vyse, Nelson, Burnaby, Roberts, Rickman, Deshon, Dean-Pitt, Boldero, and Peel. Total, 15.

The Navy.

ADMIRALTY, Nov. 2, 1880.

Staff Surgeon Thomas Smith Burnett has been promoted to the rank of Fleet-Surgeon in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of 29th ult.

APPOINTMENTS.

Lieutenants—Hon. Edward T. Needham, to the Achilles; Henry William P. Johnson, to the Indus (additional), for the Arab.

Sub-Lieutenants—Edward G. Shortland, to the Valorous; C. H. Dundas, to the Rocket.

Midshipman—Frederick R. W. Morgan, to the Achilles, as supernumerary.

Staff Surgeons—Charles M. Fennell, to the Téméraire; John Mulvany, to Portsmouth Dockyard, in lieu of a surgeon; James Bradley, to the St. Vincent, in lieu of a surgeon.

Surgeons—Francis G. Wright (additional), to the Duncan; G. H. J. Bankier, to the Duke of Wellington (additional), for temporary service at Haslar Hospital; J. Crowley, to the Royal Adelaide.

Paymasters—Frederick L. M. Dyer, to the Ganges, in lieu of an assistant-paymaster; Ashley N. Innes, to the Penelope, in lieu of an assistant-paymaster.

Gunners—W. Jeffery, from the Excellent, to the Terror (additional), for the Scorpion; Edward H. Richards, to the Liffey; T. J. Browning (acting), to the Asia (additional), for the Spey.

COASTGUARD.

Commissioned Boatman—John Flynn, Ventnor, to be chief boatman at St. Catherines, vice Mundy, promoted.

ACHILLES, Capt. E. Kelly, has tried her machinery, preparatory to being moved into Plymouth Sound.

ASSISTANCE, Capt. Buckle. The first duty which will fall to the lot of the Assistance on her return to England will be, says the correspondent of the Hampshire Telegraph, to take another trip to Ireland, to bring back some more Marines who are found to be close upon their turn for embarkation. I wonder what these constant recalls have cost. I have not a moment's doubt that if the cost per head were actually worked out and put on paper, it would astonish the people at Whitehall, and take away the breath of economists. When the wear-and-tear of the ship and her machinery, wages of ship's company, and cost of coal consumed in exchanging a few Marines required for embarkation is taken into consideration, I firmly believe it would be cheaper to send them viâ Holyhead, even if they were given first-class passes. Perhaps their Lordships will see the folly of this misuse of the Assistance, and will patronise the Cork steamers which run to Plymouth, Portsmouth, and London. She proceeded to Gibraltar on Nov. 1 from Malta.

CONQUEROR. The second armour-plate for the Conqueror was tested on board the Nettle on Tuesday. The plate, which has been manufacted by Sir John Brown and Co., is 10 in. in thickness, with steel face. The conditions were the same as on the occasion of previous tests. The first shot took no effect whatever on the plate, but the second completely penetrated it, causing a deep fissure from the point of impact to the right edge of the plate. A third shot, which completed the triangle, only penetrated slightly, but caused a crack right across the plate.

CROCODILE, Capt. Doughty, embarked at Portsmouth on Saturday, for passage to Bermuda, the 9th, 15th, and 20th Companies of the Royal Engineers, from Chatham; the 8th Regiment, from Dover; and a draft of the 8th Brig. Royal Artillery, and of the 8th Foot, making a total of 28 officers, 1,090 men, 79 women, and 148 children. Lieuts. Whitehead and Curtler, of the 101st Regiment, go out to Halifax, Nova Scotia. The Crocodile sailed on Sunday morning. The new engines have been fitted during the past week with patent telescopic lubricators.

DECOY, Lieut.-Com. Von Donop, arrived at Gibraltar from the West Coast of Africa. The Decoy will remain until the return of the Express, when she will join the Mediterranean Fleet.

DIDO, Capt. Compton E. Domville, was at Brass River up to Sept. 28. She had arrived from Lagos on Sept. 26, and would sail on Sept. 29 for Bonny and Fernando Po. The Firebrand was also at Brass River.

DRUID, Capt. Kennedy, was at St. John's up to Oct. 19. She had returned from cruise on Oct. 18.

FLAMINGO, Com. Hall, would sail from St. John's for Bermuda on Oct. 21.

GOSHAWK, Lieut.-Com. Suckling. A correspondent, writing to a contemporary, says:—"Some time ago I spoke in this correspondence of the value of the reports on the sites for fishery piers made by Capt. Morant, of the Valorous, and that they had been of much assistance to the committee considering the question in Dublin. In justice to a junior officer, who also merits praise for his work in the same direction, I may now add that Lieut. Suckling, in command of the Goshawk, was also called upon to assist in the selection of sites for these piers."

HIMALAYA, Capt. H. Brent, left Gibraltar on Thursday, last week, for England, after embarking casuals. She brings the following officers from Bombay:—Lieut. M. G. Neeld, 17th Lancers; Col. E. W. Bray, 2nd Batn. 4th Foot; Surg.-Major J. Land, Medical Department; Lieut. B. L. P. Reilly and Capt. J. Carruthers, Staff Corps; Lieut. G. Hamilton, 14th Hussars; Capt. E. M. Larminie, R.E.; Capt. C. W. Gore, 96th Regt.; Lieuts. M. W. Saunders, J. Temple, and G. H. W. Beaumont, A Brig. R.H.A.; Lieut. P. L. Williams, 4th Brig. R.A.; Lieut. E. D. H. Buckley, 8th Brig. R.A.; Lieut. W. H. Chippendale, R.E.; Lieut. F. D. Lugard, 2nd Batn. 9th Regt.; Lieut. H. V. Cox, 1st Batn. 25th Regt.; Lieut. A. H. V. Brooke, 33rd Regt.; Capt. W. E. Wilkinson, 54th Regt.; Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. L. Jameson, Medical Department; and Capt. H. D. Woodhouse, Staff Corps. The general troop-list is made up of sundry small details of invalids, time-expired men, &c., from various regiments and corps serving in India, the total on board being 20 officers, 123 non-commissioned officers and men, and two soldiers' widows. The Himalaya left Bombay on Sept. 30, and made a good voyage. The heat in the Red Sea is reported as having been excessive, the thermometer in the stokehole registering over 120°, while on deck the temperature reached 96°. One death, that of the child of the late Dr. Simpson, and a rather serious accident to Mrs. Bray, wife of Col. E. W. Bray, of the 4th Regt., were the only incidents of the voyage worth recording. Col. and Mrs. Bray were taking passage to England in the ship, and when nearing Gibraltar, Mrs. Bray, while descending the staircase to the saloon, missed her footing and slipped down several steps. She was picked up and carried to her cabin, where she was attended by the medical staff on board, who found upon examination that her collar-bone was fractured. On the arrival of the ship at the Rock Mrs. Bray was landed, and was accompanied by the Colonel. The Himalaya will, it is understood, make another trip, and will then undergo a complete overhaul and repair. Her boilers are sadly out of order, and will be replaced by new ones, while many other important defects will be made good.

HUMBER, Com. John L. Way, arrived at Portsmouth from Sheerness on Monday, and was berthed alongside the South-Western Railway jetty. While at Sheerness she was inspected by Sir H. Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., commanding the Chatham District, who refused to pass her for service as a troop transport, in consequence of the defective arrangements for ventilation in those portions of the ship devoted to the accommodation of the troops. The defects in question having been remedied, and other repairs having been completed at a cost of between £2,000 and £3,000, the vessel was inspected by the Commander-in-Chief at the Nore on Saturday last, and declared fit for the service intended. She embarked a number of petty officers and seamen for disposal on the West Coast of Africa, and about 200 troops from various regiments for the Cape, and sailed on Thursday morning. The following is a list of the dates of arrival at and departure from the various places to be called at during the voyage:—Departure—Madeira, Nov. 13; Sierra Leone, Nov. 23; Ascension, Dec. 3; Cape of Good Hope, Dec. 22; Natal, Dec. 28; Cape, Jan. 14; St. Helena, Jan. 24; Ascension, Jan. 30; Sierra Leone, Feb. 7; Madeira, Feb. 18. Arrival—Madeira, Nov. 12; Sierra Leone, Nov. 21; Ascension, Nov. 28; Cape, Dec. 17; Natal, Dec. 27; Cape, Jan. 1; St. Helena, Jan. 23; Ascension, Jan. 27; Sierra Leone, Feb. 4; Madeira, Feb. 17; Portsmouth, Feb. 25. The following are the dates of the departure of mails for the places mentioned:—Nov. 11, 18, and 25 for Cape; Dec. 2, 9, and 16, Jan. 5, St. Helena; Jan. 7, 14, and 21, Sierra Leone; Jan. 27, Madeira; Feb. 3 and 10, Madeira. Country letters should be posted on the previous day to the dates mentioned.

INCONSTANT, Capt. Fitzgerald, flagship of Rear-Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam, which sailed from Spithead on Saturday, Oct. 16, was to leave Vigo for Madeira on Sunday last. Shortly after leaving Spithead the Inconstant parted company, and started on a six hours' full-speed trial. She rejoined the Carysfort and Cleopatra at Portland on the following day, and the first-named shortly afterwards left for Plymouth to have her Nordenfelt gun fittings altered. The Inconstant and Cleopatra proceeded under sail for Vigo. On the voyage out the flagship made signal to the Cleopatra to chase, with a view of testing the relative speed of the vessels. The two ships made all possible sail, but the Cleopatra, with her screw up, soon got ahead. The Inconstant chased for five hours, but could not overtake her. The screw of the flagship was down, and that possibly made a considerable difference in her speed. On Thursday, the 21st, a gale of wind sprung up. The vessels took in three reefs and furled upper and mizen topsails, and made all snug. In the course of the morning the Inconstant was struck under the stern by a heavy sea, carrying away the port gig. It blew and rained all through the day and night, and the two ships lost sight of each other. On the following day similar heavy weather was experienced. On Saturday it still blew, though not so strong. The Inconstant, failing to sight the Cleopatra, made the best of her way to Vigo, expecting to reach there on Monday, the 25th, but was caught in a fog off Bayonne, and had to heave-to. She reached Vigo on Oct. 26, all well, and found the Bacchante, Carysfort, and Cleopatra there at anchor.—Western Morning News.

INFLEXIBLE. Nearly 800 men are employed upon the Inflexible at the present time, to prepare her for the firing trials which are expected to take place about the middle of this month. Much disappointment has been felt at the determination of the War Department not to forward the fourth of her complement of 80-ton guns, seeing that the principal object of the firing is to ascertain the strength of the structure and the capabilities of the hydraulic machinery to withstand the explosion of enormous masses of powder. The Admiralty officials complain that the great reason why ships are so long in being built is the intolerable indecision on the part of the War Department. Even after so many years, the Ordnance Authorities are still uncertain as to the treatment which the 80-ton guns should undergo, the consequence being that the Inflexible will probably not be completed until next Midsummer. So far as the forthcoming trials of the three guns are concerned, the War Office have settled the weight of cartridge and the number of rounds to be fired from each gun, although the officials have not yet finally made up their minds as to whether the charges shall be made up into three or four parts. As at present arranged, each gun will be required to fire ten rounds of progressive charges, varying from 300 lb. of P2 powder, with zinc tubes, up to the present maximum charge of 425 lb. There will be three rounds of 300 lb., three of 350 lb., three of 400 lb., and 21 rounds of 425 lb. As during the trials the ship will be lighted up with the Brush system of electric lights, and also with a Gramme light for protection against night attacks by boats, great interest is felt in the result. It is believed the hitherto great difficulty of preventing the lights being extinguished by the rush of air at the moment of firing will be overcome. Great attention is being directed to the complete fitting of the watertight doors, so that the vessel may be prepared against all contingencies. Advantage will also be taken of the ship's being out of harbour to try her upon the measured mile in Stokes Bay at half-boiler power.

MALABAR, Capt. J. F. Grant, left Bombay for England on the 5th inst.

MARTIN, Lieut. Bromley, arrived at Spithead on Wednesday last week, from Devonport. The commander reported a defect in the pumping arrangements, which caused great difficulty to be experienced in working the pumps when the brig rolled. When the recent "scare" occurred, we alluded to the defective pumping arrangements on board this brig, and stated that Mr. Purkiss, foreman of the yard, was about to proceed in her on a short cruise to enable him to report thoroughly upon the matter. The Martin, with Mr. Purkiss on board, left the harbour on Friday afternoon, under all plain sail, for a few days' cruise in the Channel, in search of "weather," to enable a report to be made as to her general behaviour.—Hampshire Telegraph.

NORTHAMPTON, Capt. L. A. Fisher, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir L. M'Clintock, was at Halifax on Oct. 22, and was to leave for Bermuda on the 25th. She has sent in a demand for three more Nordenfelt guns to be added to her complement, performances of this weapon having so impressed the Admiral with their value.

RALEIGH, Capt. C. T. Jago. The Naval Authorities on Thursday despatched from Devonport the Perseverance with orders to proceed off the Lizard, a telegram having been received stating that a large vessel, barque-rigged, with fore and main-topgallantmasts struck, had been sighted off Scilly trying to work up Channel against the north-east wind, and evidently requiring assistance, it being believed at Devonport that the vessel was the Raleigh.

RAMBLER, Com. the Hon. Algernon C. Littleton, has returned to Sheerness from her ten days' cruise in the Channel. She experienced very heavy weather during her absence. She is to have 4 ft. taken from the fore and mizen masts.

RIFLEMAN. More than half the original cost of the Rifleman is to be expended upon her in fitting her for another commission at Sheerness, it having been found that her hull as well as boilers and machinery required a large amount of labour and material to be expended upon them. She is by no means an old ship, having been launched at Chatham at the end of 1872, and she left England on her first commission in April, 1873. She was kept running, however, for a second commission, having rehoisted the pendant at Bombay in April, 1876.—Hampshire Telegraph.

SEAGULL, Com. Mather Byles. Letters have been received from the Seagull at Aden up to Oct. 22.

SERAPIS, Capt. Twiss, passed Aden, going east, on the 29th ult.

SYLVIA, Com. Aldrich, arrived in Plymouth Sound on the 29th ult. from China, by way of the Cape. The ship entered the Channel on the 24th ult., running before the gale in a cross sea under double-reefed maintopsail, reefed foresail, and storm-staysail. She was making 14 knots, and it took all available hands for the wheel and relieving tackle, the ship becoming quite unmanageable at times. On the night of the 27th she was struck by a tremendous sea, which made a clean sweep over her, and only the good seamanship of her captain rescued her from her perilous position without any more serious mishap than a cutter being stove in and a canoe washed overboard. On the following night the gale abated, and the ship, having run many miles past the port towards the French coast, altered her course for Plymouth. She pays off at Sheerness, where she arrived on Nov. 1.

TENEDOS. Capt. Charles George Fane, who is appointed to this ship, vice Adeane, entered the Navy in 1851, and was appointed, July 2, 1857, mate of the Ganges, Capt. John Fulford, fitting at Portsmouth for the flag of Rear-Admiral Robert L. Baynes, C.B., in the Pacific, from which ship he was promoted to lieutenant, May 19, 1859. As lieutenant, he served in the St. George, Capt. the Hon. Francis Egerton, on the North America and West Indies station, and with the Channel Squadron from June 11, 1860, until July, 1862; and was successively employed in the Hague, Capt. Arthur Farquhar, and Lion, Capt. John M. Hayes, C.B., on Coastguard service at Greenock, from Aug. 1, 1862, until appointed, May 28, 1866, to the Caledonia, Capt. the Hon. F. A. C. Foley, flagship in the Mediterranean of Rear-Admiral H. R. Yelverton, C.B., from which ship, on Jan. 22, 1867, he was transferred as senior to the Galatea, Capt. H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, and was promoted, Oct. 16, 1868, to the rank of commander. He was second captain in the Repulse, Capt. W. R. Rolland, C.B., Coastguard ship at North Britain, from Sept. 1, 1870, until Nov. 10, 1871, when he was transferred to the Bellerophon, Capt. John D. M'Crea, and served with the Channel Squadron until 1873. On the 9th of the following October he was again appointed to the Bellerophon, Capt. R. Wells, fitting at Portsmouth for the flag of Vice-Admiral George G. Wellesley, C.B., on the North America and West Indies station, where he was employed until posted, Aug. 9, 1875.

THUNDERER, Capt. Colomb, was to leave Malta to relieve the Alexandra on the 5th inst. The Alexandra leaves the Gulf of Cattaro for Malta.

TYNE, Com. Stokes, left Madeira for Plymouth and Portsmouth on Tuesday. She brings to England the old crew of the London from Zanzibar and details from the Cape, amounting to 185 men, 8 women, and 20 children, belonging to twelve regiments.

VALOROUS, Capt. G. D. Morant, with the Hotspur, Staff Com. W. W. Hutton, and Seahorse, Navigating-Lieut. R. Noel, in company, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Wednesday from Birkenhead and Holyhead. The Valorous, after taking in coal, &c., will convey a navigating party around to Pembroke Dock, to take charge of the Ajax.

WILD SWAN, Com. Dacres, arrived at Madagascar on Sept. 30.

The following men have been awarded medals for long service and good conduct:—Walter Dyke, private R.M., of the Osborne; Alfred Warren, petty officer 1st class, of the Cambridge; Thomas Truscott, shoemaker, of the Ganges; Richard Colling, plumber, of the Agincourt; George Strange, carpenter's mate, of the Impregnable; Mr. H. Sydenham, carpenter's mate, of the Cleopatra; Charles C. Chiddy, engine-room artificer, of the Bacchante; Wm. Rowe, chief carpenter's mate, of the Bittern, and Sam Surry, chief boatman in charge, Sam Coad and Thomas Dordge, commissioned boatmen, and W. G. Thompson, boatman, of the Coastguard.

Work on the wreck of the British frigate Hussar, which now lies at the bottom of the East River below Port Morris, is (says an American paper) being pushed with great vigour. Operations were begun this season in June, and will be continued until floating ice threatens to cut the divers' air-pipes and life-lines. What is left of the wrecked man-of-war rests in 80 ft. to 90 ft. of water, and owing to the great depth and swiftness of the tide, the divers can make only slow progress. The schooner Hudson is held in position over the wreck by five anchors, two astern and three forward. In a shanty on her deck is a steam-engine, which operates the air and hydraulic pumps and other machinery. The mound of rubbish at the bottom of the river—all that remains of the frigate—is mined with a hydraulic drill. Six men are engaged in the work. The enterprise is in the hands of a new company. Whether or not the workmen have found any of the treasure supposed to have gone down with the frigate is not known, for an injunction of secrecy has been laid upon them. It is the opinion of many divers who have worked upon the wreck that when the Hussar was blown up by divers 50 years ago that portion of the vessel holding the ship's treasury was cut off, and carried away some distance by the tide. The Hussar, while on her way to Norwich, Conn., on Nov. 25, 1780, struck on Pot Rock, in Hell Gate. She had on board, it is believed, £960,000, which was intended for the land and naval force engaged in subjugating the Americans, and 70 American prisoners who were chained to the gun-deck. Her commander beached her near where she now lies, and endeavoured to hold her in position by hawsers attached to trees on the shore. When the tide began to ebb some of the lines parted, while others drew the trees up by the root. Finally, the frigate listed and went over the precipice over which she was hanging into nearly 90 ft. of water, carrying with her the 70 prisoners manacled on the gun-deck. The officers and crew escaped.

Dr. Arthur Stradling, who is erroneously described by the Lancet as of "H.M.S. Elbe," is entitled to all the respect which is due to the enthusiast who risks his life for the good of his fellowmen, but we doubt whether his example ought to be followed by all the surgeons in the Service, lest it be found some fine day that the fleet is without medical help owing to the suicide of the body, en bloc. As far as we can ascertain, Dr. Stradling experiments on himself by exposing his body to the bites of the snakes, which Sir J. Fayrer holds to be so deadly that there is no antidote for their poison, and yet he lives on and engages in controversy with our contemporary, the Lancet, with more success than he will find, we think, in his appeals to his professional brethren to indulge in the same self-sacrificing tests. We wish him a safe deliverance with all our heart.

The Hampshire Telegraph understands that the 300 chief gunners and gunners which the Navy now possesses are found to fall short of the requirements of the Service. The development of torpedo warfare has made it expedient in the eyes of some commanding officers that a ship carrying a full Whitehead torpedo equipment should also have a special torpedo gunner. But at present there are but thirteen of these specially qualified Warrant Officers, and even each flagship does not bear one, as in the case of the Inconstant, which applied for the appointment of a torpedo gunner, but was refused. The question of enlarging the Gunners' List has lately been under consideration, and I now learn that Capt. Hopkins has referred the matter to the Admiralty, and it is not unlikely that, should the Commanders-in-Chief at the ports concur in the views he has expressed, an increase will be made in the numbers of this class to be borne.

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.—ITS UNEQUALLED EFFICACY IN CONSUMPTION.—Dr. Sinclair Coghill, Physician to the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, Ventnor, writes:—"For many years I have, in private practice, exclusively prescribed the Cod Liver Oil of Dr. de Jongh, from a large and intimate experience of its superiority as a remedial agent in appropriate cases to other Cod Liver Oils ignorantly lauded on account of their comparative tastelessness and lightness of colour. More recently I have had, in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption here, an opportunity of instituting a more extensive and systematic comparison, and I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. de Jongh's Oil was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. de Jongh's Oil is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s; by all chemists. Sole Consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77 Strand, London.

THE LIVADIA.

Sir E. J. Reed, M.P., has forwarded to the Times a long letter, in which, after comparing the performances of the Livadia with those of vessels of the ordinary form, he states his opinion that the full-speed trials of the yacht, in which a speed of nearly 16 knots was achieved, was a splendid success, and a demonstration of the fact that very great breadth of ship is compatible with very high speed. He gives the following account of her behaviour at sea:—"It was fine when we left Brest, but we had only been a few hours at sea when the barometer began to fall and bad weather set in. The Grand Duke Constantine, Lord High Admiral of Russia, was on board, and considered the opportunity of thoroughly testing the vessel too fine a one to be lost, and we consequently steamed away into the very teeth of a Bay of Biscay gale, which steadily grew angrier and wilder as we advanced all day, and during that night and the following morning blew at its hardest, accompanied with very heavy seas indeed. The actual rolling and pitching of the Livadia at the height of the gale was exceedingly small, never exceeding 4 deg. for the single roll, or 7 deg. for the double roll, or 5 deg. for the forward pitch, and 9 deg. for the double pitch, so to speak. This horizontal steadiness was most remarkable, and, while in very agreeable contrast with my experiences of the last three years at sea in ordinary ships, was full of significance as regards the possible steadiness of gun platforms in ships-of-war. When we at length had crossed the Bay and got out of the gale, and steamed into Ferrol, not the slightest damage of any description had been sustained (with an exception to be mentioned hereafter), either to the vessel or to her boats, palaces, furniture, crockery, or anything whatever. The dinner-table was laid, the candelabra stood upon it, and the meals were served throughout the voyage, even during the storm, exactly as if the vessel had been at anchor in port. The broad covered gallery which extends all round the open deck was never reached by the sea, and it was only during the worst of the weather that even spray invaded it. With a vessel of such very light draught (7 ft.) in such a gale, and with such high and lumpy waves, the blows of the sea under the flat bottom were at times tremendous; but the confidence of the Grand Duke in refusing to turn back was justified. Before entering Ferrol one of the small compartments forward was found to be filled with water, and it was soon discovered that one of the bow plates had been stove in, and the plates in the neighbourhood strained and made leaky. My own first impression was that the cellular bow had yielded to the direct impact of the sea, during one of the most violent of the shocks which were felt; but a close inspection of the injuries led us to the conclusion that the bow had been struck by some floating wreckage."

Sir E. J. Reed in this letter states that "the Livadia as completed has more immersion than was contemplated at the time of her design, and I have ascertained the following figures:

	Displacement. Tons.	Mid section. Sq. ft.
As designed	4,000	900
At departure from Brest	5,070	1,150

"The reason assigned for these increased immersions is that the experiments of Dr. Tideman at Amsterdam, showed that in a ship of the Livadia's form, the loss of speed from increased immersion was exceedingly small, and that consequently as the ship approached completion no objection was offered to increase of weight, where increased conveniences were suggested, and that many additions were in this way made. For the same reason the quantity of coal taken on board, first at Greenock and afterwards at Brest, was only limited by other considerations. She left Brest with 850 tons of coal on board. In view of the exhaustive discussion of the ship's probable speed which you published on July 9 last, it seems unnecessary to again compare the Livadia with other vessels, but it may be for the convenience of many readers, whose interest in the question is great, to say that while the immersion was greater than was then anticipated, so also was the power developed. The figures employed by you in July, on Capt. Goulaeff's authority, compare with the actual figures of the subsequent trial as follows:—

Data of July 9	4,000	900	10,500

The mean speed of six runs was 15·864 knots.

"It will be observed that the increases of power and immersion were nearly proportional, so that the comparisons given by you on July 9 remain practically undisturbed. The performance of the Livadia at high speed was, therefore, between two and three knots per hour inferior to that of a long fine-lined frigate like the Shah of proportional size and power. The difference is so very small compared with what the nautical world has been predicting that the full-speed trials of the Livadia must be pronounced a splendid success, and a demonstration of the fact which few but myself recognised, viz., that very great breadth of ship is compatible with very high speed. It is but fair to quote in this connection the following sentence from your article of July:—"The new yacht has a far better chance of attaining a high speed than the philosophers of the last century could possibly have acceded to her under their theories of resistance, and it is not by any means extravagant to hope that those may be disappointed who consider it impossible to drive so broad a vessel fast." Before we left the Clyde, Admiral Popoff showed me a letter which he had addressed to yourself, and in which he had pointed out some of the disadvantages under which the steam trials were made. The success of the ship as regards speed is so great as to render it needless to insist upon these disadvantages, in so far as she is herself concerned; but it is of great importance to science to have it remembered that it was at her very first trials that a vessel of her proportions steamed nearly sixteen knots. The Livadia has three screw propellers, and while there was but little experience to guide the Admiral in selecting for them the best dimensions, &c., there was none to guide him in fixing their relative positions, pitches, and other conditions. It is also highly probable that even under the best conditions three screws may propel such a form of ship less efficiently than either two screws or one. In view of all the facts, therefore, it appears probable that the deficiency of speed which is solely due to the form and proportions of the hull as compared with the best ships of ordinary form, is still less, much less than even the trials of the Livadia might at first sight suggest. Like considerations to these will, of course, apply more or less, to all the steam performances of the Livadia for the present, but it will nevertheless be instructive to observe briefly her ordinary steaming qualities. On October 14, at her earliest essays at steaming, she steamed at 11 knots per hour with 2,969 indicated horse-power, 13 knots with 4,770 indicated horse-power, and 15 knots with 10,037 indicated horse-power. This was in smooth water. At sea, when the wind and waves were moderate, she has run over long distances since we left Greenock with about 4,500 horse-power, at a speed varying from 12 to 13 knots. It is not easy to select other ships of approximately equal steam-power and displacement combined, but two of our ironclads come near to the Livadia, and I will give the comparison between them:—

Name of ship.	Displacement.	Horse-power.	Speed.
Penelope	4,394 tons	4,703	12·7 knots.
Orion	4,700 "	4,000	12 "
Livadia	4,420 "	4,770	13 "
"	4,720 "	4,500	12½ "

"The speed of the Orion given is only estimated, but that is of no consequence, because the object of this comparison is merely to show that the Russian Popoffka, modified as in the Livadia, are capable of steaming at ordinary speeds with moderate power, and by no means contrast absurdly, as some suppose, with all other ships."

A corrected account of the ships in the programme for 1881 has been issued as a Parliamentary paper. It gives particulars as to date of launch, commissions, cost, &c. Several of the cases are of considerable interest. One of these is that of the Bellerophon, which was launched at Chatham in 1865. The first cost of this vessel was £356,493. She is now in dock at Devonport. Her hull and machinery are being thoroughly repaired and refitted, new boilers are being put in her, and she is being provided with Whitehead torpedo gear and machine guns. These repairs and improvements are estimated to cost £60,000; previously the sum of £112,162 has been expended on her for repairs, so that when she is out of hand this time she will have cost us something like £528,000. Another case is that of the Hotspur, launched by Messrs. Napier, of Glasgow, in 1870. She is now under repair by Messrs. Laird, and is to be very materially altered. She formerly had a fixed turret with one 25-ton gun, and was pierced with four large ports. When the change in her is complete, she will have a revolving steel-clad turret and two 35-ton guns. In addition, the armour on the breast-work has already been carried out to the ship's sides, and she has been fitted for Whitehead torpedoes and Nordenfelt guns. Her original cost was £175,995, the sum of £15,803 had been spent on repairing her before being taken in hand for present repair, and the cost of the operations now being carried out in her is estimated at about £86,000. Next comes the Defence, now in commission. She was built on the Tyne, in 1861, at the cost of £248,072. Since then over £125,000 has been spent in repairing her. Then there is the Sultan, launched at Chatham in 1870. Her first cost was £374,777. She is now under repair and improvement at Portsmouth. This repair and improvement will cost about £82,000; previous repair and improvement has involved an expenditure of £65,000. The Shah and the Amethyst are also in the programme. These are the two vessels, it may be remembered, which had an engagement with the Peruvian monitor Huascar, when she had fallen into the hands of rebels. The Shah was built in 1873 at a cost of £249,974. She has since undergone repairs costing £27,500, and is to be further repaired at an expense of £39,500. The Amethyst was built for £77,000 in 1873 at Devonport, and has since cost £4,410 in repairs, and is having her hull and machinery thoroughly refitted at an estimated cost of £32,630. Several of the vessels in the list, besides those referred to above, are being fitted with torpedo gear and machine-guns.

The German corvette Möwe, now lying in Plymouth Sound, has a novel improvement in the means of working her anchors. This is the substitution of a steel-wire rope cable for the ordinary chain cable, and the comparative advantages are increase of strength in the proportion of seven to one for cables of the same weight, greater continuity of strength, and greater facility in handling. The apparatus has been inspected by Lloyd's surveyor, Mr. Fittock, who was instructed to report to Lloyd's Committee. It was found to answer perfectly in all respects, the vessel at the time riding out a gale with the assistance of the wire-rope cables alone. It is believed that steel-wire cables will ultimately replace chain cables, on account of the advantages named above, the difficulty of providing suitable holding apparatus being now overcome.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO is the purest and most fragrant Tooth Powder ever used, and contains no acid or mineral ingredients, which are so detrimental to the teeth and gums. All who have a good set of teeth, and wish to keep them, should use it; and they who, by early neglect or ill-health, suffer from discoloured or imperfect teeth, which are the forerunners of dyspepsia and indigestion, will find that ROWLAND'S ODONTO will keep them sound and white, and prevent and arrest decay. Its purity especially adapts it for the teeth of young children. Ask any chemist for Rowland's Odonto.

"Barrister" writes:—"I am glad to see that you have lately opened your columns to the discussion of a question deeply affecting the interests of the Volunteer Force, viz., the difficulty of obtaining a proper class of Volunteer officers. Now, I have often thought that the War Office acts foolishly in allowing corps known as 'gentlemen's corps' —the rank and file of which are all men in good social positions—to exist. Take one case, that of the Inns of Court Rifles. I have lately served in the ranks of this corps, and I can unhesitatingly declare that the regiment is a myth and a sham from beginning to end. The lieutenant-colonel and adjutant are unceasing in their exertions, and the officers for the most part take an interest in their work; but, as far as the men are concerned, I assert that the regiment is not worth, in a military sense, one-tenth part what it costs the country. Last year, out of an establishment of 800 men, the regiment showed 435 on its muster-roll, and of these only 280 men were returned as efficient, no fewer than 155, more than a third of the enrolled strength, having failed to comply with the War-Office requirements. Could a more thorough farce be imagined? I served in the regiment for years, and did my very utmost to promote its welfare, but it was no good, so I left, and took a commission in another corps. I cannot help thinking that the War Office would be acting wisely in disbanding this corps altogether. If it was broken up, there are men enough in its ranks—good and zealous Volunteers—to fill all vacant commissions in the Metropolitan regiments. Why should these men be encouraged to waste their time, as they are doing now, when officers are so much wanted elsewhere, in regiments which really do try to render themselves useful and efficient units in the military forces of the kingdom? I know half-a-dozen men myself who would at once accept commissions in the force if the 'Devil's Own' were removed from the Army List. They say they cannot do so now, as it would occasion ill-feeling if they were to separate themselves from the Bar regiment; so they go on year after year doing their drills for efficiency, and nothing more. Now, I ask, is it not a mistake to recognise such regiments as the Inns of Court, and by taking the services of men, who, by education and social status, are qualified to accept commissions, deprive other regiments of the chance of obtaining officers from one at least of the learned professions? If even the Inns of Court was the most efficient regiment in London, it would be an injustice to the Force generally to allow it to exist, as it is not only lowering to military rank generally, but an injury to the Volunteers, and besides casts ridicule on the whole movement."

"A Volunteer Officer of Long Standing" writes:—"I have read with infinite satisfaction the letters signed 'A Field-Officer of Rifle Volunteers] and a Civilian,' and 'A Devoted Centurion,' in your issue of Oct. 30, and I feel that the whole body of officers of the Auxiliary Forces owe these two writers a debt of gratitude for having placed so lucidly before them the case against those who profess to possess a claim to military rank. The whole tone of these letters is so different to the effusions of other of your correspondents, that they cannot fail to carry weight. I am one of the many men who are content to be considered what we are, civilians; and it is a remarkable thing that the corps in which I hold field-officer's rank no officer has ever, to my knowledge, made use of his military rank off duty. Mine is a strong battalion, and one of the best known and most efficient in the Service. What puzzles me is to know where the would-be soldiers come from who try to sail under false colours. In my regiment a man who used his rank would not be tolerated; but then, with us, all officers are gentlemen, both by birth and education. I am afraid, as 'Devoted Centurion' points out, it is the few black-sheep who have crept into the Service who are the delinquents. They it is who are robbing the force generally of the credit which would be due to it, if that proper feeling existed with regard to the assumption of military titles which ought, in my opinion, to be a sort of trade-mark by which members of the Regular Army could be at once distinguished from those who take up soldiering not as a profession, but as a sort of pastime."

"A Militia Officer" writes:—"I observe that the assumption of military rank by officers of the Auxiliary Forces has lately been discussed in your columns; but your correspondent seems to me to have fallen into the error of considering the Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers as one and the same force, instead of dealing with them each as a separate branch of the Service. In addressing you on this subject, I propose to do so as an officer of the Militia, the branch of the Service I belong to and understand; and to discuss the subject from a Militia point of view only, although I do not agree with 'An Old Soldier,' 'A Devoted Centurion,' or 'A Volunteer F.O.,' that there is anything 'snobbish or unjustifiable,' or that it is 'bad form,' on the part of gentlemen who bear the Queen's commission, to assume the military title it carries with it, whatever branch of the Service they may belong to, whether it is always desirable is another matter, and here opinion may very properly differ. For my part, I see no impropriety in Col. Gilpin or Col. Barttelot, whom, if I mistake not, derived the rank of colonel, the one from commanding a Militia regiment, the other a Volunteer battalion, assuming their rank and being addressed in the House of Commons by their military titles. On the other hand, where an officer keeps a shop, I consider it would be absurd to place his rank either on his card or over his door. But to confine myself to the Militia, I find, as a rule, the officers do not engage in any sort of business, the nature of which is not compatible with military rank; and I certainly object to the Militia being considered 'amateur soldiers.' In the first place, it is the oldest organised military force in the world, dating from A.D. 879; secondly, it is the constitutional force of the country, and the only branch of the Service based on conscription; and thirdly, it is always liable (as has often been the case) to be called up for permanent duty at a short notice, to serve for an unlimited term, and to be employed beyond the United Kingdom as part of the regular forces of the country. Besides, Militia officers are granted a step of honorary rank after a certain number of years, and while still serving; this alone would seem to point to the fact that the Authorities both recognise the right and encourage the assumption on their part of the title conferred upon them by her Majesty's commission. My contention, then, is that if they elect to stand by their right, they have every right to do so, and are as much entitled to it as officers of the other branches of the Service. Although I have had the honour to belong to the Militia a great many years, I was not always connected with it; and having served in the Crimea, will show that in expressing the opinion I have on the subject, I am not influenced by prejudice."

"K" asks:—"Will some of your correspondents who object to Militia officers using their military rank when not embodied tell me what to call myself? I am a captain in the Army, on retired half-pay, serving in the Militia, with the honorary rank of major."

"X." writes:—"I read with very great interest two letters in the Army and Navy Gazette of last week, and I wish that all officers of the Auxiliaries not only thought the same as your correspondents, 'A Field Officer of Volunteers and a Civilian' and 'A Devoted Centurion,' but carried into their arguments the same impartial and temperate spirit. As much cannot be said of your correspondent, 'A Captain of Middlesex Volunteers,' whose letter, I venture to think, displays more warmth than judgment. This, no doubt, accounts for the wrong deductions he draws from many of the expressions used by me in my letter to you on the 23rd of last month. He says I have compared Volunteer officers to members of the Irish Land League. Now, if he will only read my letter carefully, he will find that I have done no such thing. My expression referred to the 'ungenerous jealousy' spoken of by a former correspondent, and not to Volunteer officers themselves. I think that the expression can in no way be construed as meaning what your correspondent says, and I quite agree with him when he says that there is no analogy between a Volunteer officer and a member of the Irish Land League; but between the style of argument used by one of your correspondents on a former occasion, and that which might be used by a member of the Irish Land League, there may be. Again, 'A Captain of Middlesex Volunteers' seems to think that because I made use of the expression, 'I know many shopkeepers,' &c., that I must necessarily be acquainted with the men to whom I allude. I think, however, that most people would understand that I used the word know in a general sense, and did not expect that it would be interpreted into meaning that I had any acquaintance with those to whom I referred, though if I had it would not affect my argument in the smallest degree. I do not think his allusion to Waterloo Bridge is a very happy one, for it must be apparent to every one that all the arches are absolutely necessary, no matter what the state of the tide may be. I certainly meant no offence or disrespect to Volunteer officers when I described them as a 'worthy body of men,' and not as a worthy body of 'gentlemen;' but for the sake of those who have feelings similar to those of your correspondent, I beg now to apologise for the omission. The latter part of your correspondent's letter is not all clear to me, but I infer from the last sentence that he thinks my cause a weak one; and as I have the bulk of the correspondence on the subject in your paper on my side, I can afford to allow the observation to pass by without comment. I am sorry to have taken up so much of your space, but I shall not trouble you again."

KAFFIR WAR MEDALS.

"An Old Serjeant-Major" writes:—"In the General Orders for August the conditions are published by which a medal with clasp is to be granted for the late war at the Cape, and the time appears to me opportune for inviting the attention of the Authorities to former wars in that colony, in the hope that the claims of those who served in them to a similar distinction may receive favourable consideration. It will doubtless be remembered that after the Kaffir war of 1850-53, a medal was given to all who served in that campaign; but notwithstanding the severe fighting that took place in the Amatola, Waterkloof, Fish River bush, and at and beyond the Kie River, no clasps were granted, although one was fairly and dearly earned at each of those places. The Authorities also granted a medal for the wars of 1835 and 1846-7, without clasp, although more than one clasp was due for the wars of 1846-7, as there was severe fighting at all the above-named places in these years, except at the Waterkloof, which was the principal stronghold of the enemy during the last-named war. But what I would wish more particularly to call attention to is, that a sufficient number of medals for 1853 was struck to serve for those engaged in all three wars, and one medal was issued for each; thus the man who served in one received the same decoration as he who served in all. Surely if a medal was deserved for each one of those wars—and the Authorities acknowledged that it was, by granting one —more than one medal must have been deserved by the soldier who served in all three; yet one medal, without clasp, was all he received. Surely it is not too late now, when decorations appear to be so freely lavished, to remedy this oversight, for oversight it must have been. Then there was the war with the Dutch Boers in 1848, resulting in their signal defeat, at the action of Boom Plaatz, where Sir Harry Smith, the General in command (no mean judge), declared the fire to be the sharpest he ever was under for the time it lasted, and the annexation of the Orange River Free State to the Crown. The troops engaged in this campaign, including the battle on Aug. 29, received absolutely no acknowledgment for their services. There are several General officers still living who served in these campaigns, and I feel confident that were any of them to put forward the claims of the men who served under them before the proper Authorities, with their own opinion on the merits of the case, justice would yet be done to a deserving class of old soldiers yet remaining, but who are now fast passing away, never, I fear, to be replaced."

Reviews.

We have only time and space to say a word of welcome to the new aspirant for Service patronage, the Army and Navy Magazine, of which the first number has just been published by Messrs. Allen and Co., Waterloo Place. There is the beginning of a "Story of the Sea," by our veteran friend James Grant, who has done so much by his writings to develope the martial spirit of our youth; a thoughtful, strenuous article on the retention of Candahar, by Col. Malleson; a stirring episode by Mr. Henty; and papers by Major Duncan, R.A., and other writers of established name,—all for 1s.!

Aunt Judy for 1880. By H. R. F. Gatty. (George Bell and Sons.)—"Aunt Judy's" visit this year to the homes of youngsters, who long since have learned to appreciate her value as a story-teller, will be heartily welcomed. Since her last appearance, in 1879, she must have been pretty well employed, in order to enable her to present to her readers such a goodly collection of literary tit-bits. More than 700 pages, enclosed in a tastefully-designed cover, are devoted to the purpose of providing for her protégées a pleasing, intellectual treat, and it will be very strange if she does not obtain from them a verdict of approval. The compilation of this volume must have entailed no small amount of time and trouble. The articles which have been selected of course differ in merit, but the selection, as a whole, affords evidence of the good-taste and judgment of the compiler. It would be difficult to name any subject which is not touched upon in some shape or other, poetry or prose. A great number of the articles are translations from the works of celebrated writers, amongst others, a biographical sketch of "Mendelssohn," translated from the German of J. Sterler, by Major Ewing. But "Aunt Judy" does not depend exclusively on translations. She provides a large number of original anecdotes and other matter, to which are appended names with which we are all familiar; not the least interesting of those is "Aunt Judy's Own Correspondence," written somewhat in the style of the time-honoured Notes and Queries. Altogether, it is a volume well calculated to carry out the object of the compiler, and quite worth the attention of those who may find any difficulty in the selection of a gift for the youngsters they wish to gratify.

The United Service. (Hamersly, Philadelphia.)—There are several articles worthy of notice in the November number of this monthly review of military and naval affairs. The subject of "Deflecting Armour" is considered by Engineer Clark, U.S.N. Commander Gibson, U.S.N., writes on "Ancestral Worship." We find also an article on "Cavalry," by General De Peyster, S.N.G.; another on "The Chinese Army," by Colonel Glosson, U.S.A.; and an interesting one on the subject of "The English in Afghanistan," the writer of which disclaims any wish to speak authoritatively on the subject, but desires merely to give a shadowing of events that may fill a page in the future history of Central India.

Colburn, for November, opens with an article on the question of our retaining Candahar and the Passes, contributed by Col. Arthur. It does not require particular attention, but the author's views are thus expressed:—"We are no advocates for unjustifiable aggression or unnecessary extensions of territory; but as we have already said, rightly or wrongly, Candahar and the Passes are now in our possession, and in the interest of humanity, in the interest of the safety of our Indian Empire, and in the interest of the extension of trade and the principles of good government in Central Asia, we contend that in our possession they ought to remain." Amongst other articles, the reader will find one on "Wellington College," also "An Episode of the Indian Mutiny," by Major Barlow, and a somewhat silly yarn about a revolver.

The new ships Heroine, Hyacinth, and Satellite, which will have engines of about 900 indicated horse-power, are to have their machinery placed on board by that well-known firm Messrs. Humphrys and Tennant. The cost of the sets of engines for the three ships will be about £40,000. Those for the Mutine, which were placed on board by Maudslay, cost rather less than £12,000. The new ships, being improved Mutines, will have improvements in the engines, which will justify the additional outlay about to be incurred on them.

The Kimberley Waterworks Company, Limited, has been incorporated with a capital of £350,000, for the purpose of furnishing a supply of water to the township and diamond mines of Kimberley, and other diamond mines in the immediate vicinity, under a special act of the Colonial Legislature of the Province of Griqualand West, Cape of Good Hope.

A HEALTHY TRIM versus SUPERFLUOUS FAT.—ENO'S FRUIT SALT acts as simply, yet just as powerfully, on the animal system, as sunshine does on the vegetable world. It has a natural action on the organs of digestion, absorption, circulation, respiration, secretion, and excretion, and thus removes and hinders (by natural means) the unnatural and dangerous accumulation of Fat. It keeps the body in healthy TRIM, by preserving and restoring health. Instead of being lowering to the system, this preparation is in the highest degree invigorating. It supplies the want of ripe fruit, so essential to animal economy, and may be taken as an invigorating and cooling draught under any circumstances from infancy to old age, and may be continued for any length of time, and looked upon as being PURE FRUIT SALT, the product of ripe fruit. It is impossible to overstate its value; on that account, no household ought to be without it, for by its use many disastrous results may be entirely prevented. In the nursery, it is beyond praise.—Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms, use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. Glycerine, in these agreeable confections, being in proximity to the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d. and 1s. 1½d., labelled "JAMES EPPS AND Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment), in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice. In no case can they do any harm.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES, L.R.C.P.E., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

Amusements.

The most notable theatrical event of the week has been, undoubtedly, the production of "Anne Mie," at the Prince of Wales's Theatre. This is the first Dutch play ever presented in an English form on the British stage. It will be remembered that the original drama, by Rosier Faassen, was acted last summer at the Imperial Theatre, Westminster, by the Rotterdam Dramatic Company. The charm of the simple domestic story, so forcibly and so picturesquely told, and the local interest attached to this vivid picture of Dutch country life, was duly acknowledged when the drama was first acted here, in a language few among the audience really understood. Curiously enough, the story, now told in flowing English, seems to affect the auditory less sympathetically than when it was illustrated in the uncouth Dutch tongue. No blame can, however, be attached to the actors, who, following their models with singular closeness, reproduced each smile, frown, and tear of the original portraitures with photographic fidelity. It is a pastoral play, full of freshness and pathos, but too delicate in its texture; it may be apprehended to retain a firm hold of the general play-going public. Miss Genevieve Ward portrays the homely sorrows and mental anguish of the suffering peasant-girl with remarkable earnestness and power. There is much intensity in the acting of Mr. Fernandez as the furious old miser, and Mr. Forbes Robertson as Lisa's lover and Mr. Flockton as his grim rival exhibit considerable talent. The young engineer, whose nationality is now changed, finds an excellent representative in Mr. Edgar Bruce, while Mrs. Leigh Murray as the innkeeper's wife and Miss Murray as the village girl who sings the tuneful song during the festival dance, greatly help to enliven the serious interest of the drama.

At Her Majesty's Theatre new vocalists are appearing in association with old operas, but none have attracted so much attention as Mdlle. Rosina Isidor, who is strengthening her position in public favour with every fresh assumption. The varied programme of the week has included "Norma," "Faust," "Carmen," "La Traviata," and "Les Huguenots," in which Madame Giovanni Zacchi, a tragic prima donna, has appeared as Valentina. With this week has closed the second series of the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts.

Out of the multitude of counsellors there is said to be wisdom, and out of eight contributors to a comic opera it is not unreasonable to expect some mirth. The expectation is fairly fulfilled at the Globe Theatre, where "Les Mousquetaires au Couvent" is drawing good houses, chiefly through the cleverness of the interpretation and the showy splendour of the establishment. Mr. F. Celli and Mdlle. Sylvia have the pleasant task assigned them of charming the ears of the auditors by dulcet melodies, and Mr. H. Paulton and Miss Alice May secure their laughter by a display of what may de called somewhat exuberant fun.

The new two-act comic opera at the Imperial, written by Mr. H. P. Stephens, composed by Mr. E. Solomon, and called "Billee Taylor," is not remarkable for its originality in any respect, but it is undoubtedly melodious and mirthful. The story is, of course, that of the old oomic song. As brightly illustrated and effectively represented at the Imperial, the two prominent features are a chorus of charity-girls, nightly encored; and a capital song, excellently rendered by Mr. J. D. Stoyle, to be known as, "It's all on account of Eliza." The piece is certainly one to be seen, if only on account of Mr. Solomon's pretty music and the excellent acting of Mr. Stoyle and Miss Emma Chambers.

Yet once again has Byron's Don Juan furnished suggestions for an Oriental extravaganza. "Don Juan, Junior," at the Royalty, is a brightly-embellished afterpiece, with all those songs, dances, and feminine attractions constituting the most important features of this form of amusement. Miss Kate Lawler as Don Juan, Mr. Edward Righton as Pedrillo, and Mr. T. P. Haynes as Lambro, the pirate, act, sing, and dance with all the requisite vivacity.

Dr. Carver, the remarkable rifle-shot, reappeared at the Canterbury on Monday, and received a most flattering reception, which he well merited. Dr. Carver's feats are simply wonderful, and especially in the latter part of his entertainment, when he crosses the stage on horseback, his rapidity of fire and correctness of aim prove him to be well-deserving of the title assigned to him in the programme as the "Champion Shot of the World." Certainly it would be difficult, if not, in fact, impossible, for any one to rival him in his particular line.

Obituary.

Capt. Henry Eden, R.N., died, at Tiverton, on the 28th ult., in his 69th year. He entered the Navy, Jan. 6, 1825, on board the Hyperion, Capt. W. J. Mingaye, at Newhaven, and from Jan. 1827 until Jan. 1834, served on the South America, Mediterranean, and Lisbon stations, when he was transferred to the Excellent, gunnery-ship, at Portsmouth, Capt. Thos. Hastings. In Dec. of the latter year he joined an expedition preparing under Col. Chesney for an explorative mission to the Euphrates, which river was ultimately reached after the laborious undertaking had been accomplished of transporting two steam-vessels from the vicinity of Antioch overland to the town of Bir, a tract of 140 miles, almost impassable for the want of roads. In one of the steamers, the Tigris, Mr. Eden was unfortunately wrecked during a typhoon, May 21, 1836. Obtaining, on his return to England, a commission dated Feb. 15, 1837, he was appointed to the Beagle, Capt. John C. Wickham, whom he assisted in the survey, from that year until 1841, of the coast of Australia and of Bass Straits. As senior lieutenant of the Dido, Capt. Hon. Henry Keppel, which ship he joined Sept. 15, 1841, he was very actively employed in the Yang-tse-Kiang during the closing operations of the Chinese war. The day after the taking of Woosung, June 17, 1842, he landed in command of the boats' crews belonging to the squadron, and of the Marines of the Dido, and destroyed the enemy's forts, magazines, &c. On Aug. 29, 1842, he was appointed to the Endymion, Capt. the Hon. Fred. W. Grey, on the Indian station; Feb. 30, 1844, to the Factory at Woolwich, for the study of steam; and Dec. 19, 1844, to the command of the Locust, on the Mediterranean station, which he commanded until promoted to the rank of commander, June 29, 1846. He was subsequently inspecting-officer of the Coastguard stations at Kilrush and Penzance from May, 1854, until Jan. 1859, and attained the rank of retired captain July 1, 1864.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

L. M.—We do not insert verses.

B.—The officers of the regiment behaved in anything but a gentlemanly spirit, and, therefore, we consider that the military authorities are right in the course they have pursued.

Niagara.—Your letter received, but it is, unfortunately, too late for us to accede to your wishes.

A Constant Reader.—See our answer to "B."

A. B.—We intend to take notice of the subject next week.

Justitia.—The system would not work.

Hereford.—Rest assured that we will keep the subject of your letter before us.

D. L. B.—Your letter has been received, and shall appear directly we have room to publish it.

Picton.—1. The Brevet has been extended for twelve months, from Oct. 1. 2. It does not, we believe, apply to Purchase Captains.

A Captain of Middlesex Rifle Volunteers.—We have allowed you to have your say, and we are obliged now to give others a chance of expressing their views.

The large number of medical officers in the prime of life, fit and willing to serve, who, under the operation of the recent Warrant, have been placed in compulsory retirement, threatens to be increased by members of the corresponding department of the Royal Navy, under the operation of the expected Warrant for that branch of the Service. Thus the general interests of the State will unnecessarily suffer, unless some means are discovered of utilising men who, in the meantime are, against their own will, forced into idleness, and upon the already much overburdened taxpayer of this realm. It appears to us that, inasmuch as a great part of the duties of medical officers in both Services has reference to hygienic management of large bodies of men, they require a great deal of knowledge of that precise nature which is of especial value to medical officers of health in cities and towns. In some other respects, also, the training they have undergone while serving would be of great value in the latter capacity, not the least in this respect being the facility they acquire in the arrangement of subjects of observation, and in preparing reports with clearness and exactness. We should, accordingly, be glad to see retired medical officers filling appointments under the Public Health Act.—Medical Press and Circular.

Baron Liebig's Leguminous Cocoa Powder.—The renowned name of Liebig attached to any article of diet is sufficient to secure for that article the attention of all who study "the art of good living," and such persons will hear with pleasure that the great chemist has lent his assistance in the production of a new Cocoa Powder, which, whilst possessing in a high degree the fine aroma and flavour of the pure cocoa, is at the same time free from some of the objectionable properties of the ordinary cocoa powders, which have caused them to be regarded by many eminent medical men as very questionable articles of diet. The leading feature in Baron Liebig's Cocoa Powder is the substitution of the legumin obtained by a special process from pulse, for the starch, sugar, or arrowroot generally employed for the purpose of counterbalancing the large percentage of fat found in the cocoa bean; and the importance of this substitution lies in the fact that whilst these last-named ingredients add considerably to the already too large proportion of heat generators, the legumin thus added materially increases the flesh-formers, and causes the leguminous cocoa powder to approach more closely to a perfect food than any other preparation. These facts, according to Professor Tichborne, entitle the leguminous cocoa powder to be considered, theoretically at least, as a perfect food; and Dr. Fetzer, of Stuttgart, has added his testimony, based upon wide experimenting, to the effect that for delicate persons, women nursing, growing children, &c., it is an invaluable article of diet, whilst from its agreeable flavour and aroma, it is taken with pleasure at any time, and by all who have tried it. Baron Liebig has always been careful about allowing his name to be attached to any article; in fact, we understand that with the exception of the "Extract of Meat" and "The Leguminous Cocoa Powder," no preparation is entitled to bear his name.—Morning Post.

AT THREE SHILLINGS a POUND, the FINEST TEA the WORLD PRODUCES is Recommended to the Public.

COOPER COOPER and CO. undertake to answer the oft-heard question,—Why is Tea so dear? and they say that it is simply because the public in this, as in other matters, are powerless to insist on having their share of the advantages which result from falling markets. Tea, in fact, was never so cheap to buy since it was first imported into England, as may be easily ascertained by a reference to the current market reports, and yet relatively the retail price was never so exorbitant. Now Cooper Cooper and Co. have resolved to rectify this discrepancy, and to this end they undertake to SELL the BEST TEAS that can be purchased at their respective prices at a small commission only on the actual prices paid to importers. This system of business is specially intended to bring the public into partnership, as it were, or at all events to enable them to become participators in the great margin of profit which lies between the wholesale and retail price of tea. COOPER COOPER and CO.'S prices will be found to be ninepence per pound less money than those usually charged for identical qualities.

POST-OFFICE ORDERS should be made payable at the General Post-office, and cheques crossed National Provincial Bank of England.

FAMILIES residing in the country can, by joining together to divide the expense of railway crrriage, save 9d a pound in the price of their TEA, by sending to COOPER COOPER and CO.; or Cooper Cooper and Co. will pay railway carriage on parcels of the value of £2 and upwards to any station in England, on receipt of 9d in addition to the cost of the tea.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Company is to furnish a supply of water to the township and diamond mines of Kimberley and other diamond mines in the immediate vicinity, under a special Act of the Colonial Legislature of the Province of Griqualand West, Cape of Good Hope, which gives to this Company the exclusive right of bringing and disposing water as detailed hereafter, and confers on them the necessary powers to construct works to take water out of the Vaal River, acquire lands, lay pipes, &c. Since the annexation of Griqualand West to the Cape Colony, the above Act has been confirmed by the Government of the Cape of Good Hope.

Few persons who are not connected with the Cape Colony have realised the importance of the trade in diamonds which has grown up during the past nine years. The official statistics estimate the value of the diamonds exported during the past five years at an average of £2,500,000 per annum, those for 1879 alone being £3,500,000.

The process of working these Diamond Mines is somewhat similar to that used in alluvial deposits for gold, the diamondiferous soil extracted from the mines being gradually reduced in bulk by repeated washings, until the diamonds can be distinguished. Hitherto the scarcity, to say nothing of the cost, of water has been a serious hindrance to the vigorous prosecution of the work. The mines have been dependent on a scanty and precarious supply from wells sunk in the neighbourhood, and the water thus procured costs not less than half-a-crown a hundred gallons, the price varying from that up to ten shillings.

The obvious source of supply is the Vaal River which flows in a westerly direction, 17 miles off, and some 500 feet below the level of Kimberley.

It was at first proposed to construct a short railway from Kimberley to the nearest point on the river, for the purpose of conveying the diamondiferous soil to the water ; and with this view an engineer was employed two years ago, who surveyed and laid out the line. The scheme was afterwards abandoned, partly owing to the fact of the railways in the Cape being a Government monopoly, and eventually, after two engineers had been sent out from this country to survey and report, the Corporation of Kimberley granted a concession to the Griqualand West Railway and Water Company, dated 20th May, 1880, of which the following are the salient points :—

a The concessionaires are to have the exclusive right of bringing and supplying water, and power to sell and dispose of the water brought in by them, to the inhabitants of the township of Kimberley and neighbourhood, either within or beyond the municipal boundary, on such terms as they shall think fit (except that the maximum price or sum to be charged by them for the water supplied within the municipal limits shall not in any case exceed the sum of 1s. 3d. sterling per 100 gallons), and generally to carry on the business of a waterworks company.

b. The works to be constructed by them to be on such scale as to be capable of supplying a quantity of water of not less than 400,000,000 gallons per annum, including a supply of filtered water for the domestic purpose of the inhabitants.

c. The Company to have exclusive rights for a period of twenty-five years from the date of concession, of which three years are allowed for construction of works. The works must be commenced within one year from date of the concession.

d. The Corporation reserve to themselves the right of purchasing and taking over the works at any time after completion on giving six months' notice of their intention to do so, at a price to be mutually agreed upon.

The works themselves do not offer any engineering difficulty. The Vaal River, even in seasons of prolonged draught, will furnish an ample supply of water, which it is proposed to pump into large settling reservoirs on the banks, whence it will be raised to the reservoirs at Kimberley, situate at an elevation of about 500 feet, which commands all the neighbouring district.

As the surveys, plans, and other particulars have already been completed by the engineers of the Griqualand West Railway and Water Company (Limited), the works can be commenced forthwith.

It is believed, judging from the experience of similar works elsewhere, that the working expenses and annual repairs will not exceed £30,000 per annum ; and basing their calculations on a consumption of only 300,000,000 gallons of water per annum, at 1s. 3d. per 100 gallons, the Directors think the shareholders have every reason to expect a very handsome dividend on the capital invested.

Copies of the concession, Act of the Legislative Council of Griqualand West, the contract referred to below, Memorandum and Articles of Association, can be inspected by intending subscribers at the offices of the Company's Solicitors, Messrs. Renshaw, 2 Suffolk Lane, E.C.

The only contract entered into is one dated 25th October, 1880, between the Griqualand West Railway and Water Company (Limited) of the one part, and this Company of the other part, for the purchase of this concession, in consideration of the payment of the out-of-pocket expenses already incurred, amounting to £4,487 1s. 9d., and a moiety of the yearly net profits after a dividend of 15 per cent. per annum has been earned on the called-up capital of this Company. In the event of the Corporation of Kimberley purchasing the works, two-thirds of the surplus net profits beyond the actual capital expended by the Company to go to the shareholders of this Company, and one-third to the shareholders of the Griqualand West Railway and Water Company.

Applications for shares on the form annexed to the prospectus, accompanied by a deposit of 10s. per share, will be received by the above-mentioned Bankers.

In the event of no allotment being made the deposits will be returned in full.

THE KIMBERLEY WATERWORKS COMPANY (Limited).—Notice is hereby given, that the LIST of APPLICATIONS for SHARES in the above Company will CLOSE on Monday next, the 8th inst., at 4 o'clock.

(By order.)

ARMY and NAVY HOTEL (Limited).—Established upon the principle of Co-operation. Shareholders of five Shares and upwards will be entitled to a reduction of 10 per cent. off the hotel tariff. Capital £100,000, in 20,000 Shares of £5 each, payable £1 on application, £2 on allotment, and £2 three months after.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The want of comfortable accommodation in London, with living on an equality with that of a regimental mess and at economical rates, has always been felt by officers of the Services. This it is now intended to supply, both for temporary use and also in the style of a residential club, so that Shareholders may retain private rooms or suites of rooms with good attendance, and the use of general dining, drawing, club, smoking, and other rooms, while they may be either boarded at very moderate rates or obtain their meals as required in club fashion.

The Army and Navy Hotel is established for the purpose of these requirements, and is intended for the use of the public as well as of the Shareholders, priority being in all cases given to the latter.

Baths of every description, including salt water, will be obtainable in the hotel.

Shareholders will be allowed the use of the smoking, reading, and writing rooms, thus providing all the accommodation of a club without any annual subscription, and, whilst bachelors will find all the advantages of a mess, married officers will not miss the comforts of home.

Visitors who may wish to make the Hotel their home during their stay will be received at a fixed and very moderate tariff. It is intended to fix the tariff at as low a rate as is compatible with the declaration of a dividend, and it is confidently anticipated that board and lodging can be provided for about the same cost as is now charged by other hotels for rooms alone.

Suites of residential chambers, for bachelors as well as married people, will form a distinctive feature in the Hotel.

Application for Shares can be made in writing to the Secretary, by giving name, address, rank, or occupation, and the number of Shares required, accompanied by deposit.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—
WATCHES.

The Rev. Robt. Cass, Settle, Yorkshire, writes, February 19, 1880 :—"The Ladies' Gold Lever Watch received from you for 70s in size, workmanship, and beautiful appearance, resembles a watch usually sold at £10. It gives entire satisfaction."

The Rev. James Arthur Kemp, Lew Down, North Devon, also writes, March 8, 1880 :—"The watch I ordered of you at 25s, for my servant, arrived quite safely, and I am exceedingly well pleased with it in every way. It is an excellent timekeeper, very neat and handsome in appearance, and in my opinion worth far more than those that cost treble the money. I do not think anybody should be without a watch, when they can obtain from you such an excellent article at so reasonable a price."

"I am very much pleased with everything I have had from your Company. The watch (25s) has proved to be an excellent one, and is a marvel of cheapness. It is fully equal to, or indeed superior to, many I have seen purchased by regimental clubs for treble the money. I am positive your Company will prove itself a boon to Army men at home and abroad, particularly the latter, who are often compelled to pay enormous prices for very inferior articles indeed. Your Company is deserving of every success, and I deem it a duty, to you and the Army, to become an amateur agent, unpaid."

THE MIDLAND COUNTIES WATCH COMPANY supply their celebrated Watches direct to wearers, at very lowest wholesale cash prices. They guarantee watches supplied by them to be most perfect timekeepers, and honestly assert their price to be under one-half those charged by watchmakers ; and as a guarantee of good-faith they undertake to return the full amount paid for any Watch if not to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

Catalogues, containing list of testimonials, and beautifully illustrated descriptions of more expensive watches, gold and silver jewellery, electro-plate, &c., are sent gratis on application. We may safely assert that the prices in same will be a surprise to all who see them.

Mr. S. HISSEY, Vyse Street, Birmingham.

On receipt of which any watch will be registered post free to any part of the United Kingdom, and for 2s 6d per watch extra to any part of the postal world.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' 'Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—PURE BLOOD.—When the blood is pure, its circulation perfect, and the nerves in good order, we are well. These Pills possess a marvellous power in securing these great secrets of health by purifying, regulating, and strengthening fluids and solids. Holloway's Pills can be confidently recommended to all persons suffering from disordered digestion, or worried by nervous fancies, or neuralgic pains. They correct acidity and heartburn, dispel sick headache, quicken the action of the liver, and act as alteratives and gentle aperients. The weak and delicate may take them without fear. Holloway's Pills are eminently serviceable to invalids of irritable constitution, as they raise the action of every organ to its natural standard, and universally exercise a calming and sedative influence.

PROSPECTUS.

It is an admitted fact that from 40 to 50 per cent. of the power expended by a pair of engines upon a screw propeller is wasted in churning water, setting up useless currents, or in overcoming the friction of screw blades; and when it is borne in mind that, with a thoroughly efficient propeller, one-third of the coal now carried by a ship might be left on shore, one boiler out of every three dispensed with, and that one engine of 200 horse-power could propel a screw ship as fast as one of 300 horse-power can now actually drive her, the importance of this subject in reference to the carrying trade of the United Kingdom alone cannot well be overrated.

For twenty years efforts have been made to augment the efficiency of the screw propeller by reducing the amount of power which it wastes, but hitherto without avail,—the advances which have been made in steam navigation have been attributable mainly to the improvements in the machinery which caused the propeller to revolve.

A consideration of these circumstances induced the Inventor to devote his attention to the possibility of economising the power expended upon the screw, and so render it more efficient; and as the result of his elaborate mathematical investigations, and after much study and repeated experiments, he produced the present Propeller.

The Invention consists in two screws of the same pitch, portions of the blades of which are cut out, the screws are fixed on two shafts, one hollow, the other solid and revolving within in it—the screws are made to revolve in opposite directions, the solid portions of each blade of one screw passing through the gaps cut out in the other, and vice versa.

The effect of this method of construction is that the action of each screw by its contrary direction of rotation, prevents the water caught between them from following the direction of either, and the water is thrust directly astern in a line parallel with the keel of the vessel, with the advantage that the unpleasant vibration ordinarily caused by the screw is entirely obviated.

The De Bay Propeller has been fitted to several vessels, and on each occasion progressively satisfactory results have been obtained; and those shown on the "Cora Maria" give the Directors every confidence that this Propeller can be safely adapted to vessels of any size and power.

On July 10 and August 10, 1880, four runs were made with the "Cora Maria" (831 tons net register, 2,800 tons displacement, 235 feet long, 31 feet broad, 18 feet 3 inches deep) over the measured course of 2.2 miles between the light-ship and buoy off Penarth,—the former with the ordinary screw, the latter with the De Bay Propeller—with the following results:—

	Ordinary Screw.	De Bay Propeller.
Average revolutions per minute	65.32	65
Average indicated horse-power	584.51	585

Time—First run, with tide	12	5	9	4
Second run, against tide	20	27	16	42
Third run, with tide	12	3	9	6
Fourth run, against tide	19	56	16	10

Speed—First run, with tide	10.924	14.557
Second run, against tide	6.45	7.898
Third run, with tide	10.954	14.505

De Bay ... ... 11.28 ,,

584.51 indicated horse-power having been required with the ordinary screw to drive the vessel at a mean speed of 8.73 knots per hour, it would, with the same screw, have required 1256.69 horse-power to drive her at 11.28 knots (the speed attained with the De Bay Propeller), showing a gain of 115 per cent. in horse-power.

With the old propeller, the vibration of the vessel was excessive, causing the leading rods and chains from the wheel to the rudder to make a continuous knocking on the deck, while with the De Bay Propeller the ship was as steady as if under sail.

By the introduction of this Propeller, with suitable gearing and under proper management, the following results will be obtained:—In cases where speed is the essential object, and it is determined not to reduce capacity of the engines and boilers, a considerable saving of time as well as of fuel will be effected; in cases where economy of construction is the main object, machinery of considerably reduced power may be introduced into the vessels, and in both instances (to a greater or less degree) a great saving of space will be effected, and the room which is now required for the machinery and for the stowage of coal will be available for an increase of cargo.

The total cost of coal consumed by the British Mercantile Marine is estimated at nearly Fourteen million pounds sterling per annum, and the experience gained in the experiments before referred to, shows that by the use of De Bay's Propeller a saving to this country in the article of coal is estimated to amount to £4,500,000 per annum, to which must be added the corresponding amount of room gained for cargo.

The Company will grant letters of licence for the use of the Invention on a scale of royalties proportioned to the saving in fuel, increase of speed, &c.

The Invention was acquired by the Company absolutely in consideration of the allotment to the Inventor and the other parties interested of 20,000 Shares, credited as fully paid up, no cash whatever being paid. Of the remaining 5,000 Shares, 1870 have been subscribed for in cash and allotted, of which number 664 are entitled to a preferential dividend of 10 per cent. per annum, and further to participate in the surplus net profits (after payment of a dividend of 10 per cent. on the Ordinary Shares) pro ratâ with the Ordinary Shares. The further Ordinary Shares of £5 each, ranking pari passu as to dividend and otherwise with the Ordinary Shares already issued, now offered for subscription, are payable as follows:—£2 per Share on application; £3 on allotment.

Any failure to pay up the amount due on allotment will render the deposit liable to forfeiture.

The immense saving in fuel which it is estimated will be effected by the use of this Invention will, it is anticipated, enable the Company to earn very large profits from the royalties to be granted for the use of the Patent.

The Companies' Act, 1867, requires that every Prospectus or invitation for Shares should set forth the dates and names of the parties to all contracts entered into by the Company. This Company has in the course of business entered into many contracts since its formation in 1877; it is obviously impossible to specify these in the present Prospectus, and all persons applying for Shares must be understood as expressly waiving their right to object to the allotment or to make any claim on that ground.

The list of all contracts entered into by the Company, together with the Memorandum and Articles of Association, can be seen at the Offices of the Company, and a list of all contracts entered into before or in connection with the formation of the Company is subjoined hereto.

At the time the Company was formed, there were 38 gentlemen interested in the Patent, four of whom held legal assignments, registered at the Patent Office, and the remainder had agreed with Mr. de Bay that they should be entitled to an interest therein, but no formal deeds had been drawn up or registered.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

159 PICCADILLY, S.W.

GENTLEMEN,—I beg herewith to enclose the sum of £................, being a deposit of £2 per Share on................Ordinary Shares of £5 each in the above Company, and I hereby request you to allot me the said Shares, and I agree to accept the same or any less number, subject to the Memorandum and Articles of Association and Regulations from time to time of the above Company, and to pay a further instalment of £3 per Share on receipt of Allotment Letter, and I authorise you to place my name on the Register in respect of the Shares so allotted.

It having been found impossible by the Company to set out on their Prospectus the dates and names of the parties to the contracts entered into by the Company since its incorporation as required by the Companies' Act, 1867, Section 38, I hereby expressly waive my right to have the dates and names of the parties to such contracts set out, and declare that the allotment of Shares of the above issue hereby applied for by me shall, notwithstanding such omission as aforesaid, be binding on me and my representatives, and I renounce all claims in respect of such omission.

MR. KINGLAKE'S "APOLOGY" FOR THE "WINTER TROUBLES."

IT is seventeen years since Mr. Kinglake told the world that "the time had come to tell the truth." Five years have elapsed since he gave his readers his version of the Battle of Inkerman, and he now comes to write the saddest tale which British historian ever had to tell. Mr. Kinglake has thought fit, in doing so, to revive a quarrel that most people engaged in it would willing permit to remain as it ended. The story of the Crimean War is one the nation generally is disposed, I think, to leave to some unborn historian to tell to a future generation, which would read it as men read a chapter of Livy or Napier,—that is, with a purely historical interest. The period over which that war extended lies just in the debateable land between the historical past, as to which all human emotion is impersonal, and that active present in which there are men still living, who are full of passion, or prejudice, or theories as to the events in which they participated, or as to the controversies which those events provoked. With all its glories—and on the colours and standards emblazoned with the words, "Alma," "Balaklava," "Inkerman," there are no more glorious names, even though Marlborough and Wellington have given them the imprimatur of their "king-making"-and-king-destroying-"victories"—the memory of war with Russia, waged in the Crimea in 1854-5 is associated with records of great misery and some disaster. It is felt now, as it was felt at the time, that the conduct of the campaign, on the whole, was not creditable to the statesmen or the military leaders, to the politicians or to the civil administrators—to any but the soldiers —who had a share in it. Even the idea for which the war was made is repudiated; it is treated to-day as a mistake, if not criminal, any way gross and inexcusable. So far are we now from being governed by the political principle which impelled England to make war upon Russia, that we can scarcely be led to comprehend the position we took up in order to vindicate the authority of the Sublime Porte in the Danubian Provinces twenty-six years ago. If this England of 1879-80 be right, we must suppose that the England of 1854-5 was egregiously wrong. If what has been done within the last two years be in accordance with sound polity, Russia was, after all, quite justified in invading Wallachia and Moldavia, crossing the Danube, and besieging Silistria, and our ancestors of a generation back were altogether wicked in opposing her. It may be urged that what all the Great Powers agree to do, may by that very fact become an act of abstract or concrete justice, though the assumption by any one of those Powers of the right to perform the same act be criminal; but history would surely give to that one Power which, in its dealings with Turkey, anticipated the workings of public conscience, in a common concert of all the Governments of civilised Europe, the credit of political sagacity. It is not surprising, then, if such doubts oppress us, that the revival of the controversies which distracted the public mind whilst the war was raging should create a feeling of irritation, if not of disgust. And the feeling is not diminished by the resuscitation of the personal questions which embittered them. Ministries were overthrown, reputations were shattered, and the whole framework of society was shaken by the disputes which most of the survivors would willingly forget; and the country was warned, on high authority, that the Constitution itself, and the very life and principle of free institutions and Parliamentary government, were put on their trial, in the conflict of those angry passions. Of my own small part in such a drama, I am almost ashamed to speak. I would not do so, indeed, were it not that my name has been associated in this volume of "The Winter Troubles" with statements which my sense of truth and justice forbids me to let pass unnoticed. I have already disposed of the charges which were made in the letters of Lord Raglan to the Duke of Newcastle, that I had given aid to the enemy,—the aid of information which, without my letters, the enemy could not have obtained.* There was no suggestion by Lord Raglan or any one else that the enemy ever did anything in consequence of such information. I think I have shown, however, that I could not be held responsible for it, even had positive mischief ensued. But not a shadow of proof exists that any such mischief arose. The Russians in front of us were perfectly well acquainted with our sufferings. They were not restrained from attacking us by any imaginary "awe" such as Mr. Kinglake supposes them to have been influenced by, or by the "cheerful calm" apparent at Head-quarters, but by their own sufferings and weakness, by their confidence in their powers of ultimate resistance, and by their well-founded reliance on the help of the "Generals January and February," which did us so much wrong. But Lord Raglan, in his letters, spoke also of "indiscipline and discontent," and suggested that the well-being of the Army was imperilled by accounts of suffering among the men who endured it, and by comments on the state of things which caused that suffering, and that is a charge which must be met, and which I propose to dispose of very speedily. When, long ago, a certain noble Earl indulged himself in some vituperative remarks about my correspondence, and implied that I had made unseemly attacks on Lord Raglan, I referred his Lordship to my published letters, and I challenged him to produce a single passage which in any way sustained his imputations. I repeat the challenge. If I have to quote myself, it is to repeat my estimate of Lord Raglan's character.†

Now, if there were any one trait of the behaviour of our soldiery, amid their miseries, more conspicuous than another, it was their resignation—their actual state of "contentment," so to speak—and the discipline which prevailed, in the best sense of the word, from the beginning to the end of the siege. In one of the many beautiful passages of the volume which provokes me to write, there is (p. 205) a touching account of the conduct of our men, when, in Mr. Kinglake's own words, "what seemed to be threatened was not simply the weakening, but the virtual extinction of our Army." "All these hardships—hardships too often fatal—our officers and men endured with a heroism, as the Sebastopol Committee declared, unsurpassed in the annals of war." And with that passage I rest content. It and others like it are my answers to the charge that my letters caused indiscipline and discontent.

I did not then and I do not now shrink from bearing the weight of the responsibility which may attach to the assertion that for a considerable period, Lord Raglan's personal inspection of Balaklava and of the remoter camps was, to say the least of it, infrequent. I know how bitterly his neglect was felt by the Brigade of Guards—how they complained that neither he nor Colonel Steele (the Military Secretary)—an old Guardsman—had visited their camp after Inkerman*; and I know, too, how indignant men were when the reign of chaos set in at Balaklava, because "the Chief" had never been down from Head-Quarters to see how things were going on, or were not going on, with his own eyes. I remember, too, how, one morning in January, after the mail with the Times of a certain date had come in, Lord Raglan, who had not been down there, I believe, since December 3, rode into Balaklava, and an officer, giving me credit for what I had not done, rushed into my den, exclaiming, "By Jove! you and the Times have drawn him at last!" In my letter from the Crimea, under the date of January 18th, I wrote :—

> "Lord Raglan came down to-day to Balaklava. General Airey also came down and inspected an attempt to prepare sleighs for carrying up shot to the front. Lord Raglan visited Lord Lucan, and went over the cavalry camp, which he had not seen since it was formed here.† Lord Raglan gave several orders calculated to promote the comfort of the troops, and his unusual presence among the officers and men has been attended with the best effects, and has stimulated every branch of the service at Balaklava and at the dépôts."

Mr. Kinglake says (p. 258), "One great error Mr. Russell committed, namely, that of imagining that Lord Raglan did not visit his divisional camps, and especially his field hospitals; but the mistake of the correspondent was a mistake largely shared, and sprang, we must own, very naturally from the cause already explained," viz., the way in which Lord Raglan went about his visits. Mr. Kinglake says the mistake was "largely shared." Indeed it was. It was not as a grim joke that men at the time spoke of Lord Raglan's being at Constantinople or Malta. As to Mr. Kinglake's hypothesis that the Commander-in-Chief, when he rode out, attended by a single A.D.C., was so disguised by a Vienna cape—"a wrapper so overfolding that it did not disclose his maimed arm" (p. 271), "which, not being English in shape, seems to have been somewhat disguising"—that no one knew him—it must be regarded as an attempt to impose on his readers' credulity. The idea that a strange horseman, muffled in a quaintly-cut foreign wrap, could go about the English camps during the winter, and because of the eccentricity of his appearance pass unnoticed, is surely preposterous. I frequently saw Lord Raglan on horseback before and after the time mentioned, and I do not recollect ever having seen him without an orderly, in addition to his aide-de-camp. At all events, if these secret, unnoticed inspections were made at the time referred to, they came within the canon "de non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio." They surely did no good, where they were not known. They were not referred to by Lord Raglan in his public, nor, I suppose, in his private, dispatches, and the mode of action did not encourage the soldiers by the visible presence of their Chief, or even dispel the delusion of their officers that they were neglected, in camps where these visits were not made openly. But Mr. Kinglake gives at length a letter from Lord Raglan to Lord Panmure, in which his Lordship, writing on March 2, 1857, says:—

* Army and Navy Gazette, November 6.

† "That Lord Raglan was brave as a hero of antiquity, that he was kind to his friends and to his staff, that he was unmoved under fire, and unaffected by personal danger, that he was noble in manner, gracious in demeanour, of dignified bearing, and of simple and natural habits, I am, and ever have been, ready not only to admit, but to state with pleasure; that he had many and great difficulties to contend with, domi militiaeque, I believe; but that this brave, high-spirited, and gallant nobleman had been so long subservient to the power of a superior mind—that he had lost, if he ever possessed, the ability to conceive and execute large military plans—that he had lost, if he ever possessed, the faculty of handling great bodies of men, I am firmly persuaded. He was a fine English gentleman—a splendid soldier—perhaps an unexceptionable lieutenant under a great chief; but that he was a great chief, or even a moderately able general, I have every reason to doubt, and I look in vain for any proof of it whilst he commanded the English Army in the Crimea."

* Mr. Kinglake can easily refer to the officers of the Guards still alive as to this allegation.

† Lord Lucan can say whether that statement as to the cavalry camp is true or not.

> "I have visited the camps as frequently as the constant business in which I am engaged, and which occupies me throughout the day and a part of the night, will permit; and though I have made no note of those visits, I find from one of my aides-de-camp, who keeps a journal, and who frequently, though not always, attends me, that he has accompanied me in my rides above forty times in the last two months.* A ride is not taken for pleasure on this ridge and in this weather, and I have not had time to visit the monastery, the only spot worth seeing in the whole of the position."

Far be it from me to question the literal accuracy of that statement. Colonel Kingscote's word is above contradiction. But then the truth of it has nothing to do with the averment as to the period when inspection, incessant and vigilant, of Balaklava, the fount and origin of the disorders which flooded the plateau with misery, disease, and death, was most needed, and would have done most good. It was to the time between the gale of November 14 and the early part of the month of January, the complaints which the Duke of Newcastle's informants made of the Commander-in-Chief's seclusion referred, and it is not an answer to them to show that Lord Raglan rode out forty times in the months of January and February to camps close at hand. Lord Panmure, in his reply to Lord Raglan's demand for "the name of his slanderer," on this point says, "I will only say that my information has not been derived from the columns of the Times, but from eye-witnesses of the scenes by which you have been surrounded, but whom it would be a base breach of confidence in me to betray." (p. 345.)

Two successive War Ministers addressed urgent, indignant, angry remonstrances to Lord Raglan, on the meagreness of the information he imparted to them on the condition of the Army. "Oh! but," exclaims Mr. Kinglake, "these Ministers were stupid or careless; Lord Raglan gave them plenty of information! He fed them regularly with 'Morning States!' What more was needed?" But it will have been seen that the Duke, to whom this abounding information was imparted, was a loud-voiced complainant. "But," says Mr. Kinglake, "the Duke of Newcastle was crammed with information—so was Lord Panmure—only neither of them knew it. I have before me the two folio volumes comprising Lord Raglan's despatches and private letters to the Duke of Newcastle, and perceive them to be abounding, richly, largely abounding, in the very information which Lord Panmure says he cannot find." Why does not Mr. Kinglake, instead of high-sounding adjectives and pleonasms, give us a few specimens of these all-satisfying despatches from the two folios and letters? That would be the simplest and best answer he could make to the critics. And it will be said—Mr. Kinglake says it, and Lord Raglan himself makes the same statement —that his labours at his desk were incessant, and were of such a kind as to keep him nailed to it much of the day, and often far into the night. It becomes of moment to learn whether these labours were necessary and inevitable. When the Duke of Newcastle visited the Crimea, he had a long conversation with me on this point, and I well remember with what bitterness he spoke of "want of information." I remarked that "it was understood in camp that Lord Raglan's time was much taken up with correspondence." "With whom, I wonder?" broke out the Duke. "Not with me, certainly! I could get nothing out of him, and the public were disgusted at being told that the weather was better or worse, or that it rained yesterday and snowed the day before, when they were dying to learn all that could be told concerning the Army from the General in command of it, and were looking to me for the news." And because these unfortunate statesmen addressed remonstrances to Lord Raglan, Mr. Kinglake opens the full fire of his batteries on their coffins. The Duke of Newcastle is represented as "not a man who would have consciously and wilfully suffered himself to be drawn from the right course by a selfish motive; but what mortal can say that, when he feels the ground sinking from under his foot, he will be strong enough to resist the instinct which moves, which almost constrains him to clutch at some other for safety? The Duke was honestly conscious of having administered his Department with untiring zeal, and, upon the whole, with great ability; and now that his wrong, hasty judgment had really turned him against Lord Raglan and the Head-Quarter Staff, was not justice, he perhaps might imagine—was not justice, after all, on his side? By blaming Lord Raglan, and condemning,—nay, roughly displacing the chief officers of the Head-Quarter Staff, might he not disengage himself from the cruel fate of a Minister held answerable for the sufferings of our Army? . . . . . Plainly, if he would troop with the accusing throng, he must himself become one of them, must himself become an accuser—an accuser of the positive kind, not awaiting explanation or proof. He heard the people below crying out at Lord Raglan and the Head-Quarter Staff; and since now his own real convictions were setting against the same officers, might not he also go down and hoot?" (p. 303.) This is written of the man, honest, zealous, and able, to whom Lord Raglan, acknowledging "the vigour of his ceaseless efforts to meet the winter calamity," wrote, "You have left no stone unturned." (p. 289.) "In thus turning against Lord Raglan, and entering on the sinister course for which we now see him preparing, the Duke of Newcastle acted with the ready assent of his colleagues." They are all in the same boat, tarred with the same brush.

Having propounded a theory that the Government and the "print," as he calls the Times, had formed a league against Lord Raglan, although he does not seem quite sure whether it was the Ministry or the newspaper which led the way and devised the campaign, Mr. Kinglake says:—

> "The Duke of Newcastle proceeded to execute his plan of attack. On the 18th of December he addressed Lord Raglan (upon the non-delivery of regimental baggage) in terms approaching to censure; and three days later he commenced a series of letters distinctly importing blame. In the first of these, dated the 22nd of December, he openly disclosed his belief that a 'want of system and organisation' prevailed 'in all the departments of the camp.' On the 25th he wrote yet more strongly to the same effect, declaring that there appeared to be 'carelessness amongst the higher departments,' which required vigorous correction. On the 29th he returned to the subject, writing even more vituperatively than before, and in a yet closer pursuance of the ordained course of action, his diatribes now drew to a focus; for, basing himself on the curious mistakes before indicated, he distinctly charged Lord Raglan's Adjutant and Quartermaster-Generals with inattention to the duties of their departments, and even went the strange length of making his accusations in positive terms, without first hearing what might be said by the Commander of the Forces, under whose very eyes the two officers in question were working."

And so the Duke of Newcastle is disposed of, and his fall is duly chronicled. Lord Panmure is dealt with still more vigorously. The peccant War Minister's early life and manners are analysed. He is called "a churl," "mighty in curses," rough-tongued, rough-mannered, "but without base malignity;" and finally, he is described as "more a rhinoceros than a tiger." But his audacity in making any unpleasant representations to Lord Raglan can, in charity to him, only be accounted for, by Mr. Kinglake, on the theory that an attack of gout had diseased his brain! All this is because he "allowed himself to pen a despatch on February 12, '55," in which,—

> "He said he could not find that the Government had been kept informed in a clear, succinct manner with the operations, the progress, or prospects of the campaign; he complained that Lord Raglan's notices of the condition of his army had been brief and unsatisfactory; he directed that fortnightly returns in a new form should be supplied; he adverted to some of those winter troubles upon which, in an earlier chapter, I have carefully dwelt; he professed to be sending out an officer of high rank, who was to test the capabilities of every officer on the general Staff of the army, but at once, without waiting for the result of the inquiry he thus meant to institute, he hastened to condemn unheard both the Adjutant and the Quartermaster-General, coming down against the last more especially in violent, newspaper language; he attempted some minor criticisms, and finally, advised a new measure—one conceived, some would say, in grim jest—that is, the importation of scavengers from Constantinople."

But the wrathful worshipper flies at higher game, and in no measured terms rates the Majesty of England for permitting anything disagreeable to be addressed to the object of his idolatry. The passage in which Mr. Kinglake alludes to the Queen in connection with Lord Panmure's dispatch, every word of which was approved of by the Cabinet, is so curious, that it must be quoted in full:—

> "It will be well for the Monarchy, if any explorer of desks, any searcher of journals and diaries, shall at last prove able to show that some official neglect or some oversight or mistake in the Palace intercepted the royal attention to what I have called the pith of this egregious despatch, and that therefore the act of concurring in Lord Panmure's heedless words may happily prove to be one in which, though the State gravely erred, the Queen herself had no part."

As to the Staff of the Army, which was assailed by the Ministers and by public opinion, it is only necessary for me to say that I think much of the invective directed against them was unjust. They were placed suddenly in the most trying position, without qualification by previous training or knowledge for the discharge of their duties, and they struggled, some to the death, to do their work. How could the country expect that a number of gay and gallant young soldiers, of whom not many had had any experience of service, could suddenly become, under the enemy's fire, wary, indefatigable, vigilant,—the eyes, and ears, and arms of their General? It is not without emotion, I think, that any one of proper feeling can read the expressions of the devotion to his officers evinced by Lord Raglan, when he was called upon to sacrifice them. It was a devotion which those officers well repaid, if they were not all equally worthy of it. Whatever may have been the injustice done to them at the time, it cannot be said that they suffered permanent wrong, or that their career was blighted by the hot breath of popular displeasure. No one now will question the ability and energy of Airey and the value of his labours, as well as their cruel pressure upon him, but it was the misfortune of the Commander-in-Chief and of the Army, and not General Airey's fault, that at a critical time, when the outcry was at its height almost, his health gave way, so that his duties were relegated to incompetent and unpopular subordinates. Of the attitude of the Head-quarters Staff in the midst of the winter troubles, and of the nonchalance and calm to which Mr. Kinglake attributes such virtues in imposing on the enemy and inspiring the Army, I can only say that my recollections of the effect produced by the undoubted tranquillity of the Farm House in the minds of the mere combatant officers were that it was anything but pleasant. I remember well how one day there came to me a furibund Colonel, in a rabbit-skin coat, his beard stiffened with ice, his face flaming with frost and anger, his boots coated to the knees with frozen mud, and let loose the torrent of his wrath. He had just been to Head-quarters, to see Lord Raglan, and lay before him the state of the regiment, or of what remained of it, and had trudged from his camp on foot, full of zeal and pity for his men. "I was shown into a room," he said, "where there was a table, spread with a table-cloth on it, and all sorts of good things laid out,—cold meat," (poor man!) "chickens, pâtés, butter (!), white bread! There was a blazing fire at the end of the room, and there was ——, with his back to it, picking his teeth and reading the paper. I told him of the state we were in,—no warm clothing, no rum, no boots, half-rations, and, by Jove! what do you think? Confound me, if he didn't drawl out 'Yas! It isn't rosy, is it?' I could have," &c. And then he recited imaginary deeds of violence. But, after all, he was unreasonable in his wrath, and no doubt —— would have cheerfully laid down his life—and calmly too—to have saved the men who suffered.

There is, among Mr. Kinglake's other "tricks" of style and method, a noticeable sort of device to tell on his reader's judgment, but it is one which is suited rather to the writer of such works as Walter Savage Landor's Imaginary Conversations, or Mr. Helps's Friends in Council, than to a historian. He imagines situations, suggests motives, and invents soliloquies. Thus he dealt with the Duke of Newcastle, as we have seen; and thus he suggests what the Editor of the Times might, but did not, think in 1854-5; and imagines what Sir Herbert Taylor would have said to King George, had Lord Panmure's despatch, or the like of it, come to his knowledge. Previous to the passage I have just quoted, there is a suggestion which is as follows:—"At that time" (i.e., Lord Panmure's), "there reigned in England a Queen, and the sternest of those who uphold Constitutional principles will agree for once with the courtiers, will concede that such a despatch as the one of which we are speaking ought not to have left our shores without having first been submitted for Royal approval." (p. 333.) Taken to gether, I think Mr. Kinglake in these passages desires to have it understood by his readers that the Queen did not see, and therefore could not approve of, the despatch which her War Minister was about to send, with the sanction of her Cabinet; and as the right of the Sovereign to inspect all important despatches from her Secretary of State had been established, after a memorable struggle, in which Lord Palmerston and Lord John Russell were concerned, it can only be supposed that some one stood between the Queen and the knowledge of the censure, or expression of dissatisfaction, which Lord Panmure had undertaken to convey to Lord Raglan. Only one person can be meant, and that is the Prince Consort. If it be so, then I feel justified in stating that Mr. Kinglake is entirely mistaken. I believe that it will be found the despatch which so excites his indignation was not kept back from the eyes of the Queen, and it would be, indeed, a theme for the bitterest invective of such a partisan of the rights of the "State," as opposed to the "personal" Monarch, had the Queen taken upon herself to disapprove of the course which her responsible Ministers had resolved, in a time of grave disquiet and trouble, to adopt. He glows with an indignation in which all sense and the moderation which is strength are entirely dissolved and evaporated, when he gives way to his imagination, and paints his fancy portrait of his hero. He calls him "the best General the world could furnish, so far as the Ministry knew." (p. 316.) "Here, then," he exclaims, "there seems to be found in one richly-gifted commander an almost ideal assemblage of those many and various conditions which a Ministry, watching over their General in a time of trouble and peril, must have yearned to see him fulfil." (301.) The Ministry, however, saw nothing of the kind. They were by no means content with the ideal General whom Mr. Kinglake pompously styles "the Lord Fitzroy Somerset of the Wellington campaigns," as though Lord Raglan had set his mark on the work done in the Peninsula. The great Duke, it is true, highly valued his subordinate. Who that knew him could but admire his many virtues, the purity of his character, his zeal for the Service, his unselfishness, and his entire devotion to duty? Mr. Kinglake imagines that the Duke of Wellington "would rather have cut off his hand," than sign the despatch which had so enrages him; but I have the very highest authority for saying that, high as was the opinion entertained by the great Duke of the excellent qualities of Lord Raglan, the very last thing that would have entered into his head to propose or sanction, was that the command of a great army should be entrusted to his Military Secretary! The constitutional control exercised by the Queen over her Army, minimised as it is, excites Mr. Kinglake's wrath to the highest pitch, and page after page is devoted to fierce denunciation of the evils wrought by the personage whom he calls the "Personal King," as opposed to the real or abstract "State King" (i.e., the Secretary at War). An elaborate article, entitled "The Fall of Personal Monarchy of George III., in 1809," is inserted in the appendix; "the Mrs. Clarke Scandal" is set forth at length; poor old George III. is depicted "as a steady, industrious disturber of public business;" the Prince Regent is lugged in upon the stage, à propos des bottes, that Mr. Kinglake may flay him alive. "The Regent was a man so repulsively selfish that his memory is much loathed in this country, and, no doubt, when he thought that without much trouble or danger to himself he could attain a personal object by committing an outrage on the State, he was ready enough without scruple to commit the offence, but—given up to self-indulgence—the man was not, like his father, a steady, industrious disturber of public business, and happily spared his country a renewal of 'personal' government in its more constant, more noxious form." (p. 463.) In one place (p. 217), he says:—"The simple truth is, as I have shown that the Monarchical part of our system had so cumbered the action of England as to prevent her from wearing the harness required for modern war." In another, he writes (p. 68):—"In conformity with the—quite legal, quite grotesque—doctrine that our army, like the 'perquisite' of a cook, was a thing coarsely owned by the 'personal,' as distinguished from our genuine 'State' Sovereign, the honour of the English arms was shamelessly entrusted to a Royal Duke*," who is described "as not only conspicuous for intemperance in that madly intemperate age, but garrulous, untrustworthy, and utterly without the brain-power required for command in the field." To illustrate the curious position he takes up, Mr. Kinglake gives, in an appendix, a long series of military expeditions "which so often afforded examples of wasted strength and valour" between 1793 and 1809; but as the list includes the capture of Cape Town, and the conquest of South Africa, of Demerara, of Ceylon, of Malta, the occupation of the Ionian Islands—such little matters as the expulsion of the French from Egypt, and from Portugal, and the beginning of the Peninsular War—I do not think the case is very strong against the expeditions. It happens now and then that in the full "Laudamus" service of the Apotheosis the Arch-priest is occasionally so emported by his ecstacy, that he does not perceive he is bespattering his Idol. Thus, having in the previous five volumes of his "credo" insisted on the "ascendancy" of Lord Raglan in every way and thing, he makes it appear (p. 319) that it was the Duke of Newcastle who forced him to besiege Sebastopol, and that it was the Duke who sent out "the fated man, Burgoyne, and the fated gift, the siege-train, which were fitted to change swift conquest into a painful siege." I am at a loss to understand what Mr. Kinglake would have said of a Minister who sent out an army to besiege a place without an engineer-in-chief or a siege-train, but it is plain enough from his own narrative that Lord Raglan adopted the idea of the flank march, of which his historian now speaks so evilly, with all the enthusiasm of which he was capable. At all events the French were not indebted to the Duke of Newcastle for their engineer or for their siege guns, and they accepted the idea of a siege as the best plan to pursue. It would be strange, indeed, if Mr. Kinglake were to admit that there was in the conduct of the French, from first to last, any one feature redeeming it from baseness,—but he has, in this present volume, unwittingly made admissions most damaging to his theory that Lord Raglan had stablished a complete ascendancy, in the field and out of it, in all which related to our Allies. He asserts, in fact, that so far from being in the ascendant, Lord Raglan dared not press any demand on General Canrobert for French assistance, lest he should endanger the Alliance! Mr. Kinglake challenges Marshal Canrobert, on the faith of Lord Raglan's letters, to meet the allegation that our Allies imposed on us an amount of toil "cruelly and unfairly excessive." And this he says with the facts staring him in the face, in his own pages, that the French, at a time when they were exposed to continual sorties, and were engaged both on our Right and on our Left Attacks in pushing on the siege-works, which on our side were nearly at a stand-still, had taken over the Inkerman Attack, covered our rear over the Woronzow Road, metalled part of our road, carried our sick, gave us food and great-coats. Mr. Kinglake is quite satisfied that if Lord Raglan made a statement in a secret dispatch Marshal Canrobert must be thereupon hung by the neck until he is dead, without any mercy on his soul! I do not know whether Marshal Canrobert, who is yet alive, will meet the challenge. Surely, it was Lord Raglan's duty at the time to have made, in the interests of his soldiery, such representations to Marshal Canrobert, and not to have confined himself to the conveyance of them in "secret despatches to the Duke of Newcastle? "The French Commander," he says, "indeed, showed a generous readiness to aid the transport of our sick and wounded with the resources of his Ambulance Corps, and Lord Raglan's appeals to him for a fairer distribution of the siege labours between the troops of the two Allied Armies did not, certainly, encounter a complete and final rejection; but they were invariably met by General Canrobert with reasons for postponing the desired relief, and afterwards by delays still more lengthened than the reasons suggested warranted" (p. 155-6). This is written by the man who complains that the English Ministers did not inquire what reply Lord Raglan could make to the charges formulated in their letters before they made any inquiry as to their truth! In the same spirit the historian writes of the whole campaign and of the Winter Troubles throughout as if Lord Raglan controlled every act, dominated every situation, and foresaw and provided for everything but was responsible for nothing. With regard to the vexed question of the road from Balaklava to the Camp, it is fair to say that Mr. Kinglake establishes the fact, which was never questioned by me, that when the winter set in and the trenches were "asking for more," Lord Raglan could not detach men from the ranks to make it; but I think it is fairly questionable whether all that could have been done was done. It is laid down as an axiom that hired labour could not be procured. Why? There were swarming populations close at hand, on the shores of the Black Sea, at Constantinople, at Smyrna,—nay, more, there were many hundreds of men on board the merchant vessels and steamers and transports on and off Balaklava, who would have been only too glad to have earned money by their labour. There was a Fleet, almost idle, at anchor. There were also the Turks at Balaklava; and if all these failed, there was at least the resource left to Lord Raglan of declaring to General Canrobert that a road must be made—there was full warning of the necessity of making it given by Mr. —— weeks before—that the English could not make it, and at the same time defend their Right and Left attacks; and that the French must either make the road, or take upon themselves the entire maintenance of the siege works.* Mr. Kinglake, with evident reluctance, detects that spot in the sun, and says, "on the whole, my conclusion is that it would have been right for Lord Raglan to force his way out of the meshes by a peremptory appeal to the French" (p. 118). In my next and last article I shall have to deal with some specific allegations of Mr. Kinglake, and then, as far as I am concerned, my readers shall hear no more of the "Winter Troubles."

WILLIAM HOWARD RUSSELL.

The Channel Squadron, under the command of Vice-Admiral Hood, C.B., with Rear-Admiral Somerset, second-in-command, met off the Eddystone on Wednesday, when the four ships, Minotaur, Agincourt, Achilles, and Northumberland, proceeded for Queenstown. The statement which has appeared in the Times and other daily papers that the Admiral in command has been instructed to be prepared to land a brigade of 2,800 men, existed only in the too-fertile imagination of a Portsmouth newsmonger. The Admiral's instructions are to the effect that the stay at Queenstown will not, in all probability, be for more than a few days, when he will receive his orders to take the ships under his command to the coasts of Spain and Portugal. Christmas-Day will, we regret to hear, for the sake of officers and men, be spent in the Tagus, and, according to present arrangements, the Squadron will remain absent from England for six months. The winter will be passed in cruising on and off Vigo, with occasional calls at Lisbon, but in the spring Gibraltar will be visited, and it is not unlikely that a cruise will be made to Madeira. We had strong hopes that their Lordships would have allowed the ships to spend Christmas at home, for they ought to know how highly a Christmas at home is appreciated by our Blue-jackets, from the fact that they have so few of them, compared with those in civil life. As it matters not one jot or tittle where the ships happen to be cruising for the next two months, it would have been quite as well to have kept them on the Irish as on the Spanish coast, and perhaps better, all things considered, for, if a battalion of Marines is a necessity in the Emerald Isle, a squadron of her Majesty's ships off the coast could have done no harm. Then the ships could have been ordered home to their respective ports to complete with stores, and to leave for their more distant cruising ground with the new year. The amount of leave-breaking which followed the last Christmas leave at home was by no means excessive, and will compare favourably enough with the consequences of leave-giving at Lisbon. But the Admiralty has some narrow prejudice against allowing the ships of the so-called Channel Squadron to be in or near the Channel when Christmas comes round. To those who are always at home, the fact of being at their own fireside or among the members of their family on this particular season is but a small matter. With our seamen, who so rarely chance to be within easy distance of home, it is a different thing. Their friends, too, at home think far more of having their sailor-relatives with them at that time, if only for a week, than for a month at any other more busy period of the year. That such facts as these should escape notice would seem to show that there is a want of sympathy between the Administrative Department and the Service afloat. This is keenly felt by that class to which we look for our seamen, and what wonder is it that many a mother struggles hard to prevent her boy from going to sea, feeling sure that she will hardly ever see him again. To send away the Channel Squadron at a time when the people are beginning to think of their home gatherings is a mistake, if nothing worse; and it is such want of thought for the sentiments and feelings prevailing on the lower deck that goes far to make the Service less popular than it should be, and to make men grow sick of it, and leave it, when their first engagement has expired. A little more consideration and readiness to meet the wishes of the men, who number their thousands, would do more to retain our trained seamen than any number of Circulars offering an extra twopence a day to those who re-engage. That there must be great drawbacks to service afloat as compared with life on shore, we will admit, but there are many little difficulties which might be smoothed down, if more consideration were shown as to leave and small indulgences. The work of the seaman is hard enough we know, and a more willing and uncomplaining man than the British Blue-jacket it would be difficult to find. He does his work loyally while he is in the Service, but the majority throw up their chances of pension and higher pay, and simply get quit of the whole thing on the first opportunity, preferring to take the chances of employment on shore rather than remain afloat to be bucketted about from morning to night, and to be denied privileges which could be readily granted without cost to the State or detriment to the Service. It is not too late even yet to stay the orders of the Squadron for the Spanish coast, and we trust their Lordships will take our counsel to heart, and see the policy of adding to the popularity of the Service, instead of sending away the ships with disappointed crews.

* The Duke of York.

* There is an odd mistake, a misprint, at page 114, where it is stated that Lord Raglan's "first step was to despatch an officer of the Quartermaster-General's Department to Sebastopol (!) with orders to buy there the tools, including, of course, the stone-hammers which were needed for road-making." Constantinople is meant.

In the current number of Blackwood is an article on "Army Reform," which might be read with advantage by the Authorities. We do not endorse all the opinions of the writer, but it is impossible to deny that he has thrown some light on a difficult subject, and made several suggestive remarks. He may be described as an advocate of qualified Cardwellism, as may be gathered from his opening paragraph, in which he says that "what has been called Lord Cardwell's scheme has so far proved a failure, not through any inherent defects, but from the attempt of the Government of the day to carry on wars without asking Parliament for the sinews of war." The result has been, he says, that the scheme has undergone a strain to which it was never intended to be subjected. Two difficult wars have been carried on at the same time, with all the establishments on a peace footing. The system was based on the principle that only one of each pair of linked battalions should be abroad, and that, if owing to stress of war, both battalions were out of the country, a proportionate increase should be made in the number of men at the Depôts. This increase has never been made, and unless the standard had been lowered, or the inducements to enlist increased, it would appear, from our recruiting experiences of the past nine years, that the men could not have been obtained. As it is, owing to short service, our demands are nearly double what they were before Lord Cardwell's changes, and it is very certain that we could not reduce the strength of our already skeleton battalions. That being the case, we should only be robbing Peter to pay Paul, if we made any large addition to the strength of Depôts. Moreover, as the writer of the article admits, the expedient would fail of effect, for it would only crowd the Depôts with boys unfit to be sent into the field. He confesses that the only method of obtaining trained soldiers is to invite volunteers from other regiments, or to call up men from the Reserve. To have recourse to the latter means in the event of little wars would, he considers, be impolitic. We agree with him, but believe that, with proper inducements and management, a large number of Reserve men would volunteer. The calling for volunteers from other regiments we consider an objectionable practice. It temporarily renders the regiments supplying those volunteers inefficient, introduces an element into the receiving regiment which cannot be at once assimilated, destroys esprit de corps in both regiments, and promotes a spirit of vagabondage throughout the Army. The writer of the article maintains, in opposition to the universal opinion of the Army, that volunteering, "within restricted limits, constitutes a desirable and convenient assistance to the Adjutant-General in an emergency." We have no doubt that volunteering, unless within limits so restricted as to make it practically useless, is greatly to be deprecated. With another suggestion, we cordially concur. It is that a certain number of battalions should be always maintained at war strength. This has never yet been done, for though certain battalions have been kept up at a high strength, so that they may be ready at any moment for service, not a single one has yet been able to embark 1,000 bayonets in every sense fit for the field, without calling for volunteers or assistance from the linked battalions. Two other subjects are dealt with in the article under notice, and both are of importance. One is the establishment of General Officers; the other, the question of promotion. In discussing the former question, he administers a severe rebuke to Mr. Trevelyan, conclusively proving how ignorant of military matters that violent and arrogant military reformer is. According to Mr. Trevelyan, there are 626 Generals on the Active List, and "the Retired List of Generals is one that no man can number." As a matter of fact, on June 1 the number of active Generals was 475, and that of those on the Retired List—comprising Artillery, Engineers, Marines, and Indian Army—was 130. Mr. Trevelyan is equally inaccurate when he states that thirty-four Indian appointments which ought to be held by Generals are occupied by colonels, from want of a sufficient number of capable General Officers. The slightest inquiry would have shown him that this arrangement is solely due to economy. The writer devotes great attention to promotion by selection. He uses many arguments to prove that it is impossible in time of peace, without great injustice, and points out all the difficulties and evils which would ensue from introducing that practice. We shall content ourselves with saying that we admit the difficulties and the evils, but that we think a system of promotion by seniority tempered by selection could be worked out without injustice to officers, and to the benefit of the Service and the country.

The Naval Demonstration is, it would seem, to be brought home to the very palace of the Sultan, for on Monday two ex-First Lords of the British Admiralty, Mr. Goschen and Mr. Smith, are to dine with his Majesty.

The Lords of the Admiralty have this year used their yacht, the Enchantress, merely as their hotel, and not to take passage in. With one or two exceptions their Lordships preferred travelling to the Ports by rail, and thought the passage viâ Holyhead better than round Land's End. And now it appears that the yacht is not large enough for them, and the construction of a new vessel is to be undertaken at Pembroke. Mr. Brassey stuck to the Enchantress on her recent cruise, for although she was a little wet, it would have ill become a master of the Mercantile Marine to show any desire to shirk a dash of salt water.

The Admiralty will not recall the Iron Duke from the China Station unless it be found absolutely necessary, and under any circumstances would prefer some little time to elapse before ordering her home after her grounding, as her sudden recall would accentuate the accident. The Swiftsure is, however, to be prepared for duty as a flagship and probable relief of the Iron Duke, and the building of a poop and other extensive alterations are to be taken in hand at once at Devonport.

Rear-Admiral Lord Clanwilliam, C.B., with the whole of the ships of the Squadron under his command, was at Madeira on Sunday last, and sailed on the 10th for St. Vincent.

Mr. Edward Greenway, midshipman, who had served in the Charybdis since February, 1877, has been permitted by the Admiralty to resign and leave the Service.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., has transferred his flag to the Monarch from the Alexandra, which has proceeded to Malta to give leave and complete with stores. It is devoutly hoped in the Squadron that the ships may soon be relieved of the monotonous guard-mounting in Teodo Bay.

A full report of the gallantry of the Seedie boy of the Wild Swan, who saved a slave from being devoured by sharks, has been received at the Admiralty from Commander Dacres, and we hear that their Lordships will recommend the boy for the highest award for saving life from drowning. The details of the case have already appeared in these columns, and no more striking act of gallantry has come under our notice within recent times.

We trust a medical contemporary may be correct in stating that the new regulations for Naval Medical Officers have been prepared, and have met with the approval of the "Authorities," which in this case would mean the Admiralty and Treasury. But as far our information goes, we have no confirmation of this pleasant rumour. That it must soon come there can be no doubt, but we rather fancy our contemporary is anticipating events.

The vexed question of stability, which has occupied so prominent a place in the Atalanta controversy, has led to inquiries being made as to other classes of her Majesty's ships, and it has been discovered that the Sheldrake class is wanting in this most necessary quality. Steps will, of course, be taken to give warning to all ships of this class now in commission, and the trim of those in reserve will be altered, before they are again sent on service.

Lieutenant Keppel Foote will temporarily undertake the duties of Lieutenant-Instructor of the London Brigade of Naval Artillery Volunteers, their Lordships having approved of him as a relief for Lieutenant Charles Bell, who, we regret to hear, is unfit for duty, owing to ill-health.

The speech of the Earl of Northbrook at the Lord Mayor's banquet, in returning thanks for the Navy, was certainly flattering to that branch of her Majesty's service, and the cheers of his audience showed the approval of his civilian hearers. His lordship gave the assurance that at no former time has the discipline of the fleets, at home and abroad, been in a more satisfactory condition. He also gave tribute of praise to Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour for the unanimity and good-feeling which prevailed among the officers and crews of the Allied Squadron under his command while in Austrian waters. In speaking of the corps of Royal Marines, his lordship observed that he was greatly gratified at receiving from the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief the expression of his opinion that nothing could exceed the condition and efficiency of what he was pleased to call "that splendid force." It is not the first time that his Royal Highness has been pleased to make use of such favourable expressions towards the Royal Marine Corps, and we feel satisfied that such a reaction has taken place in the feeling at the Admiralty as to over-rule any previous intention of reducing the establishment of this efficient body of men.

Admiral Sir Cooper Key, K.C.B., and Rear-Admiral Herbert were requested by the War Office to represent the Naval element on the Committee appointed to inquire into the defences of our mercantile ports. The duties of these officers at the Admiralty prevented their taking this additional duty upon them, and it was suggested that Vice-Admiral Phillimore and Vice-Admiral Henry Boys should be nominated in their stead. The offices lately filled by these two officers, namely, that of Admiral Superintendent of the Reserves and Director of Naval Ordnance respectively, make them peculiarly fitted to adjudicate on coast defences, and they have consequently been selected as members of the Committee.

Why is not the Fawn ordered to pay off? She has been in commission since June 1, 1876, nearly four and a half years, and as will be seen by some particulars as to her state and condition to be found under her name in another column, she adds nothing to the strength of the Mediterranean Fleet, for she is indeed a "weak link." Her surveying service in the Sea of Marmora has been completed, and she is now only awaiting those orders which the Admiralty have, apparently, forgotten to give.

As will be seen by reference to the name of the ship in another column, the Rambler has gained the reputation of being anything but a comfortable ship. Commissioned only in September last by Commander the Hon. A. C. Littleton, she has already had more than her fair proportion of offences and courts-martial. Her commander had no serious difficulty with his men in the last commission so far as we know, but it would seem that his new command is, thus far, anything but a success. There must be something exceptionally wrong somewhere if all we hear be true, and either the ship has had the misfortune to receive a wonderful number of bad characters from the Naval Barracks, or there must be a want of tact in dealing with the men on board the ship. If it be true that the ship is made unbearable to the lower deck, it is not strange that men should commit crimes which lead to their being sentenced to imprisonment, rather than go to such a station as the West Coast of Africa in an uncomfortable ship. We always hesitate to accept growls from the discontented, but when charges are deliberately laid, and the matter becomes the talk of the port, then it is time that some inquiry should be made at head-quarters.

We are indebted to a correspondent, writing from Arica on October 3, for the following most interesting account of the torpedo operations of the Chilians and the destruction of the Corvadonga, the details of her loss being from the lips of a survivor. Our correspondent says :—"Although the torpedo operations of the Chilian Navy during the war have been singularly unsuccessful, beyond establishing a wholesome dread of these engines of war in their opponents' breasts, the Peruvians, on the other hand, have not only sunk the Loa, a large armed transport, but now have destroyed the famous little Corvadonga. The story in each case is very similar. On July 3, 1880, the Loa, Captain Peña, while blockading the port of Callao, picked up a boat full of vegetables, but with no one in her. Captain Peña, in common with the other officers of the squadron, had been officially warned that it was known the Peruvians would attempt to destroy the ships by means of explosives concealed in a boat, but in spite of this fact, which had been ascertained by spies, he commenced to clear her of her cargo. The consequence was, by the weights being removed, a spring was released and 300 lbs. of dynamite exploded with great violence. The ship sank in a few minutes, and Captain Peña perished with 100 of his crew. Some forty were saved, chiefly by the boats of H.M.S. Thetis. The Corvadonga, a gun-vessel of 412 tons, was much valued as the only trophy the Chilians possess of the Spanish war in 1865, when she was captured in November by the Chilian sloop Esmeralda. The following details of her loss are from the lips of a survivor, the only Englishman on board. On September 13th, she entered the Peruvian port of Chaucay, and opened fire. After trying ineffectually to destroy a railway bridge, those on board caught sight of two boats at anchor. A ship's boat was lowered and sent to destroy them, and one, a lighter, was sunk. The other was found to be a particularly nice lifeboat-gig, well fitted with cushions, &c. She was towed alongside the Corvadonga, and the carpenter sent in to examine her. No explosives were to be found in her, but the bow and stern air-boxes, having no opening, were not looked into, and this negligence proved fatal. Captain Ferrari determined to appropriate her for his own use, and ordered her to be hoisted up to the starboard waist davits. The tackles were hooked on to links of chain coming up apparently through a pipe through the air-boxes, but immediately on commencing to hoist a tremendous explosion occurred. The starboard side of the ill-fated Corvadonga was completely crushed in. The foreyard fell with a crash, the other boats on that side were blown to atoms, and in four minutes the ship sank in ten fathoms. Fifteen men managed to escape to sea in the gig, the only boat not destroyed, and safely reached the Callao Squadron, thirty miles away. Forty-nine were taken prisoners, many perished in the ship, and thus Chili lost a vessel valued not only for her usefulness, but as a national trophy, this, too, at a time when every vessel they possess means a Peruvian port blockaded. The Chilian Government, having proved to its own satisfaction that Sir W. Armstrong's improved breech-loading guns are infinitely superior to any description of muzzle-loaders, is now engaged in changing the Huascar's armament. In another month she will return to the Peruvian coast with two 8-in. 11½-ton guns in her turret, capable of ranging more than twice as far as the two obsolete 10-in. muzzle-loading guns she now discards; in fact, it is expected that she will be able to throw her projectiles into Lima, five miles from the nearest part of the coast, and 500 ft. above the level of the sea. However, this remains to be seen. In Peru, the Dictator Pierola seems to have begun to think about peace, for he has accepted the good offices of the United States Minister at Lima to mediate with the Chilian Government. The result is that representatives of the three belligerents meet in conference at Arica on October 5, on board an American man-of-war. What the result will be it is impossible to speculate, such a bitter animosity exists between Peru and Chili. At the very moment the conference meets, the Chilian ships are destroying property all along the defenceless Peruvian coast, and the Santiago papers are vowing vengeance over the loss of their two ships; on the other hand, the Lima journals are full of bombastic heroism, utterly denying that they are beaten, and claiming to be in a stronger position now than at the commencement of the war. It is much to be feared that many thousands of lives will be sacrificed in a last deadly struggle round the capital of Peru."

Several officers of the Light Infantry Divisions of the Royal Marines have received orders to present themselves at the Head-quarters of the Royal Marine Artillery at Eastney, on Monday next, for the purpose of going through a course of garrison instruction.

The present form of "Gunnery Log and Progress Book" has been revised, and in future will be issued as two separate volumes, to last a ship's commission. On April 1 next, all the old "Gunnery Log and Progress Books" are to be closed, and the new books opened, except in the cases of ships about to be ordered home from foreign service, or to pay off, when the old books may be contined, if more convenient. All ships newly commissioned from this date will be supplied with the new form. The books will be kept by the Gunnery Lieutenant, and submitted by him to the Captain weekly, for approval and signature. If there be no Gunnery Lieutenant, the Gunner will perform this duty; and, if there be no Gunner, then the Gunnery Instructor will keep the book, under the supervision of the officer in command.

Following closely upon the report of Captain Hopkins, of the Excellent, comes that of the Portuguese Machine Gun Committee, whose experiments were began last August, and have just been brought to a close. The report speaks most highly of the Nordenfelt English Admiralty pattern gun, the Portuguese officers remarking that "through its volley-firing, and thereby being able to fire at the rate of 250 to 350 shots per minute, its effect, even on land, would be a great deal more destructive than the Hotchkiss revolving-cannon firing shells, but only being able to fire a single shot while the Nordenfelt-Palmcrantz mitrailleuse fires a volley of four shots." The Italian Government Committee have also completed their competitive trials between the Nordenfelt and Hotchkiss machine guns, the results obtained being similar to those secured in this country, and recently reported upon by the Captain of the Excellent.

The remains of the late Lieutenant Irving, R.N., of the lost Franklin Expedition, will be brought to Glasgow from the United States of America, on board a steamer of the Anchor Line, that company having generously offered to convey the remains of this officer to his native country, free of all charge. From Glasgow, the body will be transported to Edinburgh, and handed over to the relatives of the deceased officer for interment.

We hear that Messrs. Thorneycroft have submitted to the Admiralty the plans of a proposed torpedo-boat, driven by means of hydraulic propulsion. But what is most gratifying in this matter is that their Lordships should have forwarded these plans to Admiral Sir George Elliot for his opinion. In a recent article on Naval officers and Naval constructors, we strongly urged the desirability of more frequent interchange of opinion in matters of construction between the Civil Department and the Service afloat, and we sincerely trust that this may be the dawn of a new and better order of things. Sir George Elliot has devoted much attention to the question of hydraulic propulsion, and did his utmost to show that although the Waterwitch was not a success, the ideas under which she was constructed were capable of great improvement. No better authority on this particular subject could be found in the Service, and we congratulate the Department in having so far thrown aside their usual reserve and professional jealousy as to take into consultation a retired Flag-officer. It was but the other day that a retired Flag-officer, when writing to the Times on the loss of the Atalanta, stated that he would have looked upon it as an impertinence to have given his views to the Admiralty after being retired. We hope the officers of the Service, whether active or retired, will no longer entertain any such ideas, but that they will not hesitate to express their opinions for the good of the Service when they may feel that there is occasion for so doing.

The relief of the Marine Detachment on board the Pembroke is being carried out by degrees. Only about forty Marines were required for embarkation in that ship, and some six weeks have been passed in trying to collect that number from the Chatham Division. Either the despatch of one battalion to Ireland has brought the gallant corps down to a skeleton, or else the system of detailing men for embarkation is too elaborate for the convenience of the Service. As we stated recently, the Assistance is wanted on her return from the Mediterranean to bring back a few men whose turn has arrived for embarkation, and until those few arrive there seems to be quite a dead-block in carrying out even the reliefs on board harbour ships. This does not seem right when we consider the force of the Royal Marines,—on paper.

The boat accident which happened last week at Devonport, whereby a number of men narrowly escaped drowning, has called attention to the over-crowding of watermen's boats by liberty-men returning to their ships. As a remedy, Rear-Admiral Somerset gave directions that an officer should be present to see the men of the Channel Squadron ships taken off from the shore. But the true remedy would be found in better arrangements for the embarkation of men returning from leave. Why should they be required to use watermen's boats at all, thus putting them to an unnecessary expense in returning from the shore? The little paddle-vessel, the Harpy, which conveys the men to the Sound, might surely go alongside the yard instead of lying off in the stream, and compelling the men to take boats from Mutton Cove to reach her. The chief officer in command of the Harpy, Mr. Johns, has been employed at Devonport in similar vessels to the Harpy all his service career, and he would find no difficulty in going alongside either the dockyard or victualling yard, and taking the men straight to their ships from the shore without the intermediate trouble and expense of embarking by means of hired boats. Nothing could be more easy, nor, it would have been thought, could anything have occurred more naturally to the minds of the Authorities than this method of taking seamen off to their ships. But, for some inscrutable reason, or, rather, from an utter want of reason, the little Harpy is moored off in the stream, and the men have to find their way to her. If it were the desire of the Authorities to encourage leave-breaking, no better way of doing so could be devised than that of making it as difficult as possible for the men to find their way back to their ships. And this is exactly what it pleases them to do at Devonport.

Lieutenant-Colonel W. L. Yonge, R.A., has been appointed to the command of the Auxiliary Artillery in the Colchester Sub-District, vice Colonel H. Renny, whose period of Staff service has expired.

The French Infantry Committee has not only determined to lighten the load at present carried by the French soldier on his back, and to distribute what remains in a more scientific manner, but has also decided against both helmet and shako. The Committee consider that the képi is the best head-gear for the soldier of the epoch, who has little to fear from the cavalry sabres except during flight, and when fleeing, he will be able to get over the ground much more rapidly with his képi than with a heavier top weight. The Committee has also recommended that the manufacture of shoes and garters for the army be at once suspended, as in their opinion the half-boot laced up the side should be adopted, or else the Neapolitan half-boot. However, the shoe and gaiter have, up to the present, exhibited a most remarkable amount of vitality. It appears to us that military committees have been reporting against them for many years past, but they still exist, in spite of the grave inconvenience of troubling a soldier with two articles dependent upon each other where one would do. The Committee also recommend the substitution of the vareuse, or guernsey, worn in the marine for the present tunic, and a waterproof rug for the present woollen blanket, which soaks in the rain. Altogether, the condition of the French soldier runs every chance of being greatly ameliorated, and this partly because every one being liable to serve, everyone is interested in the well-being of the rank and file. Not long ago, we saw some French soldiers with helmets which had been served out for trial, and we must say that the pattern was exceedingly pleasing to the eye, and that the men looked infinitely smarter in them than in the shako. The képi, however, is very becoming when jauntily worn by an old soldier.

The Gazette of Tuesday last shows that the Horse Guards has been enabled to provide for a couple of Purchase subalterns, whose regimental advancement has been delayed, and whose regiments have for some years past been in a stagnant condition as regards promotion. Lieutenant W. G. Small, of the 59th, is appointed to a company in the 104th Fusiliers, and Lieutenant A. K. Purvis, of the 87th, is promoted into the 107th. This is as it should be. The 59th, a regiment which has lately done good service in the field, has, we find, no fewer than six subalterns who entered the Army previous to the abolition of Purchase, whereas the senior subaltern of the 104th is of comparatively short service. The 87th has eight subalterns who were appointed on or prior to October 28, 1871, whilst in the 107th the senior subaltern entered the Army as recently as September, 1876. It was, therefore, only an act of justice to the Purchase officers still serving as subalterns that they should derive benefit from these two steps.

The adjutancies of all the regiments of Household Cavalry are now vacant. It is fully time that those of the 1st and 2nd Life Guards were filled, considering that a year has elapsed since Captain Southwood got his promotion, and Captain Wake retired. A year is a long time for an Infantry battalion to be without an adjutant, but with Cavalry it is very essential that no unnecessary delay should be occasioned in filling the appointment.

The French Republican papers chronicle the following fact with great glee:—No. 1, or, as he is familiarly called, "the major of the promotion," this year at St. Cyr, is not the son of a bloated aristocrat, but an enfant de troupe called Brasart, who is just eighteen. Left an orphan at twelve years of age, he was adopted by the officers of the 6th Regiment of the Line, in which his father had served as bandmaster. The town of Saintes also contributed towards the education of this lad, who, at a very early age, showed signs of being remarkably intelligent. The patrons of the youthful "major" have not been disappointed up to the present, and we are given to believe that the world will some day hear a good deal of Brasart. This is possible, for a good many unpromising lads have distinguished themselves in the military line. Where would Bob Clive be now-a-days, with competitive examinations? Bonaparte came out very low down in his examination, and was reported on as capable of making a good sailor. Frederick the Great only became a soldier after he had run away at Molwitz. We are, however, assured that all this is changed, and that no more brilliant generalship will be witnessed, that the days of strategy have passed, and that the present era is one of sound principles and not of genius. The mechanical appliances by which troops are moved, the rapidity with which future wars must necessarily be decided (at least in Europe), and the new system of fighting, all tend towards rendering warfare more matter of fact, and success more dependent on general capacity than individual ability.

They evidently manage things better at Aldershot than at Woolwich, for Major-General Sir Frederick FitzWygram inspected the companies of the Army Service Corps at that station the other day, and we read in the report of the proceedings that "the mounted duties of the corps were performed by the Royal Engineers and Royal Artillery, which enabled the whole of the Army Service Corps to attend the inspection." "General FitzWygram, on arrival, made a minute inspection of the men, horses, and waggons." The field inspection over, "the General next proceeded to inspect the school, stables, recreation-rooms, library, canteen, and serjeants' mess." "We are given to understand that the men, with their horses, were out on duty at a somewhat late hour on the night previous to the inspection; but notwithstanding this drawback, they turned out in capital condition the next morning, and gave the General every satisfaction." Very different this to the so-called inspection which the companies at Woolwich undergo periodically, where men and horses are seen in the stable-yard, and no measures are taken to test the military efficiency of either officers or men.

A correspondent offers as a suggestion that Commanding Officers ought, as a matter of fairness, to take into consideration the propriety of supplying to all regimental assistant-clerks an office serge out of the canteen funds. The arrangement is favoured, he says, in some regiments, and the boon is much appreciated; but in other corps the men employed on office work are in no way compensated for the destruction of clothing which their office duties entail.

It is high time that the Secretary of State for War's attention was directed to the state of officers' quarters at Dover. Those of the Shaft Barracks are simply in a most disgraceful state; they are ruinous, the paper hangs in festoons from the walls, and altogether they are unfit for kennels. The Royal Engineers, with every wish to put them in order, are unable to do so, on account of having no money. Any one inspecting the Commanding Officer's quarters would imagine that he was examining a lot of the lowest description of Irish hovels. The majority of these quarters are close in rear of the soldiers' barracks, and look into the backs of the soldiers' rooms. The view on a wet day is, therefore, by no means a cheering one.

Deputy-Commissary-General W. F. Wright, C.B., who was in administrative charge of the Ordnance Store Department during the late wars in South Africa, has been invalided to England, and has arrived home this week.

Deputy-Commissary-General S. W. Hall, from Commissariat charge in Scotland, has been appointed to the Southern Portsmouth District, vice Deputy-Commissary-General A. W. Downes, C.B., retired, being succeeded at Edinburgh by Assistant-Commissary-General A. Clerk, from the West Indies, who is relieved by Assistant-Commissary-General R. D. Noake.

Considering the great wealth of works on military science which have made their appearance in more recent times, and the general study of the art of war, it must be looked upon as a happy thought that a number of eminent German officers should have undertaken the task of selecting from among the very bases of military science the works of such men as Frederick the Great, Scharnhorst, Clausewitz, Napoleon, Jomini, and other war captains, and supplying them to military students at a merely nominal cost. Edited by Major von Marées, of the German General Staff, three parts have at present been published, the first of which contains Frederick's General Principia; the second and third being devoted to Clausewitz's Vom Kriege. The Classics are accompanied by such introductions, notes, and explanations as are suitable to the subject, and the high standing of the officers engaged on the work is a guarantee that the succeeding parts will be as carefully edited as those already before us. At any rate, the idea of publishing such a collection of the military classics deserves every encouragement; for our part, we wish the undertaking the success it so well deserves. Messrs. F. Schneider and Co., of Berlin, are the publishers.

In a recent part of the Organ für Militär-Wissenschaftlichen Vereine, the development of the Continental Armies during 1879 is treated in a very concise manner, the progress made being summarised as follows:—In comparing the various armies, the writer states that Germany shows the most stability, as she has very few military changes to make, and is able to devote her attention to the development of its efficiency and internal organisation. By the light of recent events, however, this statement requires some qualification, as the great organic change, which was at first thought to be postponed till 1881, will take effect this year. Russia, determined by her experiences during the last great war, has undertaken large plans of reorganisation, the final effects of which can hardly yet be foreseen. Her military authorities have not yet plunged into the abyss of innovations. At present she has only reached the field of discussion, which precedes all new creations. France, on the contrary, is ready with her organisation. The era of experiments, of precipitate arrangements, is over; with the advent of political settlement, of consolidation of the Republic, the army has now assumed a more distinct form. With prudence—by way of administrative changes—the transmission to a three-year service has been begun, a change which, under other circumstances, would bring in its train a total transformation of the existing institutions of the French army. Italy, notwithstanding the financial straits in which she finds herself, is making gigantic efforts, not only to reorganise her army on a uniform basis, but to increase its strength. In a certain sense, everything has to be newly created. Besides fundamental changes, especially as regards the supply of matériel, many improvements have been ordered. Roumania, conscious of the fact that the present weakness of her army is a standing obstacle to her becoming a desirable ally, has far-reaching schemes in hand, probably with the intention of attaining, with the improvement of her military forces, a corresponding success and material gain. Of the Balkan natives, Servia has to undergo an increase, Bulgaria a complete creation of their respective armies, the value of which only the future will bring to light.

It is high time that some forcible steps were taken to stamp out the existence of a species of industry which, originated by the abolition of branding, or rather tattooing (for it was nothing more), deserters and soldiers discharged from the Service as incorrigibly bad characters, is very sensibly on the increase, and is, it is not too much to say, greatly undermining the strength of many of our regiments on home service. Formerly a man who was thus marked had little or no chance of escaping detection, if he presented himself for re-enlistment, and few were eager to run the risk of being summarily sent to prison as a rogue and a vagabond. Now all is changed, and our criminal classes have had their number increased by the springing into existence of one whose special calling it is to enlist into regiment after regiment, and in turn to desert from each, carrying off on each occasion the whole of their clothing and necessaries, and not unfrequently easing their comrades of their possessions at the same time. They are, needless to say, constantly apprehended, and the expense and labour entailed in bringing witnesses, often from great distances, to identify the scoundrels, and prove their several enlistments, can easily be imagined. Seeing the enormous cost of our Army, and the very small numbers that we are able, notwithstanding, to bring into the field, it surely would be well worth the while of the Government to apply themselves with all vigour to remedy an evil which costs the country directly and indirectly enormous sums, while it considerably decreases the effective strength of the Army, and also lowers its tone, by permitting in its ranks the presence of a class only fit to associate with gangs of felons. There are very many ways in which the Army Estimates could be cut down, without reducing its effective by one man or one weapon, but there is none which would confer so much benefit on it, or give so much satisfaction to every good soldier, as a measure that would put a final stopper to the calling of the chevaliers d'industrie above mentioned. This could easily be done, by tattooing all men convicted of desertion or discharged as bad characters; or, if the susceptibilities of the country are too tender to subject such men to that which nearly all sailors undergo of their own free will, by vaccinating all soldiers on their enlistment in a manner that any military surgeon would readily recognise. In any case, the punishment for the crime of fraudulently enlisting should be made much more severe than it is, and that most misleading compilation of anomalies, the new Army Discipline Act, should be thoroughly amended as to its dealing with this subject. This Act may be clear enough to a man whose mind has been long trained to understand legal intricacies, but by introducing a strong smattering of legal quibbles into military law—which till lately was justest of the just, and clearest of the clear—it tends to puzzle the members of courts-martial and those whose duty it is to examine its proceedings as to their correctness, and confirm or otherwise its finding and sentence, to an extent not unlikely to prove somewhat subversive of that most unfailing justice which has always been the by-word of military tribunals.

REDUCED BRIGADE DEPÔT QUARTERMASTERS.

"Quo Warranto" writes:—"On April 1, 1878, 21 of the senior and probably most efficient and deserving of our Army Quartermasters were, without any fault on their part, and without any precedent, struck off the strength of the Regular Army, and deprived of their Army commissions, some of which had been held by them since 1855. These officers were induced to leave their Line regiments between 1873 and 1876, to accept quartermasterships of the newly-formed brigade depôts; but on March 31, 1878, they were informed that from that date their brigade depôt appointments were abolished, and that they must accept quartermasterships in the Militia. This of itself was a sufficiently unpalatable change, seeing that they had accepted the brigade depôt appointments on the faith of their being permanent; but, as if to add further to the bitterness of their lot, they found themselves entirely deprived of their Army commissions, and gazetted to the Militia, as if they had never seen a day's Army service. As an attempt to rectify the mistake of thus depriving them of their Army rank and seniority, these officers were subsequently gazetted to 'temporary' Army rank from the original dates of their Army commissions, which was simply giving them the shadow, in consideration of having deprived them of the substance, as it appears by par. 3, sec. 2, Queen's Regulations, that 'permanent rank takes precedence of all temporary rank in the same grade;' and should any of these officers (some of whom have held permanent Army commissions for nearly a quarter of a century) find themselves doing duty with the Regular Forces, a Line quartermaster of a week's standing would take precedence of them. Now, Sir, I think you will agree that this is rather harsh treatment of old and tried officers who have spent their lives and energies in the Regular Army, and to which they are proud to belong; and it would be an inexpensive and graceful act on the part of the Authorities to acknowledge that a mistake has been made by restoring these 21 officers to their permanent Army rank, and placing them in the same position as their more fortunate brother quartermasters of the Royal Artillery, whose brigade appointments were similarly abolished, but who still retain their permanent Army rank and commissions while serving with the Militia."

RECRUITING.

"G. L. B. K." writes from Yorkshire:—"Owing to the difficulty that is experienced in obtaining good non-commissioned officers, as by the short-service system they go into the Reserve just as they are becoming good soldiers, would it not be a good plan to establish regular recruiting stations in the Dominion of Canada, with depôts where the men could be drilled, as in England? Men coming from such a distance would find it more worth their while to stay with the colours, especially if the pay of non-commissioned officers was raised, as has often been suggested in your columns. There is such a constant tide of emigration to the shores of North America, that already the labour market is getting drugged, and a good many, both of the immigrants and of the Canadians themselves, being, as a rule, without any capital, find it hard to get work or even subsistence, and would gladly enlist, were the opportunity placed before them. The physique of such men, as a rule, is superior to what the recruiting officer meets with in England. It would be well to follow up the very good system that has been introduced of commissioning a certain number of officers straight from the training college in Canada, by enlisting men from the same country either to serve in English regiments, or in regiments entirely raised in Canada. I am sure it would be appreciated by both countries, and would enlighten the bonds that already exist between the mother-country and her American dependencies."

THE INDIAN NATIVE ARMY.

"Field-Officer" writes:—"Would you allow me to say a few words regarding the Native Army of India, at least the Infantry portion of it, as that is the branch with which I served for thirty years? Lord Northbrook, in a recent speech, quoting Lord Napier of Magdala and Sir H. Norman in support of his views, seemed to consider the present system of officering the Native Army the right one, as it gave a career to native gentlemen. In the first place, as regards the number of English officers allowed to a Native regiment, I would remark that all regiments in the Native Army of India are not alike in any way. That is to say, that although the present system may do very well for Punjab, Goorkha, and Sikh regiments, it does not follow that it will answer equally well for Bombay, Madras, and many of the Bengal regiments. The reason of this is not difficult to see. Anybody who has, for instance, seen the native officers of the Punjab Frontier Force, would not think of comparing with them those of the Madras, Bombay, and the Poorbeea regiments of the Bengal Army. The latter are decidedly inferior to the former in physique, and almost every soldierly quality. The mistake seems to be in having, after the Mutiny, placed the whole of the armies of the three Presidencies on the same footing as the Punjab Frontier Force, instead of applying what is called the irregular organisation only to those regiments that have a superior class of Native officers. Now for a few words with regard to the Native Army being a career for native gentlemen. To carry this out, we must, in the first place, largely increase the pay of the commissioned ranks. How can we expect to get a native gentleman to enter our Army, as an officer, when his pay at first is only £36 per annum, and (with few exceptions) never exceeds £120 a year? If our Indian finances are in such a state that we cannot afford to pay our native officers better than we do at present, the sooner we give up the idea of the Native Army being a career for native gentlemen, the better. In the second place, to accomplish what Lord Napier and Sir H. Norman wish, we must admit many more natives of good family direct as officers into the Army, and not fill the commissioned ranks with promoted Sepoys, as we do at present. And lastly, make all Native officers retire at a certain age, for in 1853 I recollect being in the same regiment with one who was present at the siege of Seringapatam. They should also be men of more education, as at present many cannot even sign their names."

INFANTRY OFFICERS' DRESS.

"Infantry of the Line" writes:—"Will the Authorities never be brought to see the necessity of a working dress for infantry officers, in fact, for officers generally? One would think that the annual drill seasons at Aldershot and the Curragh would have long ago clearly demonstrated this want, and also the expense that officers are put to by having to wear gold-laced tunics on wet or dusty field-days. It has been suggested several times by officers of experience and standing in the Service, that a tunic without any gold lace (shoulder-straps excepted) should be authorised as a working coat, to be worn on all duties under arms, review-order parades excepted. If this idea was adopted by the powers that be, officers would be saved considerable expense, and would be able to appear either for show or work dressed more suitably than they can at present, and part-worn tunics, that now find their way to the 'old clo' man,' could be worn out on rough work, guards, or barrack-square drills. A propos of shoulder-straps, would not the following method of denoting rank be much more concise than the present regulation on the subject—viz., one star for a 2nd lieutenant, two stars for a lieutenant, and three stars for a captain; a major one crown, a lieutenant-colonel two crowns, and a colonel three crowns? There is another order of dress in the infantry that might be altered with advantage. I refer to that designated as 'mess order.' Almost all those who are condemned to wear it would gladly see the miserable, tawdry gold braid worn on the jacket removed, and either serviceable gold wire cord or plain white edging substituted, as the present braid wears badly, and becomes shabby very soon. Another subject of discontent is that the Infantry is the only branch of the Service forbidden to wear full-dress trousers in mess order. Query,—why, &c.? I have frequently heard it stated throughout that branch of the Service that it would be a very desirable thing that the trousers worn in 'mess order' should be such as to prevent their being worn for ordinary parade purposes."

The Army.

1st Life Guards. Prince William of Prussia and Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, attended by Capt. von Bülow, dined on Tuesday evening with Col. K. Fraser and the officers, at their quarters in the Cavalry Barracks, Windsor.

Royal Horse Guards. The adjutancy is vacant in consequence of the acceptance of promotion by Lieut. M'Alpine, who has carried out the duties of the post uninterruptedly for twenty-two years. Capt. M'Alpine has all along refused promotion, and thus it is that he has been so many times passed over since the abolition of Purchase, for so good and deserving a soldier would not have been subjected to any intentional slight.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards. Capt. Benthall, senior captain in command of the regiment in Transvaal and Natal, seems to have done very well in the march from Pretoria to Pietermaritzburg. He carried his men, without a single crime and without deserter or prisoner, through a country full of temptations, to Durban two days in advance of the date fixed for the departure of the regiment to India in the Orontes. He had 632 men, 630 mules, and 60 waggons to look after. The Bishop of Natal said the regiment on its march "had quite redeemed the character of the British troops in South Africa," and Sir George Colley thanked Capt. Benthall and the officers for the manner in which the march had been accomplished. The following General Order, dated Head-quarters, Pietermaritzburg, Sept. 27, and signed by Col. B. M. Deane, Deputy-Adjt.-Gen., was issued previous to the departure of the regiment from Natal:—"The King's Dragoon Guards being about to leave this station for India, the Major-Gen. commanding, in bidding farewell to the officers and men of this fine regiment, wishes them a prosperous voyage and all good-fortune and honour in the future. Though only a portion of the regiment took part in the final struggle at Ulundi, while most of it was engaged in the less stirring, but equally arduous and important duty of guarding the communications of the Army, yet it contributed in an exceptional degree to the complete success of the campaign, and to the ultimate pacification of Zululand. The capture of Cetewayo by Lieut.-Col. Marten and a patrol of the King's Dragoon Guards, will always be recalled as one of the most successful exploits of the war, of which it was the conclusion, and will serve to associate the name of this regiment with the future peace and prosperity of Natal and Zululand."

1st Royal Dragoons. Capt. Middleton completes his period of service as adjutant of the Fifeshire Light Horse on the 13th inst.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). Lieut. J. C. Hamilton died on Sunday last at the Royal Barracks, Dublin, of typhoid fever, aged 24 years. His remains have been removed to Scotland, for interment. The deceased entered the Army on May 11, 1878, and became lieut. on May 19 last. 2nd Lieut. Fletcher becomes lieut. by the retirement of Lieut. Watkins, 2nd Lieut. Scobell getting his step in succession to Lieut. Hamilton. A correspondent writes:—"I have noticed your remark about the eminent and really gallant service of Lieut. Torrens, Scots Greys, in taking command of the Poolbeg lifeboat; but be assured that he has some reward, for it has, no doubt, been observed by you by this time that he has been voted the silver medal of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. Though a stranger to Lieut. Torrens, I am gratified at seeing you bring the case prominently before the Services. By an accident all the lifeboat's crew were away on duty (in that locality they are Coastguardmen), and see what a scratch crew it was with which Lieut. Torrens 'went to sea,'—four dauntless soldiers each took an oar because an officer took the helm, and all honour to the mariners that joined and placed confidence in the 'sodger' officer. The idea must be thought out, and the sea braved there, to realise what was done. Again, Dr. H. L. Cox, A.M.D., was on the shore, energetically and zealously aiding and stimulating the launch, as well as rendering his able service to the rescued (nearly dead) men. And to make the case complete, the generous corroboration of the Coastguard commander, Capt. Kerr, R.N., on investigating the case, is beyond praise, as showing the entente cordiale between the united Services."

9th Lancers. Lieut. Trower obtains the troop vacant by the retirement of Capt. Shearburn, 2nd Lieut. Bishop becoming lieut.

10th Hussars. Capt. Liddell has vacated his appointment as adjt. of the Cavalry Depôt, Canterbury, which he has held since July, 1876. Lieut. Lord Ogilvy has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

12th Lancers. Lieut. Case obtains the troop vacant by the retirement of Capt. Martin, 2nd Lieut. Crosse becoming lieut. in succession. Lieut. Case has been appointed acting adjt. of the Cavalry Depôt, Canterbury, vice Capt. Liddell, 10th Hussars, pending the appointment of a permanent successor.

19th Hussars. Major Coghill and a detachment of six officers and 120 men have left the Royal Barracks, Dublin, and proceeded to Ballinrobe. The Dublin correspondent of the Standard writes on Tuesday:—"An extraordinary scene, probably without parallel, was witnessed this morning at the Broadstone (Dublin) Terminus of the Midland Great Western Railway. At 10 o'clock last night, when the 19th Hussars were retiring to rest at their quarters in the Island Bridge Barracks, an order to march was conveyed to them. This unexpected order was issued owing to the apprehension of the authorities that an encounter of a very serious character might take place in the West of Ireland, as it was threatened that the Orangemen of the North would carry out their intention of proceeding to reap the harvest on the lands of Capt. Boycott. Four troops of Hussars—one detachment under the command of Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Twentyman, and the other under the command of Capt. Webster, Major Coghill being chief in command of the force—prepared immediately for the road, and by two o'clock they reached the Broadstone Terminus, which presented a spectacle unusual at such an hour. Mr. Ward, traffic manager; Mr. Hornsby, assistant traffic manager; Mr. O'Dowd, and other officers of the Midland Great Western Railway Company, were engaged superintending the arrangements for the despatch of the troops. Trains were being got ready, and engines were being shunted from place to place at the terminus, while the officers and soldiers were engaged embarking their horses. By half-past 3 o'clock this duty had been successfully accomplished. The troops were without baggage, but in heavy order, with rations. At 4 o'clock eight Army Service waggons and four ambulance waggons, with their full complement of men of the two branches of the Service, also arrived at the station, and every nerve was strained to get them placed in the special trains which were being made up as rapidly as they could be freighted. Capt. Murray, D.A.A. and Q.M.G., was at Broadstone superintending the despatch of the troops. Notwithstanding the most active exertions on the part of the Army Service Corps, they had not succeeded in getting all their waggons on to the trucks at half-past 6 o'clock, nearly three hours after the time at which they should have started."

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Major J. C. Auchinlech has been appointed to the C Baty. B Brig. R.H.A., in recognition of his services while commanding a field battery with the Kurum Field Force.

The Standard correspondent at Alexandria telegraphs that "the Khedive has specially ordered the Governor of Suez to compliment Gen. Roberts upon his arrival in his Highness's name."

The Nottingham Journal says:—"An officer of the Indian Staff Corps, writing to his friends in Nottingham, narrates the following incident as having taken place in the neighbourhood of Candahar during the recent Afghan campaign:—'The greatest piece of heroism I have heard of at that fight (the battle of Maiwand) was that of a gunner of the Horse Artillery. He was riding on one of the guns during the retreat when the officer in command ordered him to make way for a wounded man. Well, this man got down without a word and limped into Candahar; when he arrived there it was found that one heel had been shot off. On being questioned why he did not say he was wounded, he replied that the other poor fellow was worse than he was. So you see, to save a comrade, he must have endured most frightful agony during the 40 miles retreat.' The hero of this incident deserves recognition, and as long as pluck and self-sacrifice of this character animates those who serve in the British Army the country will have no reason to fear loss of prestige in the field."

Lieut.-Gen. C. J. Dalton, col.-commandant, died at Percy House, Twickenham Park, on Sunday last. The deceased was the youngest son of the late Rev. James Dalton, rector of Croft, Yorkshire, and was born about the year 1811. He entered the Army as 2nd lieut. in the Royal Artillery in 1829, and became 1st lieut. in 1831. His subsequent promotions were:—Capt. in 1841, brevet major and lieut.-col. in 1854, brevet col. in 1857, col. in 1859. He was promoted lieut.-gen. Oct. 1, 1877, and was appointed col.-commandant April 20, 1877.

Brevet Lieut.-Col. E. J. Tremlett, 7th Brig., arrived home from Mauritius on Wednesday, in command of troops in the troopship Tyne.

A meeting of officers took place at the Royal Artillery Institute, Woolwich, yesterday, under the presidency of Major-Gen. Turner, commandant of the Woolwich District, to hear from Capt. F. Roberts a description of his recently proposed range-finder. The committee of this institution have announced as the subject for the gold medal prize essay of 1881, "Artillery Field Equipment." Candidates are limited to officers on full pay and members of the institution.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The appointment of Major G. R. L. C. Merewether (late Bombay) to the chairmanship of the Bombay Port Trust, as anticipated, has been confirmed. The Times of India says:—"Major Merewether has evidently been selected in the single view of his fitness for the post. And as the Government seem to have made up their minds that the appointment shall always be held by a Royal Engineer, it is impossible to suggest any other officer whose training and capabilities and personal popularity would have made him so welcome to the commercial community. Much of his professional life has been spent in connection with the Harbour Works at Kurrachee, and the technical knowledge he will bring to the assistance of the Trustees will be invaluable. Twenty years ago he was first connected with the Kurrachee Harbour Works, and this connection was kept up, with intervals of other employment, for more than ten years. Since then Major Merewether has served for the most part as Executive Engineer of the Bombay Defences. The work he has done in that capacity must have been very similar to the work he is now about to undertake, and the experience then acquired can now be utilised on an extended scale. For the last few months he has been Executive Engineer in Lower and Central Sind. But his long connection with Bombay was only severed at the end of last year. Major Merewether is an Associate of the Institute of Civil Engineers, and has a high character as a practical man of affairs in addition to his well-known scientific attainments. We notice that he has also been nominated by Government to the seat in the Corporation vacated through the death of Col. Ponsonby Cox, possibly with a view to high municipal honours. But in both offices he succeeds a most popular man, under much more favourable auspices than his predecessor."

Major E. L. Marryatt (late Bombay), deputy consulting engineer for railways, Bombay, has been appointed manager of the Punjab Northern State Railway.

Lieut. H. M. Sinclair has been appointed to act as private secretary to Major-Gen. Sir R. Biddulph, K.C.M.G., High Commissioner of Cyprus.

Lieuts. S. M. Maycock and R. V. Phillpotts have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Grenadier Guards. A highly successful concert was given in Chelsea Barracks, on Friday evening last, by the 1st Batn. The day room was filled by the non-commissioned officers and men, their wives, children, and civilian friends, all evidently enjoying the music, both vocal and instrumental. Among the officers present were Major-Gen. Higginson, C.B., commanding the Home District; Lieut.-Col. Blundell, assist.-adjt.-gen.; Lieut. Dawson, aide-de-camp; Col. Davies, commanding 1st Batn.; Lieut.-Col. Ricardo, 3rd Batn.; Capt. Hatton, Lieut. and Adjt. Ricardo, Lieuts. Ellice, Thistlethwayte, Goulburn, Kennard, D'Aguilar, Scott-Kerr, and Crawley, 1st Batn.

Coldstream Guards. Major and Brevet Col. Hall succeeds to the command of the regiment, vice Col. Lyon-Fremantle, retired. Capt. and Brevet Col. Wigram obtains command of the 2nd Batn., Lieut.-Col. the Hon. E. E. T. Boscawen, late on the Staff in Ireland, being brought on to the establishment from the Supernumerary List, to command the company.

Scots Guards. Prince William of Prussia and Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, attended by Capt. von Bülow and Lieut.-Col. G. G. Gordon, dined with Col. Moncrieff and the officers of the 2nd Batn. at their mess in Victoria Barracks, Windsor, on Friday evening last.

1st, or Royal Scots. Lieut. Altham, 1st Batn., a probationer for the Indian S.C., and 2nd Lieut. Robinson, 2nd Batn., have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

3rd Buffs. Capt. Ternan has been appointed to the 63rd Regiment as pymr., on joining the Pay Department.

4th King's Own. Col. Bray, C.B., had to disembark from H.M.S. Himalaya at Gibraltar on the 28th ult., in consequence of Mrs. Bray having broken her collar-bone by a fall down the saloon-ladder the day before arrival.

5th Fusiliers. Capt. Heathcote and Lieuts. Hill and Hore remain with the 2nd Batn., on promotion. Lieut. Hore has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

8th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Fowler, 2nd Batn., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

10th Regiment. Capt. Little completed his period of service as adjt. of the Royal South Lincoln Militia on Monday. Lieut. Coode is transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn., on promotion.

15th Regiment. Sixteen officers, 302 non-commissioned officers and men, with 23 women, of the 1st Batn., will proceed by rail from Tipperary to Londonderry about the 21st inst., and on the same date, 8 officers and 115 non-commissioned officers and men will proceed to Enniskillen, head-quarters at Londonderry.

20th Regiment. Capt. Headley, 1st Batn., embarks for Malta about the 23rd inst., to join head-quarters on promotion.

21st Fusiliers. Capt. Chapman and Lieut. Gaisford are transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn., on promotion. Lieut. Agnew remains with the 1st Batn. Capt. P H. Delamere, late of the regiment, and more recently Police Magistrate for Bridge Town, died at his residence, Grass Fields, Barbadoes, on the 11th ult.

22nd Regiment. On the arrival of the 15th Regt. in the North of Ireland, the detachment of the 1st Batn. will rejoin head-quarters at Newry from Londonderry, and detachments numbering respectively 3 officers and 60 non-commissioned officers and men, and 4 officers and 90 non-commissioned officers and men, will proceed to Belturbet and Drogheda for the winter.

23rd Fusiliers. Capt. Clough Taylor, 1st Batn., left England on Wednesday, en route to India, in the suite of the Marchioness of Ripon, to take up his duties as aide-de-camp to the Viceroy.

28th Regiment. The colonelcy is vacant by the death of Gen. T. Brooke, which occurred at 13 Mansen Place, Queen's Gate, on the 4th inst., at the age of 64. Gen Brooke entered the Army Oct. 31, 1834; became lieut. July 29, 1836; capt., May 15, 1840; major, April 2, 1850; lieut.-col., May 19, 1854; col., Nov. 28, 1854; major-gen., March 6, 1868; lieut.-gen., March 15, 1877; col. 28th Foot, Sept. 30, 1878; and gen., April 27, 1879.

30th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Moorsom succeeds to the command, vice Lieut.-Col. Stroud, retired; Brevet Major Williamson becoming major, and Lieut. and Adjt. Wright captain. 2nd Lieuts. Gallwey, Morse, and Crowther have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

32nd Light Infantry. The 2nd Batn. 12th will leave Portsmouth on or about the 28th inst. for Jersey, to relieve the regiment, which will proceed at once to Aldershot, and on arrival will occupy G, H, and M Lines, South Camp.

36th Regiment. Capt. Riddell has been appointed to the regiment as pymr., on joining the Pay Department from the 70th Foot.

38th Regiment. Capt. Conor is about to retire from the Service on a gratuity of £1,600, on accepting a civil appointment.

40th Regiment. 2nd Lieuts. Cooper and Phillott have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

48th Regiment. Lieut. Rogers has refused a company in the 105th Regiment, which has been offered to him by the Horse Guards. A correspondent writes:—"I beg to send you the services of the regiment, by which you will see that it has served in England 6 1-12th years out of 66 4-12ths years. This would seem to be a good reason for not sending it to Tipperary on its arrival from India. Services of the 48th (Northamptonshire) Regiment, from the year 1814 to present date: Landed at Cork, from the Peninsula, July 8, 1814; served in Ireland till March 22, 1817, when it embarked at Cork for New South Wales; served in New South Wales till March 5, 1824, and then embarked for India, remaining until Oct. 22, 1834; arrived home March 8, 1835, and served in Great Britain until Aug. 29, 1837, proceeding thence to Ireland, where it did duty until it embarked at Cork for Gibraltar, Sept. 19, 1838; continued at Gibraltar up to Jan. 24, 1844, when it embarked for West Indies, and remained until it was landed at Belfast, March 21, 1847. Served in Ireland till June 4, 1850, and was then transferred to England (June 5, 1850), serving until its embarkation for Corfu, Feb. 19, 1853. Afterwards landed in the Crimea, April 21, 1855, arriving at Malta June 10, 1856, and thence proceeded to Gibraltar, Aug. 6, 1857, where it served until it embarked for India, Sept. 15, 1858, and served in Bengal until it returned to England, April 6, 1865. Landing at Dover, it proceeded to Shorncliffe, and afterwards to Aldershot, where it served until Dec. 10, 1866, when it proceeded to the Curragh, and continued in Ireland until it embarked for Malta, Oct. 3, 1868, where it served until it embarked for India, Feb. 5, 1872, where it has served continuously in the Madras Presidency until it embarked for home, Oct. 25, 1880. Total—abroad, 50 9-12ths years; England, 6 9-12ths years; Ireland, 8 10-12ths years: 66 4-12ths years."

ROYAL MARINES.

At the morning parade at Eastney Barracks on Saturday, the Commandant, Col. Mawbey, in accordance with a notification from the Horse Guards, presented to Lieut. Edmund Cox, of the 2nd North Durham Militia, son of Col. Cox, R.M.A., a medal from the Royal Humane Society for saving the life of a seaman who was upset from a small boat off the beach near Eastney. Mr. Cox had to swim out some distance from the shore without a chance of help, no one being then in sight, and to carry back the drowning man, who was with difficulty restored. In presenting the medal, Col. Mawbey said he had peculiar pleasure in presenting it, as he was acquainted with all the circumstances of the case, and knew how deservedly Mr. Cox had gained the distinction. He (Col. Mawbey) must express his admiration of the feeling of self-sacrifice and sense of duty which prompted Mr. Cox to the gallant act, and without a moment's hesitation to risk his own life for another. He trusted that medal might be the precursor of other decorations gained in his future career, but he was sure none would give him greater pleasure in receiving than that he (the speaker) then presented him with.

The following officers have embarked for a term of service afloat:—R.M.A.—Capt. V. D. Mathias, from head-quarters, to the Superb; Capt. A. Allen, from head-quarters, to the Téméraire; and Lieuts. W. F. Trotter and H. L. Talbot, from head-quarters, to the Superb. R.M.L.I.—Capt. W. F. Campbell, Plymouth Division, from head-quarters, to the Pembroke; Lieut. C. G. Brittan, Chatham Division, from the battalion on service in Ireland, to the Warrior.

The under-mentioned officers have disembarked, having completed a period of service afloat:—R.M.A.—Capt. G. F. Pengelly, from the Téméraire, to head-quarters, on appointment as instructor of gunnery; Capt. A. S. le Quesne, from the Warrior, to head-quarters, on promotion. R.M.L.I.—Capt. W. T. Miller, Portsmouth Division, from the Pembroke, to Ireland, on appointment as paymaster to the battalion on service in that country; Capt. W. P. Wright, Chatham Division, from the Excellent, to head-quarters, on appointment as instructor of gunnery; Lieut. P. Hearle, Plymouth Division, from the Agincourt, to head-quarters, on appointment as assistant-musketry-instructor; Lieut. C. W. R. Kitching, Portsmouth Division, from the Wolverene, to head-quarters.

Medals for long service and good conduct have been awarded to Serjt. C. Gibbs, R.M.A., and Bugler Walter Scurr and Pte. R. W. Drew, R.M.L.I.

An exchange of divisions has been sanctioned between Major J. M. Moody, of the Portsmouth Division, and Major H. H. Strong, of the Plymouth Division.

In future captains of the Royal Marines having seventeen years' service will be permitted to present themselves for examination for the rank of major, although they may not have five years' service in the rank of captain.

56TH REGIMENT. The regiment will proceed to Aldershot on or about the 7th prox., and on arrival will occupy L, M, and O lines, North Camp.

57TH REGIMENT. Capt. Dewar is a candidate for appointment to the Army Pay Department, and is to be attached to the pay office of the 1st Batn. 16th Regt., stationed at Belfast, on probation.

59TH REGIMENT. 2nd Lieut. Pile has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

62ND REGIMENT. 2nd Lieuts. Stock, Lampen, and Perkins have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

63RD REGIMENT. Capt. Ternan has been appointed to the paymastership, on joining the Pay Department from the 3rd Buffs. Lieut. Ranken has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

64TH REGIMENT. The depôt companies were to have left Templemore yesterday for Lichfield, to join the Brigade Depôt now being formed at that place. Lieut. Steele, a probationer for the Indian S.C., attached to 33rd Bengal N.I., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

66TH REGIMENT. The Times' correspondent at Calcutta telegraphs on the 7th inst.:—"The last Government Gazette contains some further despatches regarding the operations in Southern Afghanistan The most interesting of these is a letter dated Oct. 1, from Gen. Primrose to the Adjt.-Gen., giving details of the gallant and determined stand made by the 66th at Maiwand. The total numbers of the regiment that day were, with the fighting line, 15 officers, 364 men; with the baggage guard in the rear, four officers, 63 men; with the smooth-bore battery, one officer, 42 men; sick, 32 men. Of this number, 275 were killed, while two officers and 30 men were wounded. As Gen. Primrose says, they nearly all fell fighting desperately for the honour of their Queen and country. The General adverts at some length to the stand made by 100 men in a garden, which has been already described, and states, on the authority of a colonel of artillery in Ayoub's army, that when only 11 out of the 100 were left, they charged and died with faces to the foe, fighting to the death. Such was the nature of their charge and the grandeur of their bearing that, although the whole of the Ghazis were assembled around, not one dared approach to cut them down. The 11 stood in the open, back to back, firing steadily and truly, every shot telling, surrounded by thousands, and not till the last man was shot down did the Ghazis dare to advance. Gen. Primrose then gives some particulars as to the deaths of various officers. Col. Galbraith was last seen on the nullah bank kneeling on one knee, colour in hand, officers and men rallying round him, and on that spot his body was found. Capt. M'Math, a gallant soldier, fell on the same place; 2nd Lieut. Barr was shot dead over the colours; close by Capts. Garratt and Cullen were killed on the field in front of the nullah, up to the last moment commanding their companies, and giving orders with as much coolness as if on parade. Capt. Roberts was mortally wounded in the garden where the last stand was made. There also fell Lieuts. Rayner, Chute, Oliver, and Honywood. The two last-named officers were seen holding up the colours, the pole of one of which had been shattered to pieces at the rallying points, and Lieut. Honywood was shot while holding the colours high above his head, shouting to the men, 'What shall we do to save this?' Serjt.-Major Cuppage was shot outside the garden while carrying the colours. Many other non-commissioned officers and men died in the attempt to save the colours. There also fell with the band who made the last effort Major Blackwood and Lieuts. Henn and Hinde. The baggage guard, under Capt. Quarry, did excellent service during the retreat; and the detachment under Lieut. Faunce worked the smooth-bore guns well and steadily during the fight."

69TH REGIMENT. Capt. Glendonwyn has been offered and has accepted a Volunteer adjutancy.

70TH REGIMENT. Capt. Riddell has been appointed pymr. of the 36th Regiment, on joining the Pay Department. 2nd Lieut. Dunsterville has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

73RD REGIMENT. Major Farrington, now supernumerary, is to be brought on to the establishment to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Brevet Lieut.-Col. Muriel. Lieut. Carthew-Yorstoun has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

80TH REGIMENT. Capt. Roworth has accepted the adjutancy of the 5th Staffordshire Rifle Volunteers. The Times of Natal of the 10th ult. says:—"We regretted to lose, by last mail, from our midst, Major Creagh, who has performed much valuable service during the recent war. Major Creagh has served both in the 50th and 80th Regiments, and counts as much as 24 years' service. He was with the 80th Regiment in Hong Kong, and subsequently in Singapore, and came with them to South Africa. During the Zulu War, he was sent to Lydenburg to protect that district, and subsequently rejoined the staff, and assisted in the capture of Cetewayo. Major Creagh earned the high approval of Gen. Wood, and was afterwards employed in a civil capacity, in which he performed valuable service, in collecting taxes from native tribes. We may mention also, that he served all through the New Zealand campaign in 1863-6, and when the 80th Regiment was at the Straits, he commanded a company in the expedition to Perak. Major Creagh made many personal friends in this colony, and will long be remembered, not only for his military services, but for the courtesy and urbanity he extended to all who came in contact with him. He carries with him the best wishes of all here for his future prosperity and success."

81ST REGIMENT. 2nd Lieuts. Davidson and Smith have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

84TH REGIMENT. A telegram from Claremorris states that the 84th Regt. arrived there from the Curragh at 10 o'clock on Tuesday morning, and marched for Ballinrobe.

86TH REGIMENT. A correspondent who was present writes:—"The 86th left Dover on the morning of the 1st inst., to embark for Bermuda. The night before every man was present at tattoo,—aye, and sober, too! There was no prowling about the streets in a state of drunkenness, or breaking into shops and stealing goods, merely for the purpose of getting taken up, and so avoid going out! The regiment arrived at the railway-station punctually to time; the men clean, sober, and quiet. So well-ordered was the departure, in fact, that an old railway official volunteered the statement that during his 17 years' service in the railway employ, he had never witnessed such a perfect departure. His experience had been that the utmost noise and confusion existed on these occasions. The General was present, and he was in quite a happy frame of mind. The barracks vacated by the regiment were handed over during the day, and a £5 note will, I am told, more than cover the whole charge for barrack damages. These facts are so creditable that I feel it an act of justice to the officers and men of the 'County Downs' to make them known, which I hope you will enable me to do through the medium of your widely-read columns."

MILITIA.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

YORKSHIRE HUSSARS. The colonelcy is vacant by the death of Lord Wenlock, which took place on Saturday morning at Escrick Park, near York. His lordship had been seriously ill for a few days previous to his decease. About 12 months back he experienced a paralytic attack of mild form, and, although said to have recovered, since then his health has never been re-established. His lordship was born April 21, 1818, and is succeeded in the family honours by his eldest son, the Hon. Capt. Beilby Lawley.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

2ND RENFREW RIFLES. Col. Mure, M.P. for Renfrewshire, died at 2 Hamilton Place, Piccadilly, on Tuesday. He had been seriously ill for some weeks past, and his death was not unexpected. The deceased, who was a son of the late Col. W. Mure, M.P., was born in 1830. He entered the 60th Rifles in 1847, and served with them in the Kaffir war, 1851-3, and with the 79th Highlanders in the Crimea, 1854-5, including the battles of the Alma and Balaklava, and the siege of Sebastopol (Kaffir medal, Crimean medal and three clasps, and Turkish medal). He retired from the Service in 1860 as lieut.-col. of the Scots Fusilier Guards, and has since commanded this battalion.

21ST BENGAL N.I. Surg. E. W. Griffith has been confirmed in the medical charge, vice Surg. W. A. C. Roe.

31ST BENGAL N.I. Col. H. M. Wemyss, commandant, has been granted leave to England for 182 days, on private affairs.

42ND BENGAL N.I. Lieut. H. FitzG. Stevens, wing-officer, has been appointed qrmr., vice Braydon, whose period in the appointment has expired.

3RD PUNJAB INFANTRY. Lieut. H. D. Gerrard has obtained leave to England, on medical certificate, for one year.

3RD BOMBAY LIGHT CAVALRY. Capt. J. F. Willoughby, second squadron-commander, has been granted leave to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

4TH BOMBAY N.I. (RIFLES). Lieut.-Col. G. B. Crispin, second-in-command, has been granted leave to England for eighteen months, on medical certificate.

7TH BOMBAY N.I. Major E. Cunningham, wing-commander (seconded), has been appointed second-in-command, vice Lieut.-Col. A. R. Wilson, retired; and Major A. J. Vibart, wing-commandant, second-in-command, vice Cunningham, seconded, Capt. J. A. Rowlandson succeeding him as wing-commander.

16TH BOMBAY N.I. Lieut. H. W. Seymour, wing-officer, has been appointed qrmr., vice Capt. Watson, whose tenure of the appointment has expired.

19TH BOMBAY N.I. Major R. Westmacott, Bombay S.C., wing-officer, 20th Bombay N.I., has been appointed wing-commander, vice Major Hench, killed in action.

23RD BOMBAY N.I. Lieut. W. St. J. Richardson, wing-officer, has been granted leave to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

27TH BOMBAY N.I. Lieut. A. L. Sinclair has returned to head-quarters from leave in England, and resumed duty as wing-commander.

28TH BOMBAY N.I. Major F. C. Singleton, wing-officer, has been appointed second-in-command, vice Lieut.-Col. W. H. Newport, killed in action.

29TH BOMBAY N.I. Major G. C. Sartorius has returned from leave in England, and resumed duty as wing-commander.

30TH BOMBAY N.I. The Times correspondent at Chaman telegraphs on the 7th inst.:—"Public opinion in Afghanistan was inclined at first to lay the blame of the Maiwand disaster upon the misconduct of the Bombay Sepoys, notably of the regiment known as 'Jacob's Rifles;' but I think the disposition now is to acquit the Sepoys, and to lay the blame upon the commander. It is certain that troops must be far above the ordinary standard to bear without demoralisation three hours' pounding from 30 guns in a stationary and exposed position, and we can only wonder that any commander should have exposed his troops without the gravest necessity to so severe a trial. It seems, however, probable that the fire of Ayoob's guns, though incessant, was only moderately effective. It is now believed that the numbers killed outright while the troops retained their formation were as follow:—1st Grenadiers, the most exposed regiment, 26; 66th and Jacob's Rifles, about six each. The loss chiefly fell upon Blackwood's battery, which afforded, of course, easier mark than the infantry, who were lying down and partially sheltered. The principal loss in infantry occurred during the first part of the retreat. The dead horses found upon the ground almost all belonged to Blackwood's battery, as is shown by the brand upon the hoofs. The cavalry horses found on the battlefield were very few."

34TH BENGAL N.I. Lieut. Willes, a probationer, officiating squadron-officer 17th Bengal Cavalry, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., with effect from June 25, 1879.

THE PALLISER GUN.

We have received from a correspondent the following account of Sir W. Palliser's new gun:—

"The trial this week of the 64-pounder breech-loading gun has been a success. The breech action was admitted to be very simple and strong. The gas-check which, from the nature of gas-checks, must generally be liable to be injured, is, in this gun, always protected from accidental harm; for before the breech of the gun can be opened, this gas-check must be drawn into a stout ring or 'protector,' and it cannot leave this protector until the door of the breech is closed and automatically locked. The gun is fired by means of a lock and a detonator. The lock has a full and half-cock. It cannot be full cocked, and therefore the gun cannot be fired until the breech is screwed quite home. In order to fire, the lock is full cocked, and the trigger pulled with a string. The charge is fired very much in the way an ordinary central-fire, double-barrelled, breech-loading fowling-piece is fired. There is no escape whatever of gas, since there is no vent. After each round the lock was taken out and the nozzle of a steam-hose inserted for about five seconds, the smoke was blown out of the gun, and the bore made perfectly clean. The steam condensed inside the bore and the hard deposit of the powder was at once carried out in a dark stream of water from the muzzle. The gun was not sponged out. The invention is specially valuable for breech-loaders, because, when the breech of a large gun is opened after firing, the powder gases are stifling. The Palliser breech-loading plan was proposed to the late Ordnance Select Committee upwards of 17 years ago. At that time the French Government had only a few cast-iron rifled guns. The French breech-loader, introduced some time afterwards, is somewhat similar to the Palliser, as both guns are closed with a screw plug, which swings away from the breech. In the French gun the thread is interrupted, while it is continuous in the Palliser gun. Sir W. Palliser has," our correspondent says, "now, by dint of a very heavy expenditure of time and money, proved his case in a 3½-ton breech-loader. He claims as a special merit of his invention that it enables all heavy wrought-iron muzzle-loading guns to be converted into breech-loaders at moderate cost. We understand that he is anxious to convert a 38-ton muzzle-loader into a breech-loader, and we trust that in the interest of the Service, and as a matter of fairness, his request will be granted; for there must be some limit to expenses in experiments beyond which it is not reasonable to expect that private individuals could pass."

CHARTALINE BLANKETS,

BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT,

Which are the LIGHTEST, the WARMEST, and the CHEAPEST BLANKETS in the WORLD, and, being portable, are particularly adapted for Military purposes.

Railway wheels have been made from PAPER, so are HENRY'S CHARTALINE BLANKETS.

Price, according to size:—3 ft. by 5 ft., 1s 6d per blanket; 3 ft. 6 in. by 5 ft., 1s 9d do.; 4 ft. by 5 ft., 2s do.; 5 ft. by 5 ft., 2s 6d do.; 5 ft. by 6 ft., 2s 11d do.; 5 ft. by 7 ft., 3s 5d do. They ensure perfect cleanliness and health, and are very durable. Are used as ordinary blankets, and are equal to the warmth of two pairs of woollen. Are sold in three colours, viz., Cream, Scarlet, and Blue.

J. J. Pope, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., L.M., late Staff Surgeon Royal Artillery, is of opinion "that too much prominence cannot be given to Henry's Chartaline Blankets......For bed-clothing they are, indeed, excellent." Can be obtained from all Drapers, &c., throughout the Kingdom. Five blankets forwarded, carriage paid, to any Railway Station in the United Kingdom, on receipt of P.O.O. (or money in Registered Letter)—no stamps—on application to VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.—We cannot insert any more letters on the subject of Volunteer Officers, which we think has been sufficiently ventilated.

D. L. B.—We shall always be glad to hear from you.

QUILLS.—The order is not intended to affect short-service men.

M.—We are indeed much indebted to you for your communication, so interesting to the whole Naval Service.

WAR SERVICES.—You are a little hard upon the Navy, which has so little chance of real, active service. Next week.

N. V.—You will see that we have found space for your enclosure, and thank you for your notes, which will be made use of next week. Always glad to publish anything concerning the welfare of this valuable Naval auxiliary.

H. K.—Letter and enclosure was forwarded to your ship. Hope you have received it by this time, as you certainly should.

CHANNEL SQUADRON.—It is not our fault that we do not give a mail list. If Admiral Hood will give directions for the programme of his movements to be sent to us, we will gladly publish it, in the interest of the three thousand souls serving in the Squadron.

W. R.—Letter received.

SUBALTERN.—Your letter is most offensive in its tone, and is simply a personal attack on one who would be unable to defend himself.

SENEX is advised to read the article again, and he will find that his letter is written under a misapprehension.

CONNAUGHT.—Some such society was formed, but it soon fell through.

NOTICE.—We are obliged to hold over a number of letters in type, owing to the demands on our space. We shall hope, however, to publish the majority of them shortly.

The ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE this week contains four pages extra.

The NAVAL AND MILITARY STATIONS are published by the ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE on the first Saturday in each month.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1880.

WITHOUT any attempt to penetrate the meaning of some allusions to "military Mantilinis" which have appeared in the papers, in notices of the proposed changes in officers' insignia and uniform, we may say, without making any imputation on the writers, that the suggestions in those articles, as they would be understood by most readers, were unfounded. In fact, the changes were not recommended or enforced from above. They rather emanated from the experience of officers recently on active service, who were struck, as all must be in the field, by the absence of distinctive marks of rank on the dress generally worn by officers, in the very circumstances which render prompt recognition of their grades by those engaged with them on duty most desirable and advantageous. After careful inquiry and trial at the War Office of the various devices which were recommended to mark the grades of rank, the Authorities decided that the most efficient and least costly were those which are to be introduced into the Service; and, as far as the question of "expense" is concerned, we believe that the War Office would have introduced larger reforms in lace, &c., on the side of greater economy, but for the dissatisfaction expressed by the regimental officers, who would have benefited by them in a pecuniary sense. Rank is shown well enough on officers' tunics at present by the lace on the sleeves; but it was considered impossible to put gold lace on the sleeves of cloaks, blue frock-coats, and patrol jackets, and as badges on the collar are liable to occultation by the beards which are so largely affected by all but the "imberbis Apollo" of the Service, some other means of making the grades had to be considered. The Naval system of gold rings on the sleeve was thought of, but it was found to be very expensive, and it was rejected on that account. We are not quite sure, however, whether the thin gold lace worn by French officers on capotes, &c., was thought of; but whether it was or not, the Authorities finally decided on the shoulder-strap as the means of escape out of their difficulties, thus adopting the method largely used for a similar purpose in Continental armies. As tunics are gold-laced—officers wish them to be so—it was necessary to have a gold-laced shoulder-strap for tunics, and the cost of the gold strap of the tunic is only 12s. 6d. a pair; but for all other dress the shoulder-strap is of cloth, with the same badges of rank modified, as we shall see, as those hitherto worn on the collar. The crown on the shoulder-strap henceforth marks field-rank, all over the Service. Hitherto the captain and the lieutenant-colonel wore similar badges, and the only visible difference in their uniforms was on the collars and sleeves of their tunics. Now and henceforth the grades will be plain enough, for the shoulder-strap is always to be seen, and for the cloth shoulder-straps the badges now worn elsewhere can be made largely available. There is a change announced which will, we fear, be received with disfavour in the regiments affected by it in the Service, namely, the abolition of the double chevron worn in certain branches of the Service and by certain regiments. It is only fair to say that the reasons for the change possess considerable force. In the first place, the saving to the State, which now owns the clothing of the Army, will amount to many thousands of pounds. We would not accept that reason as all-sufficient, if these double chevrons were connected with special traditions, or assisted in the maintenance of the esprit de corps which we consider so valuable; but in point of fact, these double chevrons "growed," like Topsey, without reference to distinguished or any service at all, and the latest-formed body in the system —the Army Service Corps—is endowed with them. The increasing excellence of the clothing of the Army in all respects—coats, overcoats, pantaloons, boots, &c. —is not effected without heavy expenditure, and the Authorities seek to cut their coats according to their cloth. We wish—pace the Army tailors—that they could also see their way to furnish officers with uniform and necessaries at cost price, and we believe that they will come to it at last. The Germans are held up as models we may admire, but cannot imitate on all points; but it is strange that on those points where we could imitate, we do not follow their example.

The Duke of Cambridge must be glad of the respite he is enjoying at Euston from dinner work at the Horse Guards, and "returning thanks for the Army" at the public banquets, which are so rife just now. His Royal Highness will be away for a week at the Duke of Grafton's, and will have another week's shooting afterwards, but Tuesday's Gazette shows that his absence from home does not interfere with the course of military administration.

We hear that Major-General B. Carey, Deputy Judge-Advocate-General in London, continues to make steady progress towards recovery, but that his absence from England is still likely to be prolonged for some months.

Lieutenant-General Sir C. L. D'Aguilar, K.C.B., becomes a colonel-commandant in the Royal Artillery by the death of Lieutenant-General C. J. Dalton.

A distinguished service reward for the Royal Artillery becomes vacant in consequence of the appointment of Lieutenant-General Sir C. L. D'Aguilar, K.C.B., to be colonel-commandant.

The double Brigade Depôt at Lichfield, which is about being established, will leave only two Brigade Depôts—Shrewsbury and Taunton—unformed. There are, however, no less than five at temporary resting-places,—Sunderland and Berwick-on-Tweed, to be ultimately moved to Newcastle; Fort Elson, Gosport, to Winchester; Fort George, N.B., to Inverness; and Enniskillen to Omagh.

The 1st Battalion 4th Regiment, which went abroad in 1874, and is now in the West Indies, may soon, we think, look for its relief. Both battalions of this regiment have been abroad since 1878; and the completion of this winter's reliefs will leave two pairs of linked battalions at home, viz., the 52nd and 85th, and the 49th and 66th.

The oldest officer in the Army at the present time is believed to be Captain R. Armstrong, half-pay, late 70th Foot, and his grandson, 2nd Lieutenant R. Armstrong, 22nd Foot, son of Colonel W. A. Armstrong, commanding the Tralee Brigade Depôt, is the youngest.

Colonel Lyttelton Annesley, whose appointment as adjutant-general to Bombay we announced some time ago, will leave shortly for the scene of his labours. The delay in his departure was caused by the claims of the Indian Government to fill up the vacancy, but it is a wholesome rule, which we hope to see of invariable application, that the senior officers of the Adjutant-General's Department in India should be Queen's officers, and that those of the Quartermaster-General's Department should belong to the Indian Army. Colonel Annesley's term of service in Whitehall was distinguished by much intelligence and industry, and was associated with some substantial reforms.

Eleven Infantry battalions are required to complete the home establishment, which will be brought up to its full strength on the arrival of the regiments which are now under orders to return, or are on passage from foreign stations, viz.:—2nd Battalion 1st Foot, 1st Battalion 5th Foot, 1st Battalion 6th Foot, 48th Foot, 59th Foot, 2nd Battalion 60th Foot, 66th Foot, 73rd Foot, 85th Foot 92nd Foot, and 2nd Battalion Rifle Brigade. The following stations will, as opportunities offer, be provided with regiments,—viz.:—Aldershot 2 battalions, Cork District 1, Dublin 1, Fleetwood 1, Kilkenny 1, Portsmouth 2, Warley 1, Winchester 1, and Woolwich 1. The return of the 83rd will give us one battalion over and above our proper home complement.

The utmost is being done to press on the completion of the German official account of the Franco-German war, which has been appearing from the Intelligence Department of the Horse Guards for the last three years. The fourteenth and fifteenth sections will appear almost simultaneously, it is hoped.

When we heard from Constantinople, Second Lieutenant E. Vincent, Coldstream Guards, had returned to that capital from Vienna, whence, as we lately announced, he was specially selected to proceed on an important mission. Lieutenant Vincent has rejoined the British Embassy, but shortly returns to England, to resume his regimental duties.

The forthcoming promotion of Colonel Pipon, C.B., B.A., renders vacant the post of purchaser of horses for the royal regiment, one of the many snug berths in that distinguished corps which are so often reserved for those officers possessing the greatest amount of home-service.

The Earl of Rosebery is a very smart little nobleman, and he made some smart little observations at the dinner to the new Governor of Madras, on the distinctions which he said existed between the manner of the Liberals and of the Conservatives in using the Army and the Navy. Without any political bias, we may say that the Navy can scarcely feel proud of its recent uses. From Dulcigno to Cork is a step from one ridiculous to another. Lord Clyde was wont to say that the most loathsome duty he ever had to perform as a soldier was the protection of tithe proctors charged with the eviction of tenants in Ireland for non-payment of tithes, and he often expatiated on the iniquity of employing soldiers on such duties. In the present case, the troops ordered to the West of Ireland are simply a protective force, to put an end to an outrageous system of terrorism. Still, it is not work on which soldiers would willingly be engaged. Mr. Forster, we are told, wanted to employ the soldiery in small detachments to co-operate with the police; but Colonel Lyons brought to his notice a memo. by Lord Strathnairn, in which conclusive reasons were given against the employment of troops in small bodies. And if required to act, soldiers cannot use buckshot. As a correspondent points out in our regimental columns, the 48th Regiment would appear to be particularly unfortunate in being sent to Ireland on its arrival from India. In the last 66 years the regiment has spent 50 9-12ths years abroad, 8 10-12ths years in Ireland, and but 6 9-12ths years in England. In face of these figures, it might reasonably have expected to have taken over an English station.

It is generally rumoured in military circles, and we believe with truth, that the Marquis of Ripon and the majority of the Indian Council are in favour of the retention of Candahar, on both political and military grounds; but it is understood that the Imperial Government has decided on withdrawing from it as soon as possible, consistently with engagements.

The salary of Mr. Roger Goldsworthy, C.M.G., late 9th Lancers,—Sir John Glover's well-known Lieutenant in the Volta expedition,—the newly-appointed Administrator of St. Lucia, is to be increased from April 1 next, the Colonial Office desiring to show in a substantial manner its appreciation of this gentleman's services. The pay of the appointment is at present £800 per annum, but it will in future be £1,000. Mr. Goldsworthy is now in England, enjoying a short rest, prior to proceeding out to take up his duties.

When the late Lord Mayor, in his Mansion House speech, described the Army as "fit to go anywhere, and do anything," it is presumed he was alluding to the Army of the future. As an instance of readiness, it would considerably astonish his Lordship, were he to know that at the moment of his delivering his speech a regiment at one of our camps of instruction had practically ceased to exist. This regiment, if the information is to be relied upon—and there is no reason to doubt it—could not at this moment place 150 men in line of battle.

We learn by last mail from Dominica that Captain A. C. Alexander, R.E., who was sent out to report on the nature of the recent floods in St. Kitt's, and if possible to devise some means to prevent their recurrence, has been spending some time in the island, in order to determine what steps should be taken to resist the encroachments of the Roseau River, which forms the eastern and northern boundaries of the town of Roseau, a magnificent stream of the purest water during fine weather, but after heavy rains rising to a great height. On September 9, 1806, the river "came down" so high that the town was submerged, many houses were washed out to sea, and there was considerable loss of life. Again, in December, 1847, the town was submerged, and the river's banks torn away to a great extent. Of late years the encroachments of the river have given rise to much alarm, and now that one of the five bridges is threatened, the authorities have been induced to take action in the matter.

Rarely has anything more horrible appeared in print than the accounts in the Pall Mall Gazette—of all papers—of the outrages in Epirus and Macedonia by Greek bandits. No Bulgarian atrocity we ever heard or read of equals some of the stories.

Why should the Pall Mall Gazette abuse the Sultan of Turkey because Mr. Pender, M.P. for the Wick Burghs, telegraphed home the news that he had had an interview of an hour and a half's duration with the unfortunate Caliph, at which Mr. Pender was convinced of the sincerity of his Majesty in his desire to effect reforms in Turkey? We were irresistibly reminded of the conversation in Eöthen between the Pasha and the English visitor, when we read the telegram. Mr. Pender only speaks Scotch, and the Sultan only speaks Turkish and Persian, and a French which Mr. Pender cannot understand, so the interpreter or dragoman must have had a good deal of quiet fun during the interview.

In the face of the terrible pauperisation of the people of India, in the face of the dreadful necessity imposed on the Government of India to have recourse to the most iniquitous source of revenue which ever disgraced any country in the world, Manchester is clamouring to be allowed to sweep away the traces not only of protection to the Indian manufacturer, but of protection of the Indian peasant against "shoddy." We are glad to see that Major Baring, who is a soldier and a gentleman, made a fair official fight on behalf of the people of India.

The accounts from "the seat of war" at Ballinrobe are not encouraging, to say the least of it, as regards the completeness of our military preparations. In fact, if the accounts be true, the "management" of the expedition was simply disgraceful. "The Commissariat Department utterly broke down." But did the Department get a fair chance or proper warning? "The men of the 84th, after marching 16 or 17 miles over a bad road, from Claremorris to Ballinrobe, which they reached at night, found neither tents nor shelter, and had had no food since the previous midnight,"—so says the report; and it goes on to state that the men had to wander, most of them, about the streets of the filthy little town all Tuesday night. "Whom shall we hang?"

We understand that great dissatisfaction has been expressed by many of the Ordnance Store officers at the announcement in the Gazette of the 29th inst.

Lieutenant-General J. E. Goodwyn, C.B., is named for the regimental colonelcy vacant by the death of General T. Brooke, colonel of the 28th Regiment.

The following promotions take place in the Royal Artillery, in consequence of the death of Lieutenant-General C. J. Dalton, colonel-commandant, with effect from the 8th inst., viz.:—Major-General Sir F. A. Campbell, K.C.B., Director of Artillery and Stores, becomes lieutenant-general, and Colonel J. F. Pennycuick, C.B., a major-general. The following promotions will be made in the regiment, with effect from the 13th inst., vice General Sir Edward Warde, K.C.B., about to be placed on the Retired List, viz.:—Lieutenant-General J. H. Francklyn, C.B., colonel-commandant-to be General; Major-General J. Turner, C.B., commanding the Woolwich District, to be lieutenant-general; and Colonel P. G. Pipon, C.B., to be major-general.

We are requested to state that 40 vacancies will be offered for competition at the examination for entrance to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, to be held this month.

We have received a letter from a Quartermaster full of bitterness at the manner in which their claims continue to be, year after year, overlooked. Every practical soldier knows that, both in peace and war, especially in the latter, the comfort and efficiency of a regiment depends in great measure on the quartermaster. He is the most hard-worked officer, whether regimental or departmental, in the Service; yet, no one receives less consideration from the Authorities. He may serve thirty years as a quartermaster, yet he still enjoys nothing more than the rank of lieutenant, for he only obtains the honorary rank of captain on retirement. This is a grievance, the remedying of which would cost nothing. The pay is also insufficient, and a very small sum would put that to rights. What the quartermaster, however, complains of chiefly is that once a quartermaster he has absolutely no professional future. Formerly he had a paymastership to look forward to, and his training specially fitted him for the appointment; now he has no chance of obtaining this prize. The paymaster has lighter work than the quartermaster. Why, then, should the former have higher pay and higher rank than the latter? The above remarks apply with even greater force to riding-masters, for they are combatant officers, and have the training in equitation of every officer and man in the regiment. Sometimes his colonel has gone through his hands. We earnestly hope that Mr. Childers will bethink him of some way of improving the position of these meritorious and valuable, but friendless, classes of officers.

The Navy.

APPOINTMENTS.

Commander—George Usborne, to the Hector, for service in the Coastguard at Bognor, vice Keats, whose period of service has expired.

Lieutenants—Philip H. Rickman and Edmund Kempe, to the Duncan.

Engineer—Thomas Pringle, to the Pembroke, additional, for service in the Constance.

Clerks—John Riches, from the Duke of Wellington, additional, to the Superb; George F. Miall, from the Duke of Wellington, additional, to the Achilles; George Whitcroft, from the Achilles, to the Northumberland.

Assistant-Clerks—Edward H. Innes, from the Superb, to the Alexandra; Edward H. Eldred, from the Duke of Wellington, to the Alexandra; Charles E. Rotherham, from the Duncan, to the Alexandra.

Carpenters—Alfred Gillham, to the Asia, vice Phillips; John W. Kelly, to the Nankin, additional, for service in the Collingwood.

ACHILLES, Capt. E. H. Kelly, left Devonport on Wednesday for Queenstown.

ALEXANDRA, Capt. Lord Walter Kerr, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir B. Seymour, has proceeded to Malta, the Invincible taking her place in the demonstrative fleet. A fatal accident has occurred to a seaman named Frederick Shirtliff, aged 19, belonging to the Alexandra, when engaged, with others, in sending down top-gallant-yards. The men on the yard rope let go too quickly, and the yard came down by the run. Shirtliff was struck on the head and thrown with great force against an iron railing, and another seaman had his hand jammed. Shirtliff never recovered consciousness, but died within two hours of the mishap. He was interred in the cemetery at Castelnuovo, and there were present the Commander-in-Chief, the French admiral, and several other foreign officers, and a party of seamen from each ship, with the band of the Alexandra.

ALGERINE was launched from the shipbuilding works of Messrs. Harland and Wolff, Queen's Island, Belfast, on Saturday. Her length is 157 ft. and her breadth of beam 29 ft. 6 in. The naming ceremony was performed by Miss Lee (daughter of Mr. Lee, who is to act as chief engineer on board). This is the second gunboat constructed in Belfast.

ANTELOPE, Lieut.-Com. Hon. Walter Hylton Jolliffe, left Therapia on Nov. 3, with the Right Hon. G. J. Goschen and suite on board, for Constantinople, where the Embassy have taken up their winter quarters at the Pera Embassy. The Antelope will probably proceed to Malta about the end of this month, for her annual refit, docking, &c.

BOADICEA, Comdre. Richards, C.B., was at Simon's Bay on Oct. 18. She had arrived from Mossel Bay, Port Natal, and Algoa Bay on Oct. 15, and will visit St. Paul de Loando, Congo, and Kabenda, thence to St. Helena, to arrive about Dec. 25; to Ascension, to arrive about Jan. 12; and to Sierra Leone, to arrive about Feb. 10; proceeding to Gambia, Senegal, and Cape de Verdes, and visiting the Bights on her return.

CHARYBDIS, Capt. C. F. Hotham, was paid off at Devonport on Tuesday morning, under the superintendence of Capt. W. B. Grant, and the crew were granted leave of absence. The Charybdis has been taken into Keyham North Basin to day for inspection of boilers and engines, and for any repair that may be absolutely necessary.

DIDO, Capt. Domvile, will be at Ascension to meet the Commodore by Jan. 10, and will proceed thence to the Cape of Good Hope to await his return.

DREADNOUGHT. A contrivance was tried on board the Dreadnought at Portsmouth on Tuesday, by which an additional precaution is provided against the chance of a gun being doubly charged after a missfire, as happened on board the sister-ship Thunderer. It might have been supposed that with a recoil of from 4 ft. to 5 ft. after each round from the 38-ton gun, there could have been no chance of a mistake arising, the absence of recoil being a sufficient proof in itself that the gun had not been discharged. But with the hand of the gunner upon the hydraulic lever which causes the gun to be run in for reloading, it is feared that, in the excitement of practice, he might, on the order to "fire" being given, mechanically use the water-power to bring the gun in without waiting for the recoil to exhaust itself; and even when all goes well the premature movement of the lever would add to the force of the recoil. The new contrivance is exceedingly simple, and consists merely of a locking arrangement by which the gun-carriage, when in the firing position, prevents the hydraulic lever being used, and the fact of the lever being immovable will afford convincing proof of a missfire. On the gun being fired the carriage runs back and releases, or trips, the lever, a recoil of 18 in. being sufficient for the purpose. The trial proved very satisfactory. The guns were not fired, the necessary movements being performed by the hydraulic presses. As an illustration that there cannot be too many precautions against mistakes in turret-ships, it may be mentioned that an accident occurred on board the Dreadnought a short time ago. It was known that the Duke of Cambridge intended visiting the ship during the afternoon, and a gun detachment were being put through a little drill, in readiness for the visit of his Royal Highness. The turret was slowly rotated to the loading position, and the charge having been brought from below, the cartridge, the projectile, and the trolley were raised to the muzzle of the gun by means of the hydraulic lift, previous to being rammed home. At this moment, before the lift had been removed, the turret was set in motion, and coming into collision with the lift, the latter was much strained, while the trolley was seriously injured, and other parts of the gear received damage. No one, however, was hurt. The Dreadnought is being prepared for the reception of a second-class torpedo-boat, which will be carried on the hurricane deck, in the place of her second 37-ft. steam pinnace. In consequence of the additional weight, her derrick is being replaced by a steel one, while the mast which carries it is being strengthened by tubes and additional stays. She is also to be fitted with electric firing-gear, after which she will be ready for sea.—Times.

FANTÔME, Com. Karslake, sailed for a cruise off the north coast of Jamaica on Oct 21. She is ordered to Bermuda by the Commander-in-Chief.

FAWN, Capt. W. J. L. Wharton, is still at Therapia, detained by the Admiralty for some unaccountable reason, her surveying duties having been completed some weeks ago. Her detention is supposed to be due to the Dulcigno and Greek questions not having been yet settled; but what good the Fawn could be is hard to tell, for she cannot fight, or even run away, her full speed being seven knots. This ship was commissioned on June 1, 1876, and had very trying times on the coast of Zanzibar and Red Sea. Having been longer in commission than any ship afloat, it seems hard she should be detained doing nothing. The Fawn will eventually be recommissioned at Malta; Lieuts. White and Keary have volunteered for the new commission.

GARNET, Capt. Loftus F. Jones, arrived off Monte Video during the night of Oct. 5, unfortunately without a clean bill of health, for some of the crew had been down with yellow-fever. The port authorities ordered her off forthwith to go through a period of quarantine, and the Minister of War, Col. Santos, has placed one of his small steamers at the disposal of Capt. Jones, to go to and fro, and has given orders to all his officials to do their utmost to make things comfortable. It is to be hoped that this ship, which has had the fever twice, will be ordered to England, and replaced by a more healthy vessel, although we are happy to be able to state that all the cases are doing well, and no fears are entertained of the disease spreading. The Swallow, Com. Borlase Warren, was summoned from Colonia by telegraph, and is now at Monte Video with the Forward, Com. Brickdale.—Buenos Ayres Standard.

GRIFFON, Com. Boardman, was at Antigua on Oct. 22, and would convey the President of St. Kitt's to Anguilla on Nov. 7.

HIMALAYA, Capt. H. W. Brent, has arrived at Devonport to be taken into Keyham to make good defects, and is ordered to be ready to leave Portsmouth on the 25th inst. with supernumeraries for the Mediterranean station. At Malta she will receive from the Serapis troops and supernumeraries for England, and also embark at Gibraltar on her passage home a battalion of the Rifle Brigade for Portsmouth.

HUMBER, Com. J. L. Way, arrived at Madeira from England on the 10th inst., and was to leave for Sierra Leone, Ascension, and the Cape on the 11th inst.

MALABAR, Capt. J. F. Grant, arrived at Aden on the 12th inst., and leaves forthwith for England.

MINOTAUR, Capt. H. Rawson, flagship of Vice-Admiral Arthur W. Hood, C.B., commanding the Channel Squadron, which has undergone extensive repairs at Portsmouth, steamed out of harbour and anchored at Spithead on Monday to take in powder preparatory to sailing. When off the Eddystone she was joined by the Achilles, Northumberland, and Agincourt, and proceeded to Queenstown, where, however, it is not expected that the Squadron will make a long stay, although it will, according to present arrangements, be absent from England until March.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Capt. G. H. Wratislaw, left Devonport on Wednesday for Queenstown.

PENGUIN, Com. A. C. Paget, was to leave Coquimbo to arrive at Tahiti by Nov. 20.

PHŒNIX, Com. H. H. Grenfell, sailed from Jamaica for a cruise to Cayman Islands, British Honduras, &c., on Oct. 11, and will return by Dec. 1.

PIONEER, Lieut.-Com. Carre, was to leave Simon's Bay with the Commodore, and will be stationed on the South Sub-Division.

RALEIGH, Capt. C. Jago. The Perseverance, tug, despatched from Devonport late on Thursday last week in search of a reported disabled vessel in the Channel, said to be the Raleigh, returned to Devonport, and reports having cruised up and down the coast without having met with a single disabled vessel, nor could any information be obtained from passing ships of a vessel answering to the description given. The Raleigh is on her passage home from the Australian station. She has on board the paid-off crews of the Wolverene, Alacrity, Beagle, Conflict, Renard, and Sandfly. According to latest advices, she arrived at St. Vincent on Sunday.

RAMBLER, Com. Hon. A. C. Littleton. A correspondent at Sheerness writes that a very discontented spirit has become manifest among the crew of the Rambler during the few weeks she has been in commission, and several desertions have taken place. On Wednesday, Jacob Lamb, ordinary seaman, was tried by court-martial for refusing to do duty. He pleaded guilty, and stated that the tyranny he had been subjected to was unbearable, and he preferred prison to serving in the ship. He had two years' imprisonment awarded him, with dismissal from the Service at its expiration. On Saturday, two other ordinary seamen, named R. J. Briton and T. R. H. J. Nicholls, were brought before a court-martial, charged with taking the dingy and improperly leaving the ship. The prisoners pleaded guilty, and complained that they had been kept in irons upon the upper deck all the time they had been under arrest, and at night had had to sleep in irons under the topgallant forecastle in their hammocks, the irons being triced up over their hammocks. The court sentenced them to be imprisoned for eighteen months with hard labour, and forwarded their complaint to the Judge-Advocate, endorsed that, in the opinion of the Court, the prisoners had not been properly treated while in custody in the ship, nor according to the custom of the Service.—Western Morning News. The Rambler left Sheerness on Tuesday for Plymouth, en route to the West Coast of Africa.

SPARROWHAWK, Lieut. A. Carpenter, attached to the Urgent, had a bad time of it during the hurricane which recently swept over Jamaica doing such damage, and but for the readiness in emergency displayed by those on board, she would probably have lost her place on the Navy List.—Hampshire Telegraph.

TAMAR, Capt. Royse, arrived at Jamaica from Barbadoes on the 10th inst., and sails for Bermuda to-day.

TENEDOS, Capt. Adeane, was at Barbadoes up to Oct. 29. She would convey Governor of Barbadoes to St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Grenada, and Tobago. She is ordered to Bermuda by the Commander-in-Chief.

TORCH, Com. W. H. C. Selby, left Therapia on Nov. 4 for Constantinople, and is now moored off that place. This vessel will be relieved by the Bittern early in December, when the Torch will proceed to the coast of Syria, relieving the Rapid.

TURQUOISE, Capt. Medlycott, is expected at Coquimbo from a cruise among the islands by the end of November.

TYNE, Com. J. E. Stokes, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Tuesday evening with the old crew of the London from Zanzibar, and various drafts, invalids, time-expired men, &c. After discharging men for Devonport, the Tyne proceeded to Portsmouth to land her troops, supernumeraries, &c.

VALOROUS, Capt. G. D. Morant, left Devonport on Saturday for Sheerness to embark a navigating party for the Ajax at Pembroke, and will accompany the Ajax from Pembroke to Chatham.

The staff of engineer officers at the training school for engineer students at Portsmouth has been reduced, by the appointment of one of these officers to other employment. A request was made that he might be replaced, but their Lordships ruled that it was unnecessary, and that one chief engineer and two engineers were ample to carry out the duties, with no more than 150 students.

Notwithstanding the large sum recently expended in refitting the Enchantress, it is understood that their Lordships are so thoroughly dissatisfied with her on account of her unseaworthiness, that they propose building a new yacht, 30 ft. longer, with 7 ft. more beam, and which will be propelled by a screw, instead of paddles. In proceeding from Plymouth to Pembroke with the Lords of the Admiralty on board, she encountered some heavy weather, and took in large volumes of water, both fore and aft. The new yacht will be built at Pembroke.

The Admiralty are far from satisfied with their late experiment of offering a premium, as high as £200, for every quarter-knot realised by second-class torpedo boats beyond the contract speed of 15 knots an hour, and as the Portsmouth engineers have reported strongly against the system of obtaining fancy speeds by exceptional devices, the practice will probably be abandoned. Indeed, as the craft are constantly breaking down under the very great pressure to which their machinery is subjected during the trials, the Admiralty have determined to insist upon a three hours' continuous steaming before acceptance, instead of the customary runs upon the measured mile, and the new boats which are to be added to the torpedo flotilla are to be subjected to the new ordeal on the Thames.

During Tuesday night a fire broke out on board the reformatory ship Clarence, lying in the Mersey, off Rock Ferry. The vessel took in a quantity of coals on Tuesday, and some time afterwards smoke was observed issuing from the bunkers. An alarm was raised, and the Rock Ferry steamers Wasp and Fairy Queen were soon alongside, while a boat from H.M.S. Defence put off to render assistance. The crew of the Wasp played a strong stream of water on the fire, and, aided by the appliances in the Clarence, the flames were ultimately subdued. There were nearly three hundred boys on board the vessel at the time, and preparations were made to have them transferred to one of the Ferry steamers, but fortunately the danger, which at first was so imminent, passed away, and this step was not necessary. The discipline of the lads is stated to have been very good.

A correspondent, writing to a Portsmouth contemporary, says:—"Turning over the pages of the Navy List, I find, under the head 'Chief Inspectors of Machinery,' not one of that rank, but a list of engineers who have passed through the special course of training at the Royal School of Naval Architecture. There are now nearly forty of this branch who have thus distinguished themselves, but I fail to see why they should have been placed on a special list any more than torpedo lieutenants. It would be much more to the purpose if a special distinguishing mark, say the letter 'A,' were placed against the names of these engineer officers on the seniority list, in the same manner as is done with other ranks. The Detached Squadron was quite detached enough in its departure from these shores, and even the passage to Vigo was made independently, a general parting of company taking place, and the flag-ship being lost in a fog. There is, therefore, good reason why the Editor of the Navy List should not add to the detached nature of Lord Clanwilliam's command, by showing the Tourmaline as being 'ordered home' at page 189 of the List."

THE FIRST LORD ON THE NAVY.

The speech of Lord Northbrook at the Lord Mayor's banquet on the 9th was carefully excluded from the columns of the Times, in the belief, perhaps, that the majority of its readers—like the people of Sheffield—can have no great interest in the British Navy. The Service will, however, appreciate the remarks of the Earl of Northbrook, who said:—"On behalf of her Majesty's Navy, I have the honour to return to this distinguished company their best thanks for the honour that they have done them to-night. I can assure you, my lord, that at no former time has the discipline of her Majesty's Fleet, at home or abroad, been in a more satisfactory condition, and the officers of her Majesty's Navy—gallant and high-spirited as they have always been—are at the present time, as I can testify, most anxious to devote all their energies to the acquirement of those scientific qualifications which at the present time, in the present condition of naval warfare, are indispensable. The officers of her Majesty's Navy have duties to perform of all kinds in all parts of the world, and they have never failed in performing those duties to the satisfaction of their Sovereign and their country. I do not think that I should be guilty of any indiscretion if I told you that a few days ago the Emperor of Austria, in communicating with the British Ambassador at Vienna, expressed his great gratification at the harmony and good-feeling which prevailed among the officers of the Allied fleets during the time they had been in Austrian waters. I am glad of the opportunity of saying that I believe that much of that harmony and that good-feeling has been due to the tact of Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, who, as senior officer of this force, has been charged with the command of the Allied squadron, and I am sure that I shall be only representing the feelings of Sir Beauchamp Seymour when I say that he has been greatly indebted to the officers in command of the squadrons of the Allied Powers with whom he has been associated. I must observe, with regard to the Royal Marines—no small portion of the Naval strength of this country—that I was greatly gratified the other day at receiving from no less an authority than the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief the expression of his opinion that nothing can exceed the tone and efficiency of what he was pleased to call 'that splendid force.' My Lord, it is a proud thing to stand in this assembly, holding an office which enables a man to return thanks for the British Navy, and I can assure your Lordship that the present Board of Admiralty feel deeply the responsibility which rests upon them at the present time, when constant alterations are being made in the construction of ships, and when day by day improvements in our artillery are produced which render considerable changes necessary for maintaining, as it should be maintained—having regard always to due economy—the efficiency of her Majesty's Navy."

NAVAL AND MARINE ENGINEERING.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

An interesting exhibition of Naval and Marine Engineering has been opened in the Corporation Galleries, Glasgow. It contains a full collection of models, machines, and appliances connected with Naval architecture, marine engineering, and navigation, and it cannot fail to be productive of the best results. Several of the models—such as those of the Livadia, the City of Liverpool, the Glenartney, and the Scotia—are large and beautiful; whilst the collections sent by the Lords of the Admiralty and the Science and Art Department are most interesting. The collection of British and foreign war-vessels begins with the Great Harry, the first ship built for the English Royal Navy, and comprises an historical series of models from that period till the present day. Of fighting ships of the last century we have models of the Royal George, 2,041 tons, sunk at Spithead in 1782; the Victory, which is still used as the admiral's flagship at Portsmouth; and the ill-fated Terror, whose timbers lie in those northern regions whither she conveyed Sir John Franklin's expedition, but from whence neither ship nor men ever returned. Then we have models of the Eurydice, which capsized in a squall off the Isle of Wight; of the Captain, which sank at sea with all hands in 1870; and the Atalanta, whose return from Bermuda last year was looked forward to in vain for so many months. Of our modern ironclads, there are models of the Glatton, the Monarch, and the Devastation, and also of Admiral Popoff's circular ironclad, the Popoff-Novgorod. Private firms also contribute models of British and foreign war-ships built by them, some of which are very curious and interesting, notably, the Melampus frigate, built for the late Mr. John Scott by French prisoners-of-war confined at Barnstable, and the steam-frigate Greenock, one of the first iron frigates built by the same firm for the British Government. Messrs. Laird and Co. contribute, amongst others, models of an armour-clad twin-screw ram, and two monitors for coast defence, built for the Dutch Government. Messrs. Napier and Co. send half-models of the Black Prince, Hector, Northampton, and Hotspur, and of three new cruisers, at present building for the Admiralty, named respectively the Leander, the Phaeton, and the Arethusa. Messrs. John Elder and Co. send half-models of the Hydra, twin-screw ironclad turret, and the Nelson, twin-screw ironclad. Messrs. Hanna, Donald, and Wilson send sections of two steel torpedo-boats, one for the English and one for the Greek Government, while Palmer's shipbuilding Company send whole models of the troopship Jumna and H.M.S. Medina. The mercantile navy is still more strongly represented. In the description of sailing-vessels, the exhibition contains some very beautiful models, not only of the famous type of Aberdeen clippers, but also of the more modern class of four-masted ships, giving a large area of canvas without going to an extreme height; but it is in the steamships—the large ocean liners—that the representations are most numerous. In paddles, we have every description, from the Comet steamer, built in 1811, to the Columba, the crack type of paddle-steamers of the present day; and in screw-steamers, the models of the P. and O. steamer Clyde, the Guion steamer Arizona, the Cunard liner Servia, and the Allan liner Parisian, show the enormous advances which shipbuilders of the present day have made in their construction and perfection, the tendency being more and more to construct vessels of larger dimensions, the Servia, at present being built for the Cunard line, having a capacity of 8,500 tons. Yachts are also numerously represented, and great interest is shown in the fine models of the Vanduasa and other crack crafts of this description. Altogether, the exhibition is a most interesting one; and coming, as it does, at a time when we are in a state of transition, owing to the large introduction of steel in the construction of ships, must prove interesting and instructive to all who remember with pride England's foremost position in the world in the great industry of iron shipbuilding.

THE BRISTOL R.N. ARTILLERY VOLUNTEERS.

The annual distribution of prizes to the members of the above corps took place on Saturday, on board H.M.S. Dædalus. The Rev. Canon Girdlestone (honorary chaplain) presented the prizes, and there were also present Capts. Gooch and Hunt, R.N., Com. Roberts, R.N., Dr. Evans, R.N., Sub-Lieut. G. M. Chute, R.N.A.V., and Col. Plant, Volunteer Engineers. Capt. Gooch gave a slight sketch of the present position of the corps. The number of efficients was nearly the same as at that time last year; but the numbers on paper were somewhat less—in other words, the fighting condition—if he could properly use such an aggressive expression with reference to a purely defensive association—was much the same. The financial affairs of the brigade were in a satisfactory state. They did not receive a capitation grant, and were therefore heavily handicapped, for the many vacancies that, in a body constituted like theirs, must inevitably occur in twelve months were difficult to fill up in the face of their quite unavoidable entrance-fee. He had gleams of hope, however, that the capitation grant was not far off. When it was given he had no doubt that a corps of Naval Volunteers would spring up at all our large seaports, and that the force would become an important factor in our national defences. The prize list for this year did not call for any special remark, with the exception of the competition for the valuable challenge cup so kindly given by Canon Girdlestone for the best attendance at drill. The competition for that cup had been so close and keen—four men running something very like a dead-heat for it—that one regretted there were not four cups to give away instead of one. A strong detachment of the brigade, under the orders of Sub-Lieut. G. M. Chute, embarked last August on board H.M.S. Tay for a week's heavy gun-drill practice in the Channel. The commander of the Tay made a most favourable official report of the efficiency of the Bristol Volunteers at heavy gun-drill and at target practice. The gunboat steamed round the targets at distances beginning at 600 yards and increasing to 2,300 yards, the practice being very good. The report also spoke of the creditable appearance of the Bristol Volunteers. They were in hopes that that gunboat cruise would have led to a heavy-gun competition between the Liverpool Brigade and themselves. One was arranged to have taken place on board her Majesty's ship Eagle at Liverpool, and the Bristol men were to have been taken round in the Tay, when her engines broke down, and so the competition fell through, much to the disappointment of both brigades. They were looking forward to an inter-brigade competition, to take place here next year, between London, Liverpool, and Bristol. He thanked the ladies and gentlemen for their attendance. The Rev. Canon Girdlestone said he was extremely glad to avail himself of any opportunity that offered to meet the members of the corps, particularly when the office was so pleasant as that which devolved on him that evening. When he looked at the very pretty prizes, he was tempted to break the tenth commandment, and wish that he was to be a receiver instead of a distributor. There was one prize which he could not help offering a few words upon specifically, and that was the prize which he gave. He particularly selected that it should be given for punctuality and regularity of attendance at drill. The speaker impressed upon his hearers the great importance of punctuality, for want of punctuality in war might not unfrequently be the cause of a loss of a battle or engagement. Next to punctuality was discipline. There was nothing so valuable to them as defenders of their country as discipline. It had a most valuable result on the individual character of a man. It taught him to be self-denying, to think of others more than of himself, and to obey orders; in short, he did not think there were anything which tended to make a man a man more than thorough good discipline. Those were the feelings which actuated him in giving the prize. He expressed the pleasure he felt at seeing the corps at the Cathedral a few Sundays ago, and the devotional feeling which was manifest amongst the members, and that was the result of discipline. As long as he was a canon of the Cathedral, it would always give him great pleasure to have one Sunday during his term of residence chosen for the corps to attend the Cathedral. The rev. canon then distributed the prizes, and having done so he was accorded a hearty vote of thanks.—Bristol Times.

A HEALTHY TRIM versus SUPERFLUOUS FAT.—ENO'S FRUIT SALT acts as simply, yet just as powerfully, on the animal system, as sunshine does on the vegetable world. It has a natural action on the organs of digestion, absorption, circulation, respiration, secretion, and excretion, and thus removes and hinders (by natural means) the unnatural and dangerous accumulation of Fat. It keeps the body in healthy TRIM, by preserving and restoring health. Instead of being lowering to the system, this preparation is in the highest degree invigorating. It supplies the want of ripe fruit, so essential to animal economy, and may be taken as an invigorating and cooling draught under any circumstances from infancy to old age, and may be continued for any length of time, and looked upon as being PURE FRUIT SALT, the product of ripe fruit. It is impossible to overstate its value; on that account, no household ought to be without it, for by its use many disastrous results may be entirely prevented. In the nursery, it is beyond praise.—Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

A CONVERTIBLE CRUISER.

The Parisian, the latest addition to the Allan Line, has been launched from Messrs. Napier's yard at Govan. Her dimensions are as follows:—Length of keel, 446 ft.; breadth of beam, 46 ft.; depth of hold, 36 ft. 3 in.; displacement, 10,000 tons, gives register tonnage 5,500 tons. The new vessel is built of steel, and combines all the latest improvements in naval architecture, and carries Admiralty cement in the bottom—a novelty in this class of ship, by which about 100 tons is added to her dead-weight carrying capacity. Her owners, having kept before them the possibility of the Admiralty in times of war wishing to utilise her for troop-carrying or fast cruising, have fulfilled all the Government requirements in such cases. Ten water-tight bulkheads have been, therefore, fitted, and the engine and boiler casings and coal bunkers have been made watertight. Her great size and speed, her storage of fuel capacity, which would enable her to make a long voyage without a stoppage, would render her a valuable addition to our transport service in war, whilst with her double bottom, filled with water-ballast, she would have sufficient stability to be armed, and thus to render valuable service, if necessary, as an armed cruiser.

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF THE ROYAL SEAMEN AND MARINE ORPHAN SCHOOLS.

SIR,—The present building was erected in 1874-5, at a cost of about £8,000, collected in response to an appeal, by the indefatigable zeal and exertions of one of my predecessors, Admiral of the Fleet Sir George Rodney Mundy, and of the directors, of which body he was, as Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, the ex officio President. 137 orphan girls are now boarded, clothed, instructed, and prepared for service, and 60 orphan boys are instructed, clothed, and have a dinner and breakfast daily. Previous to 1872 the Home contained only 60 orphan girls, and 60 orphan boys were clothed, instructed, and partly fed. The Home was situated in an ill-ventilated, unsuitable building at Portsea. The girls remain under instruction until fit for domestic service, which we have no difficulty in finding for them, and the boys until situations are found for them, or until they obtain admission to the Greenwich Hospital School. We still find, however, that many of the orphans of seamen and marines remain on the list of eligible candidates for the Institution for months, and even years, or have to be rejected altogether for want of further accommodation in the Home, as well as of funds for their support and education. The orphans received into the Institution are from all parts of the country—many of them rescued from homes which are, to say the least, unsuitable for the rearing of virtuous girls, whose future welfare should be an object of solicitude to all who are interested in the Royal Navy. One of our regulations has hitherto been that no girls are admitted before the age of eight years, a regulation rendered obligatory by the limited amount of accommodation at our disposal. We are now desirous of making arrangements for receiving 50 additional orphan girls, and for admitting them at an earlier age. To effect this we propose to extend the present building by adding a wing capable of housing 50 more girls, the cost of which, when completely furnished, will be about £3,000. We are unable to receive assistance for this from the Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital, who maintain such orphan girls as are nominated by them to the Home, but are not authorised to make grants from the Hospital funds towards building purposes. We are thus entirely dependent on voluntary contributions for the promotion of our design, but we hope to be able to collect the sum required within the next year, and we have resolved to make an earnest appeal to the public to aid us by their subscriptions in this interesting and important work. You will, Sir, greatly oblige us by allowing this letter to appear in your columns. It is claimed, and with perfect justice, for our men-of-war seamen that they have wonderfully improved in many respects during the last 40 or 50 years. Drunkenness and profligacy are becoming rarer every year, and there are few ships without temperance branches on board. That marriage among the petty-officers, leading seamen, and many of the A.B.'s, with deserving women, should be on the increase, cannot be surprising, and is to be much desired; but it will follow, as a matter of course, that the number of seamen's widows and orphans will be numerous, and likely to increase with the improved morals of the class, for many deaths from casualties occur during a commission, and each ship contributes during her term of service not a few to the melancholy list. Unless the efforts are successful of those Naval officers and Members of Parliament who are striving to obtain pensions for seamen's widows, the number of widows and orphans dependent upon charity or on the rates will, in all probability, continue to increase, and the demands on the alms of those disposed to help them will increase in the same ratio. Who would wish it otherwise, if the alteration were a return to those sad days, within the recollection of many of us, when our men-of-war were always hotbeds of profligacy when in harbour? Accounts have been opened for the extension of the orphanage at Messrs. Glynn and Co., Lombard Street; Messrs. Hallett and Co., 7 St. Martin's Place, Trafalgar Square; Messrs. Woodhead and Co., 44 Charing Cross; and Messrs. Grant, Portsmouth.—I am, your obedient servant,

A. P. RYDER,

Admiral, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, and President of the Board of Directors, Admiralty House, Portsmouth, Nov. 5, 1880.

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "PERFECTED" OIL. Sold only in imperial quarter-pints, 1s 4d; half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade-mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.

"A Proud Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers" writes :—"I hardly like troubling you with another letter on the vexed question of Volunteer rank, but as you have been good enough to allow the subject to be ventilated in the Army and Navy Gazette, I would ask permission to reply to the principal arguments put forward by those who differ from me. The objections raised by my opponents to the assumption by Volunteer officers of the rank conferred upon them by her Majesty are :—'1. That, not being soldiers by profession, they are not entitled to military rank. 2. That the assumption of military rank by Volunteers is an injustice to Regular Army officers. 3. That as many Volunteer officers are shopkeepers, they are not, from their social position, entitled to military rank.' The first of these objections is certainly the most plausible, and carries with it the greatest weight; but when examined closely, it has, like everything else, two aspects. For what does this assertion mean? Surely this,—that it is not our custom to recognise military rank, unless the holder of it is a practical soldier. But is such a statement true? I can prove that it is not. The political officers in our Indian Army hold military rank, and are promoted through the various grades, even to that of General, without ever doing any military duties whatever. They are, for all practical purposes, civilians, and have not even the claim that can be shown by Volunteers,—that they have gone through regimental drill. Yet we do not hesitate for a moment to recognise their military rank. That Volunteers are not soldiers simply by profession, there is no question; but that they can, if they like, make themselves excellent soldiers, is not to be denied. I am most strongly of opinion that if the Government insisted on a high standard of efficiency for Volunteer officers, such as to make them at least equal to those Army officers who had not had the advantage of seeing active service—and how many there are!—that the supply would prove equal to the demand. In such case, the Volunteer officers would be soldiers by proficiency, and, therefore, partly soldiers by profession. A soldier may be a Member of Parliament, and still belong to his profession, hence it is possible to have a dual title. Why should not a professional Volunteer colonel be also, say, an excellent M.D., just as much as a Regular Army colonel is a hard-working M.P.? I believe that with proper encouragement and regulations, the Government may obtain out of the Volunteer force a very large body of officers who, in case of extreme national danger, would practically be available for active service, either at home or abroad, and that the zeal and patriotism of the Volunteers are qualities of such inestimable value to the country, that they should meet with every possible encouragement. Next, as to the injustice to Regular Army officers by the assumption of rank by Volunteers. One writer on the subject states that he is a captain in the Regular Army of twenty years' standing, and that he considers it would be very hard if his lieutenant were to leave the Service, join the Volunteers as a lieutenant-colonel, and then at a dinner-party have the right, as he undoubtedly would have, of going in (not necessarily, swaggering in) to dinner before his former captain. I cannot see that the captain has more to complain of in this case than if his lieutenant became, say, a baronet, when he would also take precedence on going in to dinner. By the 'fortunes of society' one man rises above another, and we must submit to it with a good grace. Properly speaking, the lieutenant in question should, in order to become a lieutenant-colonel, make himself thoroughly efficient to command a regiment. He could not do so without a considerable amount of trouble and time devoted to the study of his profession; but when he had succeeded, it seems to me that, as a thoroughly efficient lieutenant-colonel, he must be a soldier to all intents and purposes; and if so, why deny him his title? I can assure the captain that to command a regiment of Volunteers properly is far more difficult than to command a regiment of Regulars. If military rank were only to attach to officers who had seen active service, how many in the Regular Army would be disentitled to it? Lastly, it is said that since many Volunteer officers are shopkeepers, they should not be entitled to military rank. I am one of those who believe that the rank and file of the Volunteers prefer that their officers should be of good social position, and that it is advisable that, with a few exceptions, such should be the case. But if we here turn to the Regular Army, we may find many officers who are the sons of shopkeepers. The class of men who throw stones at them on that account are fortunately few; it is, on the contrary, the custom in the Regular Army to make the paths of such officers as smooth as possible, providing they are good fellows. An exception to this rule once met with a well-merited rebuke. A very nice young fellow, the son of an ironmonger, joined a Line regiment. A captain of the same regiment was very much scandalised at such an indignity, and determined to snub the intruder, and accordingly at mess thus accosted him grandiloquently :—'Is not your father an ironmonger?' 'Yes,' replied the young officer. 'Then why did he not make you one?' To which the subaltern replied,—'Is your father a gentleman?' 'Of course he is,' said the bridling captain. 'Then why did he not make you one?' In the Volunteer Force the Government possesses a lever that can be worked to the utmost advantage for the strength and safety of the Empire, and if it was made the fashion to recognise Volunteer rank, an increased standard of efficiency would be cheerfully accepted. No doubt, there are many existing Volunteer officers of long-standing who have not had the moral courage to adopt their legitimate rank; consequently, they now loudly protest that it is 'bad form' in those who have acted in a contrary direction. Such protest is natural, for otherwise all their imagined self-denial would have been thrown away. For my part, I have acted on different lines, and for reasons which I have already explained, and I intend to continue to do so."

"Ex-Volunteer" writes :—"This well-argued subject has again crept into your journal. It arose, professedly, with a view to ventilating the causes of the dearth of good officers, and the small chances of getting any, in the Volunteers; it has now run on to a new line, taking the form of right to military rank, and verges on an attack on social positions. Your correspondents have some amusing and varied views on the subject. 'A Captain of Middlesex Rifle Volunteers' takes the social and title line, and appears quite able to meet 'X.'s' remarks on this head. Would there were more like him, and in his position, in the Volunteers! 'X.' is only one in many thousands, and can hardly expect society to be influenced by his views. Society might take a fancy to abolish all military titles within its portals, but this would not suit 'X.' If he is in such good society, why need he fear meeting his tradesmen captains and majors? They don't, by virtue of any military title, get into society. A man, if in society, is as good, whether 'Mr.' or 'Colonel.' 'Society' has nothing to do with it. 'X.' takes up a man with a dual title. It would signify little which you gave him. He would, doubtless, be 'Dr.,' professionally employed; otherwise, he may adopt which he pleases. Will 'X.' explain a case of the auxiliary officer's gain and the regular's loss? I am surprised to see 'X.,' who claims to be of long service, indulging in the ridiculous idea that position is to be gained by doing one's duty. Under this system we shall see lieutenants who have been through any engagement claiming to take precedence of many captains, majors, and colonels. This remark of 'X.'s' savours of the Mutual-Admiration Society. I have always had respect for officers who have seen service, especially as volunteers; but because a man had seen service when ordered there, and which in these times is hard to see, would never induce any society, military or civil, to accord to him special privileges over persons not favoured with such luck. I am not narrow-minded enough to believe in a class, nor do I think one man on service is likely to be much better than another. 'X.' may or may not have seen any service, and he probably never may; but he would not like himself judged by that fact. It may be no fault of his, and ere long we shall find very few regulars who have, as our colonies begin to defend themselves. 'Field-Officer and Civilian' and 'Old Soldier' have left the question of Volunteer officers, and take the title score. 'Field Officer and Civilian' and 'Devoted Centurion" would class the Militia with the Volunteers, two services totally distinct; but I observe on all occasions the Volunteers crave to be assimilated. It would be little credit to the Militia. They do so, I think, for the reason that the Militia has always been regarded and treated as a portion of the Regular Army, a service in every way superior to the Volunteers, if they stuck to their own cloth and upheld their own grievances, it would be much to their own benefit, instead of when they cannot make a good case for themselves trying to reduce other superior services to their level. The Militia is as military as the Regular Army; there is no difference in the general arrangement of its management, only a few details as to time of service, bounties, &c. It is under the same Discipline Act and Order. When the men are enlisted they are not taken for a training, but for the full period of service, and may be kept up that time or only a few months, but at the discretion of the State their training is limited to a certain period per annum. The officers are in no way different from the Regulars. After entry they are under the same regulations as to service, and subject to the same pains and penalties (and cannot, like a Volunteer, resign in fourteen days); they can be called to join their regiments at any time and for any length of time; they can be called to sit on courts-martial and boards at any time, and to any place, and if required can be kept up all the year at depôts with recruits; and it has been decided by the military authorities that during the time they are not required with their regiments they are only 'on leave,' and that during the time they may indulge in civil employ, but must be prepared at any time to relinquish it. They may not go on service in our colonies or elsewhere, without special permission (a restriction not put on Volunteers), and must obtain leave to go abroad, and state their places of travel and period of absence (not enforced on Volunteers). The men are allowed to return to civil employ (a privilege enjoyed by the Army Reserve); they are treated as deserters unless they rejoin their regiments when required; and are specially available for service in the Regular Army, at home or abroad; and there are few regiments who cannot claim some regular service at home or abroad, and not a few contributed a fair quota to fight in their Militia kits in either the Peninsula or Waterloo, a force but for which our Regular Army and regiments would be skeletons, and aptly described by a Staff officer in a high post as the 'back-bone of the British Army.' Militia officers therefore do (in spite of a Volunteer's ideas of 'form'), and justly so, take their military titles on all occasions (except in their civil professions), and are not ashamed of putting 'Militia' on their cards they don't claim to be Regulars. Many of the Volunteers are very anxious to be taken for what they are not. I fully agree with a captain of Middlesex Rifle Volunteers, whose able letters contain some good-sense, and I think, with him, that a second lieutenant in the Army should not take precedence of a captain of Volunteers, and fully agree with him that a C.B. or two would add a good tone to the force. The question of getting good officers, in my opinion, which is based on an experience of some years as an officer of Volunteers, rests with commanding officers. If they keep a good tone in their regiments and keep down expense, and make it a privilege to nominate to commissions, they will seldom find it hard to get a good class of men as officers."

"A Disgusted Subaltern" writes :—"I have been much interested in reading the correspondence which you have so kindly admitted into your paper on the subject of Volunteer officers, and trust you will permit me to confirm much that has been said, and add some of my own experience. I fully concur with what 'Barrister' says about the Inns of Court Rifles, as from the window of my chambers I am frequently tormented by the sight of a number of respectable members of society, who think fit two or three times a year to don an ill-fitting and unmilitary uniform, and repair to Lincoln's Inn Fields to play at soldiers, persuading themselves that they are 'serving their country.' The officers are, with some exceptions, I believe, good soldiers, and it seems a pity for them to waste their energies upon a regiment whose members are, in many cases, physically unfit to carry arms, and had better content themselves with wearing a barrister's robe in Westminster Hall. 'A Volunteer Officer of Long Standing' is evidently in a particularly fortunate position, and I wish it were my good luck to meet many like him and those he seems to come into contact with. From boyhood I hoped to enter the Queen's service, but, like many equally keen soldiers, I failed to pass into the Line, and from pure love of soldiering (not playing at soldiering) I took a commission in a strong Volunteer regiment in the Metropolis. My colonel has served in the Army, and is a gentleman from top to toe, but he takes no interest whatever in his regiment. My brother-officers are, no doubt, very good fellows, but socially such as I have a particular objection to know too much of. In their civil life I see little of them, and, with three or four exceptions, should be extremely surprised to meet them in a good London club. The field-officers and captains appear to me for the most part to remain in the Volunteers only in order to retire with their rank; and the three or four senior subalterns, who take but little interest in their work, look forward with longing hearts to prefixing 'captain' to their names. So that the juniors, who are well up in their work, are deprived of promotion, and the best of them leave the regiment after a few years' service. Here is a splendid body of men sacrificed to this paltry love of military title which exists among a class of men who think to 'better themselves' in business, or fondly hope to improve their social status by being called 'captain' or 'major' in private life, and these are the men who receive the Queen's commission to command her soldiers! I could go on to name another regiment practically under the command of an adjutant, who, some few years since, was a serjeant in the Army, and is now deputed by his commanding officer to select officers for the corps. The result is curious, to say the least, and the whole tone of the regiment is extremely slack. It seems to me a great pity that the particular class of officers to which most of your correspondents appear to belong cannot be brought more together. Why cannot we organise ourselves and form a club in London, partaking of the nature of a general mess, to which members would be admitted only by ballot? I believe that without great expense 250 or 300 of us could start it, and by excluding those who are not eligible for other good clubs, we should encourage a spirit of comradeship among Volunteer officers that exists in the Army, but cannot be with us so long as many feel that holding a Volunteer commission brings us into contact only with men of whom we would know as little of as possible. I fear that I am plain-spoken, but it is time that somebody spoke plainly on the subject."

"GENTLEMEN'S CORPS" IN THE VOLUNTEERS.

"Volunteer" writes :—"I sincerely hope that 'Barrister's' suggestion, in your issue of Nov. 6, of abolishing 'gentlemen's corps,' may not be entertained by the Authorities. I have had the honour to hold a commission, and am now serving in the ranks of one of the University corps, and I am convinced they provide the very men we need for Volunteer officers. They are training schools for young men from all parts of our kingdom, who, on leaving the Universities, in many cases obtain commissions in their local corps, after having passed through one of these regiments, and I have little doubt that the 'Devil's Own' performs the same valuable functions. In regard to the question of efficiency, these corps have the greatest difficulties to contend with, as they can rarely keep a man for more than three years (the usual period of residence); and in the University corps especially, the time actually passed at head-quarters is only six months of the year, two months of which time is summer weather."

"Another Barrister" writes :—"Allow me to say a few words in answer to 'Barrister's' attack on gentlemen's corps in general, and the Inns of Court in particular, which appeared in your last issue. No doubt, in a gentlemen's corps, where all have to enter the ranks, and where there is no royal road to a commission, promotion is slow and hard to get, and 'Barrister' has probably chosen the easier way to the coveted dignity; but that is no reason why he should invent statistics, and credit the Inns of Court with only 280 efficients, instead of 305, which was the actual number of efficients last year. I own that 305 is bad enough; and 'Barrister' has hit the obvious deficiencies of gentlemen's corps when he calls attention to the difficulty of recruiting, and the bad per-centage of efficiency in those corps. But when he asserts that, therefore, gentlemen corps are worthless, I think that he comes to a conclusion which is not warranted by the facts on which he bases it. The Volunteer Force is meant to provide for the contingency of invasion; apart from that, it is useless, or rather, it is not intended to be used. Now, in time of invasion, all able-bodied men would be required, and would be eager to serve, and there would be a far larger number of gentlemen available than could possibly be provided with commissions, even if they were fit to hold commissions, which, without previous military training, of course they would not be. But under good officers and non-commissioned officers, they could in a very short time be made into excellent privates, for every one who has had any experience in drilling gentlemen knows well how handy they are, and how easily and quickly they can be taught a private's drill. In the gentlemen's corps they would naturally enlist, and in those corps they would find a staff of thoroughly efficient and well-drilled officers and non-commissioned officers ready to take them in hand and teach them their business. In time of peace, the difficulty of keeping the rank and file of the gentlemen's corps up to the mark is, no doubt, very great,—gentlemen have so many other things to do which are more pleasant than drilling in the ranks, when there is no obvious necessity to compel them to drill,—but in time of peril, the gentlemen's corps would be filled up, and would be as fine and useful regiments as any in the Service. As an instance of this, I would mention the corps which 'Barrister' has thought fit to attack. In the early years of the Volunteer movement, when the thought of invasion was present to men's minds as a possibility by no means remote, six hundred men of the Inns of Court marched past on the Brighton Downs in a perfect state of drill and efficiency, and so it would be again, in case of emergency. No doubt it would be better if all the Bar were drilled, and if the Inns of Court were up to its full strength in time of peace; but as that is practically impossible—men being what they are—the next best thing is to have the cadres ready for them, with the officers and non-commissioned officers in a state of efficiency. If the Inns of Court were disbanded, nearly 300 good Volunteers would be lost to the Force, for it is impossible to suppose that commissions for all that number could be found in other regiments. The last clause of 'Barrister's' letter I confess I do not understand. Why is the Inns of Court lowering to military rank, and why would it be so even if it were the most efficient regiment in London? What rank is lowered? Is the rank of non-commissioned officer or private lowered by being filled by gentlemen and barristers, or is the rank of lieutenant-colonel lowered by being filled by one of her Majesty's counsel? As the justification of the existence of the Inns of Court, I would refer to the records of how that regiment has borne itself in the field in past autumn manœuvres, and to the reports of its inspecting officers at the present time."

MILITIA OFFICERS AND MILITARY RANK.

"A Militia Officer" writes:—"As regards the rank of Militia officers, it does not seem generally known that they are under the Articles of War (part 5, sec. 168, par. 3; and p. 4, par. 2, 'Auxiliary Forces and Militia Regulations') during the non-training, and are, therefore, no more their own masters than an officer of the Regular Army when on leave. (See part 5, sec. 170.) I think, after the sweeping statements of a gentleman signing himself 'A Devoted Centurion' that only the black-sheep of the Auxiliary Forces retain their rank, and that for swagger, it would only be in common justice to the Service to which I belong to publish this fact. I quote these references from the 'Army Discipline and Regulation Acts, 1879,' to prove to you I am right in what I say, and also for the information of the officers who have written to you on the subject of rank, which they would do well to study before committing themselves to statements."

MILITIA OFFICERS AND THEIR RANK.

Lieut.-Col. Briggs, commanding the Hampshire Militia, writes:—"With reference to the discussion on the use of their military rank by officers of the Auxiliary Forces, for which you have allowed space in your columns, I venture to call attention, on behalf of officers of the Militia, to Part 5 of the Army Discipline Act, 1879, 'On the Application of Military Law.' By clause 168, para. 3, it is laid down that 'Officers of the Militia, others than members of the Permanent Staff,' are 'persons subject to military law, as officers.' This being so, I submit that Militia officers are fully justified in using their military rank. They should, of course, put the name of their regiment also on their cards, and then they are well within their rights."

PURCHASE CAPTAINS AND BREVET PROMOTION.

"H. B." writes:—"In 'Answers to Correspondents,' in the last issue of the Army and Navy Gazette, your reply to 'Picton' may occasion some misgivings at the impression it seems to convey in regard to the scope of the recent Royal Warrant re Brevet Promotion. The Warrant, after setting out that it is 'expedient to extend the period during which the system may be continued of granting brevet promotion by succession, &c.,' merely substitutes a more distant date, on which its operation shall cease, for that fixed by the earlier Warrant. It will be observed that the terms of the Warrant do not limit its action to any particular grade, but are applied to the system generally. Now, the 'system' of so granting brevet promotion combines, and always has combined, as one of its integral parts, the promotion of captains to brevet majorities; therefore, in the manner and to the extent that it may have operated up to Oct. 1, 1880, so fully shall it continue to operate to Oct. 1, 1881. Art. 18 (d) of the Royal Warrant, May 1, 1878, provides that a qualified captain shall be eligible for promotion to the rank of major 'by brevet, in succession to a major promoted under Art. 21 (f), if senior in the Army rank of captain, &c.' This provision remains untouched by the later Warrant, except so far as its action must be regulated by that of Art. 21 (f) in the latter's amended, or rather 'substituted' form."

The endeavours made to ensure the Roman Catholics of the Fleet having proper spiritual ministration, when practicable, has raised in the breasts of Presbyterians a feeling that there ought to be Naval Chaplains of that Church. The Presbyterian Church of Ireland has even gone so far as to ask that one of their ministers should be embarked in the flagship of each squadron on foreign service, but their Lordships can hold out no hope of making any arrangements for carrying out such a proposal. If we once begin to embark a variety of ministers, it would be a difficult thing to know where to stop.

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.—ITS UNEQUALLED EFFICACY IN THE WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.—Dr. G. Saunders, C.B., late Deputy-Inspector-General, Army Hospitals, Superintendent London Medical Mission, writes:—"I have used Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil extensively among the sick poor of St. Giles's, and consider it a valuable remedy, especially in the Wasting Diseases of Children." Dr. Stavely King, Physician to the Metropolitan Free Hospital, writes:—"I can very conscientiously testify to the superior qualities of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil. I have employed it with great advantage in cases of mesenteric and pulmonary tubercle, and in the Atrophic Diseases of Children." Dr. R. C. Croft, author of "Handbook for the Nursery," writes:—"I have tried Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil, and find that it contains all the properties which render the Oil so efficacious. I find, moreover, that many patients prefer it to the Pale Oils, and are able to retain it more comfortably. It is almost a specific in many of the diseases peculiar to infancy and childhood, and I have seen marked benefit produced by its use." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s; with his stamp and signature and the signature of his sole consignees on the capsule and the label under wrapper, by all chemists. Sole Consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77 Strand, London.

MILITARY INITIATIVE.

SIR,—In the last issue of your journal appears a précis of a paper upon "Military Initiative," contributed by M. le Faure to the Nouvelle Revue; and as the question is one of great importance, and of frequent recurrence in wars, both small and great, in strategy and in tactics alike, I request permission to offer in your columns a few remarks upon it. At the close of the war of 1870-1, as happens after every campaign, the causes of the success of the victors were eagerly sought after, and in a very short time dogmatists had settled the matter to their own satisfaction, and had laid down for us rules for fighting the observance of which would ensure success in future wars. These rules were founded mainly on three principles:—1. The great use of artillery, and the overwhelming effect of that arm. 2. The employment of infantry fire at short ranges only. 3. The assumption of the initiative by subordinates. It is unnecessary, after the experiences of the war of 1877-8, to show how completely the views entertained in 1871 as to the soundness of the first two principles have been modified. The glamour surrounding the third is still undimmed. And in the year 1880 M. le Faure gravely propounds it, as a sort of military "philosopher's stone," as an instrument of warfare well nigh omnipotent; and in illustrating his case and endeavouring to prove his argument, he allows his imagination, it must be admitted, great play. The word "initiative," as employed by M. le Faure, means "the taking the offensive by the commanders of the corps, divisions, &c., which make up an army, without regard to the expressed intentions of the superior authority, and even in direct disobedience to the orders given by that authority." So enamoured is M. le Faure with this idea of carrying on war, that in his eyes it is to be the military gospel of the future. In this "independent offensive" there is, however, it may be remarked, no inherent virtue; its value depends solely on the appropriateness of its application, and in this appropriateness lies its only justification. It may be added, moreover, that the knowing whether it be appropriate to the occasion or not is frequently beyond the ken of the individual who assumes it; but, nevertheless, he is pronounced to be a good leader, and receives praise in the event of success, and is scouted as a failure and blamed or punished in the event of failure. M. le Faure has most usefully emphasized the difficulty which a commander of an army experiences now-a-days in superintending and directing the movements of the units under his command; and he does good service in trying to rid us of some of the swaddling-clothes and leading-strings of a past age; but he has pushed his arguments so far as to lead well-nigh to a reductio ad absurdum; and of the battle of Spicheren, which he instances so approvingly, as illustrating the independent leading of inferior units, such as companies and batteries, it may fairly be said that as far as regards the German leading, it was about the worst-fought battle of the campaign. M. le Faure argues in favour of this so-called "initiative," because in the Franco-German war its adoption by the Germans, in certain cases, led to great successes being obtained by them later on. He does not say that this tactical initiative was the cause of the tactical success, but of successes of far greater moment at other points in the theatre of war gained subsequently. But M. le Faure cannot be allowed to place to the credit of a certain line of conduct results which flowed from it only indirectly. Had Bazaine acted with ordinary decision on that Aug. 14, he could either have crushed Von Goltz, or else have rendered Von Goltz's initiative barren of results by retiring before him. At any time between the evening of the 14th and that of the 16th a well-led army returning from Metz to Verdun would have been totally unaffected by the German initiative on the 14th. But M. le Faure's theory is so very fascinating in these days, when "dash" and daring find a sure mention by the "Special Correspondent," that it is advisable to point out that there are two sides to this question, and to call the attention of your readers to that which M. le Faure has carefully suppressed. There are some cases in which the commander can plan a battle beforehand, and can carry it out successfully, provided his orders are obeyed; and in which, if those orders are not obeyed, the result is either failure, or a success obtained only with vast and useless sacrifice of life. As regards the battle of Wörth, I have it on very high authority that the "idea" of the German Commander-in-Chief was not merely to beat the French, but also to cut off their retreat; and that this "idea" failed in execution, owing to the disobedience of a commander who preferred to act "independently." If this be the case, for how much subsequent bloodshed and what vast consequences may not that same commander be responsible? I would remind your readers how extensively this same principle of independent leading was carried out at the battle of Gravelotte by the Germans, and with what disastrous consequences to them. The three culprits were Gen. von Steinmetz, at the village of Gravelotte; Gen. von Manstein, at Verneville in the centre; and Prince August of Würtemberg, at St. Privat. The first two Generals commenced their attacks in direct disobedience of orders, the last-named took the initiative too soon. In each case, the tactics employed met with crushing defeat, and in no way contributed to the great strategical results which followed. M. le Faure also reproaches Bourbaki for not having taken at that same battle the initiative against the centre of the German line. It is open to question whether the French Guard Corps would have been successful against the Third, Ninth, and Tenth German Corps combined at that point, but it is surely not open to question whether the local commander of the reserve of an army may decide for himself the direction in which it is to be employed. Even this little remnant of authority M. le Faure would wrest from the Commander-in-Chief. M. le Faure supports his arguments by such an army of instances, that it is desirable to mention that that gentleman's version of military history is in many points a revelation to simple-minded believers in the German official account of the war. If Von Moltke is to be trusted, General von Kirchbach was not pressed by the French, and the commencement of the battle was not due to this cause, as asserted by M. le Faure; and there was no insubordinate agreement entered into between that General and General von Hartmann. General von Alvensleben will (if still living) be surprised to hear that in marching along the road prescribed for him by superior authority, and thereby running his head against the French, he took the initiative, and he must be puzzled to identify the General Goltz, whom M. le Faure has described as his fellow-conspirator. The truth is, that in his eagerness M. le Faure has ridden his hobby too hard, and, over-stating his case, has injured the chance of obtaining acceptance for a principle of troop-leading—namely, the assumption of responsibility—the value of which cannot be overrated. How far orders are to be acted on literally, how far the orders received are either to be acted upon, not acted upon, or acted against—for in each of these three cases "responsibility" exists—is, and always will be, one of the most difficult questions a soldier has to decide on service. Lieut.-Col. Pierron has dealt with this subject in the second volume of his invaluable work, "Les Méthodes de Guerre Actuelles, et vers la Fin du XIX. Siècle," and to that work I would direct those of your readers who are interested in this question. In conclusion, so peculiar are the views held by M. le Faure as to some of the incidents of the battles of the war of 1870-1, that I would take advantage of this opportunity to impress on all readers of military literature the desirableness of not allowing alleged episodes of warfare, advanced in support of any particular theory, to have the slightest weight with them until they have examined the episodes for themselves. I must apologise for trespassing at such length on your valuable space, but I have been induced to do so partly from the prominent place you assigned in your columns to M. le Faure's views, and partly from the misleading and utterly one-sided views put forward by that gentleman on this most important question.—I am, &c.,

MILITIA SUBALTERNS AND LINE COMMISSIONS.

"Militiaman" writes:—"I read with much pleasure in your columns lately a paragraph on the 'grievances of Militia officers entering the Regular Army.' No doubt it has struck many of your readers how unfair the examinations at present are, especially the military competitive. A candidate is supposed to know fortification, military law, &c., but where is the candidate to learn it? If one passes into Sandhurst, one is taught it at the Royal Military College. Why, then, should Militia officers have to find their own tutors? Are they not as good as Sandhurst candidates? Surely there ought to be a military college formed for Militia officers on the same footing as the College at Sandhurst. Militia subalterns, after their second training, ought to be compelled to go to this college for a period of six months, at the end of that time passing a qualifying, but not competitive, examination for their commissions in the Regular Army. No doubt, if this was carried out, it would be satisfactory to all parties."

THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE AND THE BRITISH SOLDIER'S UNIFORM.

"Justicia" writes:—"I was delighted to see the Duke of Cambridge standing up for the soldier at the recent banquet to the Royal Academy. His Royal Highness remarks, 'I have constantly seen it urged by all means to raise the condition of the soldier. Now I cordially accept and endorse that wish, and no one, I assure you, is more anxious than I am that this elevation should take place; yet what do we see? It is a positive fact, though it appears almost incredible, that the uniform coat of an ordinary soldier is regarded as a bar to his admission to many public assemblies. Is that the way to elevate and make the soldier respectable? Why, in my opinion, a well-conducted soldier is as respectable a citizen of this great country as any of us here to-night. I cannot see, therefore, why you should debar a man simply because he is in the uniform of his Sovereign.' Now that his Royal Highness has expressed himself so plainly and publicly of the position in society which every member of her Most Gracious Majesty's Army should enjoy, we who are debarred from that privilege may trust there are better days in store for us. I refer to the Veterinary Department, who, though bearing her Majesty's commission, wearing her Majesty's uniform, and sharing in victories abroad, are considered ineligible for public presentation to royalty, though in our capacity as regimental officers we are permitted to dine with members of the Royal Family. Surely this is a distinction without a difference, and should at once be remedied. It is my wish, as well as that of his Royal Highness, that the uniform of her Majesty should be a passport to any society; yet being a man of order, I should like to see the commissioned officer obtain his privileges before the rank and file."

A large meeting of the Council of the Army Coffee-Taverns was held on the 4th inst., in the Commandant's office, Woolwich, Gen. Turner, C.B., presiding. Among those present were:—The Chaplain-General, Generals Askwith, Sir J. Brind, Burnaby, M.P., Cameron, Sir Collingwood Dickson, Lowry, Phillpotts, Radcliffe, Gosling, Sir R. Wilbraham, Comy.-Gen. Watt, the Hon. and Rev. A. Anson, Cols. Stirling and Geary, Major F. Duncan, and Capt. E. Woollcombe. A very satisfactory report was made by the executive committee, and Gens. Turner, Cameron, and Burnaby were appointed trustees. Various names were added to the list of the executive committee, and it was decided to extend the benefits of the scheme to the Auxiliary Forces. It was decided to commence work as soon as possible in Woolwich, Aldershot, Chatham, and Shorncliffe, and to make a strong appeal to the general public for funds. Already, no fewer than 400 officers of the Army have subscribed, showing how strongly they see the advantages of the scheme.

INDIA.

The Government of India have issued instructions to put an immediate stop to all interference in recruiting for the Native Army on the part of the civil and police authorities. The duties of recruiting are to be again entirely entrusted to the military authorities, who are instructed to send out recruiting parties to likely districts. The Times of India says:—"We do not know how it may have been in other parts of India, but in the Bombay Presidency, at all events, the experiment of recruiting through the civil officers has been a dead failure. The authorities did not, or could not, secure the services of likely men; and the recruits they contrived, by hook or by crook, to collect, were almost invariably returned by the military surgeons as unable to pass the ordinary medical examination. Nor was the duty of recruiting acceptable to the mofussil civilians, and all concerned will be glad that a return is to be made to the old plan."

Recruiting for all native regiments of the Bengal Army, with the exception of those serving across the frontier, is to cease until the strength is reduced to that of the ordinary peace establishment, viz., 384 sowars, including one assistant salootrie, and six farriers for the cavalry, and 600 privates for the infantry. This order does not apply to Goorkha corps, which will continue to recruit up to the increased establishment. Those regiments now serving across the frontier will come under the conditions of this order as soon as they return to India.

With the sanction of Government, the Commander-in-Chief has been pleased to grant furlough to the whole of the Bengal Native Army (excepting regiments serving across the frontier and those held in reserve at Lawrencepore,) to the extent of 33 per cent. of the effective strength of corps. This liberal concession, a General Order says, is made to the Native Army in consideration of the annual grant of furlough having been practically withheld for the past three seasons owing to war operations. Leave of absence is to be given with a strict regard to priority of claims; and the period of leave is to be limited with reference to the distance of men's homes and the nature of their business, so as to admit of as general a participation in the indulgence as possible.

The following official notification has appeared in the Gazette of India:—"With a view to afford medical officers of the Indian Service, employed on civil duties, the opportunity of acquiring the latest experience of military medical administration before their nomination for promotion to the administrative grade, which nominations will be made at a date to meet as nearly as possible foreseen vacancies, the Governor-General in Council is pleased to notify that such officers, in the event of their not having performed military duty for six months within the three years immediately preceding the time of their probable promotion, shall, on nomination, be required to spend six months in medical charge of a Native regiment, at a station which is the head-quarters of a deputy-surgeon-general, with whom they will be associated, in view to their acquiring a thorough acquaintance with the details of the office and the administrative system in force with British and native troops. An officer thus selected shall, when in charge of a Native corps, relinquish the pay of his civil appointment, receiving in lieu that of an officer of his rank in medical charge of a regiment; but he will retain a lien on his civil appointment, to which he may, should he desire to do so, revert on the expiration of the six months, and await his turn for promotion. Officers on proceeding to join regiments and on reverting to civil duty will be treated as officers on the military establishment, and travel under the warrants of their rank."

The Times of India says:—The 3rd Light Cavalry at Candahar has two officers present for duty, one captain in command and one subaltern, with an infantry subaltern attached for duty. The 1st Regiment Native Infantry is no better off, for it has but one lieutenant-colonel and one lieutenant for duty. The 30th Regiment Native Infantry has a colonel of 37 years' service and two other officers. Such is the manner in which our regiments on service are under-officered. The regiments in cantonments are in much the same plight, several having only four officers for duty, two of whom are probably probationers for the Staff Corps."

Under instructions from the Horse Guards, it is notified that on no account can officers be permitted to accept a depôt vacancy, with the view to proceeding to Hythe to qualify in musketry, and then return to the service companies.

An instance having occurred in which a court-martial sentenced a non-commissioned officer to be reduced to the rank of lance-corporal, the Commander-in-Chief in India, under instructions from the Horse Guards, notifies that such sentences, though not illegal, are undesirable, and invites the attention of all concerned to the forms in which sentences of reduction should be passed as laid down in Horse Guards' G.O. 42 of 1880, republished in G.O. 70 of 1880.

The Madras Times hears that Sir Neville Chamberlain is "impressed with the necessity for assimilating the uniforms of all native regiments in the country. His Excellency is in favour of a costume a la Zouave, consisting of turbans in lieu of caps, vests and jackets combined in lieu of tunics, and knicker-bockers with leather gaiters, in lieu of trousers. The style of uniform, besides being more picturesque and comfortable, is, in the Commander-in-Chief's opinion, calculated to be less costly than the dress in vogue. His Excellency has, therefore, been at great pains to move the Government to adopt the change without further delay, and we are glad to learn that the Government, falling in with Sir Neville's views on the subject, have taken steps to ascertain the probable amount of saving that would be secured by adopting the proposed change." It is a pity that the reform is not extended to the Bombay native troops. Sir Charles Staveley was well known to approve of the present kit being discarded for one suitable to the climate, and it will be remembered that "a costume a la Zouave" was supplied to one regiment, the 9th, we believe, just before it went to Malta.

The Times' correspondent at Calcutta telegraphs on the 7th inst.:—"It is believed that Col. MacGregor, lately Gen. Robert's Chief of the Staff, will shortly succeed Gen. C. Johnson as Qrmr.-Gen. in India. Brigdr. C. Gough, now commanding the Khyber Brigade, is to have the command of the Hyderabad Contingent on the retirement of Col. Wright."

The Times states that arrangements are in progress for the issue of the war medal to mark the services of officers and men who have done duty with the several columns employed on service in Afghanistan, and it has been decided to grant the decoration to all those who have actually crossed the Indian frontier.

The Irish Times states that "the Government of India has decided to press on with all despatch the fortification of the principal military posts along the frontier."

THE ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE, SANDHURST.[*]

The following memorandum has been published:—"1. Preliminary examinations for admission to the Royal Military College will be held in London, Edinburgh, and Dublin on Feb. 23 and 24, and on April 6 and 7, 1881, under the Regulations issued with G.O. 113 of 1880. (No preliminary examination for admission to Sandhurst will take place immediately preceding the 'further examination' of July, 1881.) 2. Gentlemen who propose to be candidates for cadetships in the Royal Military College will be permitted to present themselves for the preliminary examination on either, but not on both of these occasions. This preliminary examination will not be reckoned in the number of trials allowed by the Regulations. 3. Gentlemen who wish to attend the examination in February or April must apply, in their own handwriting, direct to the Secretary of the Civil Service Commissioners not later than Feb. 9 for the Feb. examination, and March 23 for the April examination. 4. No evidence of age or moral character is required for admission to either of these preliminary examinations. 5. It must be understood that candidates will not be admitted to the 'further' examination in July, unless they send to the Military Secretary, on or before May 15, 1881, the papers required by Section 16 of the Regulations. 6. No candidate will be allowed to attend the 'further' unless he has passed the 'preliminary' examination, or can produce a certificate as laid down in the following paragraph. 7. Candidates may be exempted from the preliminary examination, in all subjects except geometrical drawing, if they can produce—(1) A certificate of having passed any of the University examinations mentioned in paragraph 2 (b) of the Regulations, or responsions at Oxford; or (2), a certificate of having passed the matriculation examination of the London University; or (3), the certificate of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board, provided it embraces mathematics; if it does not include that subject, they will be required also to undergo an examination therein. Candidates so exempted may defer their examination in geometrical drawing until the time of the 'further' examination. 8. This 'preliminary' examination is separate from the 'further' examination, and no marks can be given in the one for work done in the other. 9. A fee of £1 will be required from every candidate admitted to an examination.—Civil Service Commission, London, S.W., Oct. 29, 1880."

[*] Officers of Militia who propose to be candidates for commissions in the Army may be admitted to these preliminary examinations on the same conditions as candidates for admission to the Royal Military College. Those who pass will be exempted from the preliminary part of the special examination of Militia candidates.

The Devalah-Central Gold Mines Company (Limited) has been incorporated, with a capital of £120,000, to work the Hamslade, Hamsluck, and Adelphi properties, immediately adjoining the estates of the Devalah Moyar Company (Limited), and other well-known gold-mining properties.

SOME MAGAZINES.

Blackwood for November contains a good deal of readable matter, including a short article on Army reform and one on the Afghan campaign, neither of which, however, requires particular notice. Among the miscellaneous articles will be found a very lengthy yarn, spun by "An Old Fogey," who indulges his readers with some rather uninteresting reminiscences of voyages in the Peninsular and Oriental Steam-ship Company. The yarn is pretty well in its way, but is scarcely entitled to occupy thirty-six pages of such a periodical as Blackwood. A new serial is commenced in this number, under the title of "The Private Secretary." The opening chapters treat of the efforts made by a middle-aged gentleman to obtain the services of a secretary. As a matter of course, he advertises, and is flooded with replies. After the most conscientious struggles on his part to hit upon the right man, he manages to hit upon a fair young lady, and after some faint hesitation he decides on selecting her. The young lady evidently has a history, with the particulars of which we shall be made acquainted. So far as the story goes in this number, it may be called very amusing, but absurdly improbable.

There is not much in the current number of Macmillan, beyond Mr. James's and Mrs. Oliphant's contributions, the latter which has now terminated its magazine course, and will, no doubt, add considerably to the literary reputation of this accomplished authoress.

In Belgravia for this month, Mr. Proctor mentions some strangely fulfilled dreams, more than one of which has reference to the late Charles Dickens. The article will prove attractive to many readers, the majority of whom have, in the course of time, very probably dreamt a dream which they consider has since been fulfilled. The other articles in this number are about the average, but exception must be made in favour of "The Three Wishes," a charming poetic idyl, contributed by H. Francis Lester, and deserving of high commendation.

Under the quaint title of Far-Out Rovings Retold, Lieut.-Col. W. F. Butler has published (Isbister) a few admirable papers, which he is quite right in disinterring from the pages of ancient magazines and periodicals of a more recent date, for they are well worth reading and preserving,—written in the vigorous style which has secured the author so many admirers, and full of spirit, deep appreciation of the beauties of nature, a love of animals which we take to be a sure sign of a manly, generous nature, and breathing perhaps too deeply so for the appreciation of the many, a spirit of justice to his fellow-men, no matter what the colour of their hides may be. In a most vigorous preface, Col. Butler tells some truths which will be very unpalatable to our colonial friends, and to the chauvinism which our rulers do so much to encourage, under the specious pretext that greed of other men's goods is another name for civilisation. We commend the papers with all our hearts.

Amusements.

At Her Majesty's Theatre, Mdlle. Isodor has won another triumph, in "La Traviata," and her dramatic pathos evinced as Violetta has given a special interest to what has proved the most attractive performance of the present season. The programme of the week has included repetitions of "Rigoletto," "Les Huguenots," and "Carmen;" while on other nights Madame Zacchi has appeared in "Lucrezia Borgia," Donna Anna in "Don Giovanni," and Leonora in the "Trovatore."

When an actor with a high reputation creates no deep feeling of disappointment among those who witness his performances for the first time, he has good reason to be satisfied with the result obtained. A success of this kind has been secured by Mr. Edwin Booth, who, after being recognised as the leading tragedian of the United States, received, on the opening night of the New Princess's Theatre, when he appeared as Hamlet, an exceedingly enthusiastic greeting. There can be no doubt that, with great personal qualifications, he possesses mental acquirements peculiarly enabling him to interpret with judgment the prominent characters of our poetical drama.

On this evening (Saturday), Hengler's Grand Cirque will be reopened for the season, a carefully trained Spanish bull being the prominent novelty in the programme.

Rowland's Odonto is the purest and most fragrant Tooth Powder ever used, and contains no acid or mineral ingredients, which are so detrimental to the teeth and gums. All who have a good set of teeth, and wish to keep them, should use it; and they who, by early neglect or ill-health, suffer from discoloured or imperfect teeth, which are the forerunners of dyspepsia and indigestion, will find that Rowland's Odonto will keep them sound and white, and prevent and arrest decay. Its purity especially adapts it for the teeth of young children. Ask any chemist for Rowland's Odonto.

TO PARENTS and GUARDIANS.—HOME EDUCATION.—A Clergyman, residing in one of the most healthy and beautiful parts of England, desires TWO LITTLE GIRLS (or Boys) to EDUCATE, with his own Daughter. Terms moderate. Every home comfort.—Address, "VICAR," Deacon's Advertising Offices, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.

YOUNG LADY, wishing to join her Sister in India as soon as possible, would GIVE SERVICES for PASSAGE to BOMBAY. Fond of and used to children.—Miss KEIR, Hurley, near Marlow, Bucks.

METROPOLITAN FIRE BRIGADE.—APPOINTMENT OF SECOND OFFICER.—The Metropolitan Board of Works is about to APPOINT an OFFICER to be SECOND-IN-COMMAND of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, and is prepared to receive applications for the appointment. The Officer will be required to give his whole time and energies to the service of the Board, and to reside at the Head-quarters of the Brigade, or at such other station as the Board may from time to time appoint.

He must be of robust health, strong and active, and his age must be not less than 30 or more than 40 years. He must have had a liberal education, possess a sound knowledge of mechanics, and have had some experience in dealing with men.

The salary of the Officer will be £400 a year, to be increased, by annual additions of £25, until it reaches the maximum salary of £600 a year; and he will have free quarters, coal, and gas. ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The Properties are in the centre of the auriferous track, and they immediately adjoin the Estates of the Devalah Moyar Company (Limited) and other well-known Gold-Mining Properties.

Copies of Mr. Brough Smyth's special and full Report, dated June 1, 1880, can be had on application. The following extracts are noteworthy:—

"If my opinions have weight, mining operations of an extensive character will, ere long, be undertaken on some one of your reefs under the most favourable circumstances. The results, if there be good management and if economy be exercised, will not only be satisfactory to the owners of those properties, but will give confidence to others who own neighbouring lands intersected by auriferous veins......You have, in my opinion, a most valuable mining property in your three Estates, and the utmost caution should be used in disposing of any portion of it......With numerous thick and persistent proved auriferous reefs, with abundance of water and an ample supply of timber close to the old native Mines, you have facilities for conducting Mining operations economically, such as are seldom found in other countries."

Mr. Brough Smyth, in his official Report, also states that,—

"The reefs, the strike and dip of which nearly correspond with those in other parts, are thick and persistent; the average yields of gold, as ascertained by competent persons, are high, and the time cannot be far distant when miners will bring their skill and knowledge to bear on the extraction of gold from veins situate so favourably."

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares, and Copies of the Reports and Maps, can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, the Bank and its Branches, and of the Solicitors.

It is intended to erect Coffee Taverns in the various Camps and Garrison Towns, commencing with Woolwich, Aldershot, Chatham, and Shorncliffe. As these will be gifts to the Army and Auxiliary Forces, the profits will not go to pay dividends, but to build additional Taverns in other garrisons. Already Four Hundred Officers have subscribed, and the public is now invited to assist in the movement, so important to the physical and moral welfare of the Soldier.

Subscriptions will be received by the HONORARY SECRETARIES, at the Royal Military Repository, Woolwich, or by any member of the Committee.

DICKENS (late 11th Foot), who, besides having passed the Staff College, and held several Staff appointments, has for some time past been successfully engaged in coaching Lieutenants of Militia, and also Sandhurst Cadets for their final examination in the same subjects. Other competent Tutors assist in preparing for the qualifying Examinations.

ARMY EXAMINATIONS.—The Rev. Dr. FROST, LL.D., and Captain W. H. JAMES, F.G.S., P.S.C., late R.E., 28 Kensington Square, W., PREPARE Gentlemen for the Army, viâ WOOLWICH, SANDHURST, and the MILITIA. A Special Class for the STAFF COLLEGE. Captain James passed from the Staff College in 1877 with honours, first in mathematics, and was very favourably reported on, especially in Military Subjects. During the past fifteen years, over 180 Pupils have passed from this Establishment for Woolwich alone. Of these, 40 have passed in the first ten, 7 first and 6 second on the list. A very large number have also been passed for Sandhurst.

NAVAL CADETS, ASSISTANT CLERKS
SOUTHSEA.
Principal—Mr. T. H. VICKERY.

In addition to the general course of study pursued at this long-established School, Pupils are specially prepared for the examination required for the above.

At the recent Competitive Examination (June, 1880) of Candidates for Assistant-Clerkships in the Royal Navy, of the Fifteen successful competitors, FIVE were pupils of this Establishment.

ARMY, NAVY, AND CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.
SYSTEMATIC AND SUCCESSFUL PREPARATION FOR THE ABOVE AT ST. JAMES'S COLLEGIATE SCHOOL,
HIGHLANDS, JERSEY.

Upwards of 300 successful Candidates in these Examinations have gone up direct from the School, many of them taking very high places, especially in the Examinations for entrance into Woolwich and Sandhurst. Among recent ones are a third place in French out of 162 Candidates at the last Militia Examination in April, 1880, and the twelfth place with 5,104 Marks on the General List; with the first place in Mathematics, at the last examination held in July, 1880, for entrance into the Royal Military College, Sandhurst.

Inclusive terms for Boarders from Fifty Guineas.

THE TERM COMMENCED ON TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7.

MILITIA.—COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS for LINE COMMISSIONS. Subalterns of Militia PREPARED for the COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS, for COMMISSIONS in the LINE, by Lieut.-Col. F. J. HUTCHISON, half-pay, late 64th Regiment (upwards of seven years Garrison-Instructor at Devonport, and for several months Professor of Fortification at the Staff College); and Lieut.-Col. N. STEEVENS, late 20th and 88th Regiments and the Staff, who has for some time past been successfully engaged in preparing Subalterns of Militia for the Competitive Examinations.

Cadets who have failed to qualify (for Commissions) at the Royal Military College are also prepared for re-examination. Instruction given in the following subjects:—

1. The Elements of Field Fortification.
2. Military Topography.
3. The Elements of Tactics.
4. Military Administration.
5. Military Law.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.— By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' 'Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

N.B.—PUNCTUAL ATTENDANCE EVERY THURSDAY AT 4 HIGH STREET, ALDERSHOT, FROM 11 TILL 5.

"This is a most useful and concise work, showing at once all that has to be done by every officer and non-commissioned officer of a battalion in extended order. The author of this little book has succeeded in classifying the whole of the words of command in such a manner as to render it perfectly clear what each officer and serjeant has to do. The book should be in the hands of every officer and non-commissioned officer, for it is by far the best manual of the kind we have seen."—Army and Navy Gazette.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—WATCHES.

The Rev. Robt. Cass, Settle, Yorkshire, writes, February 19, 1880:—"The Ladies' Gold Lever Watch received from you for 70s in size, workmanship, and beautiful appearance, resembles a watch usually sold at £10. It gives entire satisfaction."

The Rev. James Arthur Kemp, Lew Down, North Devon, also writes, March 8, 1880:—"The watch I ordered of you at 25s, for my servant, arrived quite safely, and I am exceedingly well pleased with it in every way. It is an excellent timekeeper, very neat and handsome in appearance, and in my opinion worth far more than those that cost treble the money. I do not think anybody should be without a watch, when they can obtain from you such an excellent article at so reasonable a price."

"I am very much pleased with everything I have had from your Company. The watch (25s) has proved to be an excellent one, and is a marvel of cheapness. It is fully equal to, or indeed superior to, many I have seen purchased by regimental clubs for treble the money. I am positive your Company will prove itself a boon to Army men at home and abroad, particularly the latter, who are often compelled to pay enormous prices for very inferior articles indeed. Your Company is deserving of every success, and I deem it a duty, to you and the Army, to become an amateur agent, unpaid."

THE MIDLAND COUNTIES WATCH COMPANY supply their celebrated Watches direct to wearers, at very lowest wholesale cash prices. They guarantee watches supplied by them to be most perfect timekeepers, and honestly assert their price to be under one-half those charged by watchmakers; and as a guarantee of good-faith they undertake to return the full amount paid for any Watch if not to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

The Company's chief manufacture are their celebrated Crystal Glasses, which dispense with all risk of breakage. Their LADIES' and GENTLEMEN'S SILVER WATCHES, at 25s, and their LADIES' GOLD LEVERS, at 70s, are acknowledged to be the cheapest Watches in the world.

Catalogues, containing list of testimonials, and beautifully illustrated descriptions of more expensive watches, gold and silver jewellery, electro plate, &c., are sent gratis on application. We may safely assert that the prices in same will be a surprise to all who see them.

Mr. S. HISSEY, Vyse Street, Birmingham.

On receipt of which any watch will be registered post free to any part of the United Kingdom, and for 2s 6d per watch extra to any part of the postal world.

THE CRIMEA, 1854-5.

MR. KINGLAKE'S "APOLOGY" FOR THE "WINTER TROUBLES."[*]—No. III.

As far as I can make out, Mr. Kinglake's apology is based on the theory that the "Winter Troubles," as he mildly calls the state of things which elsewhere (p. 205) he describes as threatening, "not simply the weakening, but the virtual extinction of our Army," were mainly due to the flank march. By that march, he argues, the Allies abandoned the whole of the Crimea, except the bleak, open wold of the Chersonese, and deprived themselves of the supplies of food, forage, and fuel which the country would have yielded to them, if they had not gone round to the South side of Sebastopol, where the defences of the place stopped them in front, and the army of Liprandi, after the action of Balaklava on October 25, hemmed them in on the land side. The consequence was that the Armies became dependent for all their supplies (except wood fuel, in the early part of the siege) on their shipping and on home management. Of course, the theory implies that Mr. Kinglake thinks the Allies should have attacked the North side of Sebastopol after the battle of the Alma, that the siege was a mistake of the first magnitude, and that they might have wintered in the Crimea without difficulty or suffering. It may be that he is right as to the first part of his theory, but I do not think he is justified as to the final supposition. Surely, if any prophet could, on September 25, have drawn aside the veil which concealed the future from the gaze of the Allied Generals, and could have given them one little glimpse of the armies as they lay on the plateau on the South side in December, they would have resolved, at all hazards, to make a dash at the place. But it cannot be denied that there were most powerful arguments brought forward against the attack on the North side, and there is every reason now to think that even if it had succeeded, the loss would have been frightful, and the position of the Allies not very much improved. The powerful forts on the South side and the fire of the enemy's shipping would have swept the Northern plateau, after the fall of the Star Fort and of its auxiliary works. The army of Menschikoff would still have been in possession of the South side, and the whole of the country, with communications free, up to Perekop. The Allies, with open roadsteads for their shipping, instead of safe, if not commodious, harbours, would still have been immured between the sea and the Belbek, for the sunken ships and the forts would have denied our Fleet access to the inner waters of Sebastopol. It cannot be supposed that Russia would have accepted the battle of the Alma, or even the fall of Sebastopol, as decisive of the war; and the Allies were certainly not in a state, as regarded transport and cavalry, or even numerical strength, to advance upon Simpheropol, and hold the Crimea during the winter against the whole force of Russia. But if it could be proved to demonstration that the Allies ought to have attacked the North side, and that they would have succeeded, then the blame for the rejection of that measure, and for the adoption of the alternative, must be largely laid at Lord Raglan's door. On the day when the flank march was adopted on the Belbek (September 25) St. Arnaud was dying; Canrobert took his place at the council. The French proposed to fight their way round the head of the harbour, by the Inkerman Lighthouse Road. Sir John Burgoyne produced his scheme of the march by Mackenzie's Farm to the South side, so as to avoid the fire of the place; Lord Raglan eagerly embraced the plan, and enforced it with all his authority. It was English strategy which dictated the flank march. Mr. Kinglake says it was the Duke of Newcastle who was responsible, for he it was who uttered the fated word "siege; sent the fated gift, "the siege-train;" and the fated man, Burgoyne. But what becomes, again, of the "ascendancy" which the historian attributes to Lord Raglan, over the French and over the English alike? It cannot be admitted, at all events by Mr. Kinglake, that Lord Raglan was under the influence of French counsellors, or yielded his better judgment to the opinion of Sir John Burgoyne, f he insists on his Lordship's ever potent "ascendancy."

Hypothetical history—that is, the writings about historical matters which depend on "ifs"—is of no value. The virtue of one "if," great as it is, may be at once taken out of it by another "if" What Mr. Kinglake, as the writer of "The Invasion of the Crimea," &c., in this, his sixth volume, which deals with the "Winter Troubles," had to do, was to give a truthful narrative of the events which actually occurred in 1854-55, with such expressions of opinion and such just exercise of the critical faculty as become a sober historian. Instead of that, he lets loose on his readers a flood of invective, and deluges them in a torrent of hypothesis and conjecture. If the Allies had not gone to the South side, they would have enjoyed all the resources of the Crimea without let or hindrance, and their fate would have been very different from what it was,—so he asserts, if he means anything at all; and it would be of little use to point out to him that the Russians would in all probability have destroyed Bakshi Serai and Simpheropol, and have laid waste the country in their retreat, just as they set fire to Moscow in 1812, and as they devastated the villages on the Katcha and the Belbek in 1854; to remind him that a very large Allied force, Turks, French, and English, stationed at Eupatoria, could only command the ground under their guns, and were constantly menaced by the enemy; and finally, that Sebastopol was the ulcer which ate into the very heart of Russia, draining her resources and absorbing all her energies. The Crimea might, indeed, have become a great theatre of war, instead of being the scene of a famous siege; but it cannot be held that the Allies, even had they occupied Sebastopol, and thence spread over the Crimea, would have escaped all the results of the mismanagement which intensified the severities of the climate, or have become independent of the sea. The Allied Army was essentially an "expeditionary" force,—the objective was Sebastopol, and beyond it neither Ministers at home nor Generals abroad had care to look. Mr. Kinglake gives a sketch of the two systems of administration on which France and England had to rely respectively in the execution of such a work as wintering their armies, and the contrast is just as important and as marked to-day as it was in 1854-5. The French War Department was a Department of State, its Chief always a General or Marshal of France, and it was by the hands of soldiers organised in separate bodies that the Department ministered to troops in peace and war. England had no War Department. In time of war, the Colonial Office, which in peace-time dealt with Colonial affairs exclusively, became charged with the conduct of Military operations. There were, to be sure, a War Office and a Secretary at War; but they were engaged in keeping Military expenditure within Parliamentary limits; and there was the Horse Guards, which Mr. Kinglake is careful to call "a Royal, not a Government, Office," "the instrument" by which George III. and his successors "kept a personal grasp on our Army;" there were "nests of public servants transacting their bits of England's military business at the Tower, in the Strand, in Whitehall, in Pall Mall, some in strength at the Horse Guards, some at the Ordnance, some at the Admiralty, some buried under the roof of the Treasury, others burrowing in several small streets providing for the pay, pensions, transport, stores, equipments, recruits, medical, legal, and religious services of the Army, but there was not, till war approached, any high, over-ruling authority over these scattered Offices." The description of our military machinery is not much, if at all, exaggerated. But it may be remarked that the business of the French War Department, though it had the great advantage of being conducted by soldiers, was carried on in various places under different heads, and that it was not worked without friction, in spite of the existence of an over-ruling authority. With us, that authority is virtually represented by the House of Commons. Mr. Kinglake attributes what he terms "the dishevelled plight" of England's War Administration to "the monarchical surface of her polity," which may be translated, I suppose, as "her sham respect for the Crown." It might be more truly attributed to the jealousy of the Parliamentary factions in the State,—a jealousy which, under various forms, is still ever vigilant and active, and which interferes at all times with every detail of Army administration. But such as it is, the country wishes for such a dishevelled plight, and it must be content to pay the cost of its whim. We have yet to see—I hope not speedily—how "the real Commander-in-Chief," who is a "Cabinet of Civilians" (p. 20), will carry on a great war. It was surely a Cabinet of Civilians, and not a personal Monarch, which carried on the war in the Crimea. Mr. Kinglake's account of the old Horse Guards, "where the personal King transacted his Army business," with his vice-master to take his orders, who, "as though for a civil war already begun, was supported by a well-chosen staff, maintained on the footing of a head-quarters camp," with aides-de-camp and orderlies; and where finally, "whether importing a vow 'to have it out some day or other with the damnable Parliamentarians,' or for some other less warlike purpose, there were two ponderous troopers on horseback, riding each about twenty-two stone, who eternally, steadily, cheerfully looked across the gay road at Whitehall towards the site of the historic scaffold," (p. 25) is amusing to those who recollect the place and the people. It is wonderful the Horse Guards' clock was not included in the description of the machinery worked by the personal King in Whitehall; but Mr. Kinglake, if he likes to look in at Pall Mall, will find that Mr. Childers has very much the same apparatus close at hand, and he may observe the ponderous troopers still look more or less cheerfully at Lord Carington's house in Whitehall, though they are prudently retired before the sitting of Parliament every day except Wednesday, so as not to attract the attention of Republican Members. It was in that office Mr. Kinglake's demigod toiled at his desk for some thirty odd years, ere he was sent to command the Army in the Crimea. No man in the world probably would have been more indignant and astonished than Lord Raglan, had he been told his memory would be associated with the political doctrines which are rather insinuated than boldly avowed by his historian. If there was any one point connected with Army administration and the control of the Army on which the Duke of Wellington, whose "reign" Mr. Kinglake so much admires and belauds, was more vehement and instant than any other, it was that of the supremacy of the Crown. His despatches abound with strong expressions of his opinion that the control of the Army by the Chief of the State was a State necessity,—without it, the Monarchy might at any time be destroyed,—no evil perhaps, in the eyes of a philosoplical historian, but a fatal calamity in the eyes of the Duke of Wellington. There might be, he appeared to think, "little danger of having to see a battalion file in between the two doorkeepers of the House of Commons, "as was seen once when the Dictator of a Republic was in power;" but there might be some danger of the troops being employed in another direction not less fatally for the Constitution. In the excited declarations of an excitable King, extracted from "Rose's Diary," and certainly not official, "that Mr. Fox would not be admitted into his councils, even at the hazard of civil war," Mr. Kinglake actually finds warranty for the suggestion that a King of England, "within this century, might have contemplated the crime of choosing his own time to assail an unarmed people with splendid troops, long accustomed to regard him as their now supreme commander." (p. 27.) Surely the coup d'état of December 2, 1850, disorders Mr. Kinglake's judgment! By a compromise, which in any other country would be held to be most illogical, if not worse, the military chief at the Horse Guards gives, or is made to give, to the civilian at the War Office the power of nominating any Generals whom he and his colleagues may choose; and although Mr. Kinglake is much exercised by the way in which "the personal King" appointed officers to command in the old time, there was, I apprehend, far less danger from putting the power of selection in such hands, than in trusting it to the civilian chiefs of political parties. Nothing seems more constitutional than the Letter of Service by which a General in command of the Army in war time is placed under the direct instructions of the Ministers; and I do not see—I trust there are many as purblind—why "our troops should" not "hold with one master, yet faithfully serve the other," or how "the two objects" are "seemingly incompatible," if the constitutional doctrine be right, that the State is represented by the Queen, Lords, and Commons. In the end, indeed, after all his theoretical flourishes of his paper-knife against the "personal King" and his "satellites," Mr. Kinglake is obliged to confess that the Duke of Newcastle, from the outset of the war, exercised supreme control over all the Departments, and bent them to his will. The Duke had not the central machinery, it is said, to direct their energies; but if there was no obstruction, the machinery he had would surely work well enough, and a requisition which must be obeyed is no less an order because it is called a "requisition."

[*] See Army and Navy Gazette, November 6th and 13th.

In dealing with the obvious objection to his indictment against it, that the mechanism of our War Department was made to work brilliantly in the great war, Mr. Kinglake attributes the success to the genius of Wellington—who constructed an administrative system at the seat of war, whilst he dominated the Government at home by power of will—and to the creation by Mr. Dundas of Colonel Bunbury as Under-Secretary of State for War! It is wonderful that Mr. Kinglake should not have seen that his account of what was done by a real General was a sinister reflection on the conduct of the war by his ideal of what a General should be. Lord Raglan created no administration at the seat of war, he exercised no control over the Cabinet at home, and instead of having raised the Army under his command to a pitch of unsurpassed excellence, instead of creating such soldiery as those of whom Wellington said "they were the finest army man ever led," he presided over the decaying remnants of the battalions which won Alma and Inkerman, without any successful effort to save them from the condition which Lord John Russell described as "horrible, pitiable, and heartrending." I use the word "successful," because it would be false to say Lord Raglan did not make attempts and use all the means which his capacity and knowledge suggested to him to mitigate the sufferings with which his feeling heart so deeply sympathised. His poverty of resource, and not his will, consented to the fate of his troops. That it was a blunder and a crime to destroy the machinery of administration which grew up during the later years of the great war with France, every one must admit; but it was the work of Parliament, and not of the personal King, and it is simply untrue to say that the King's reigning son, "as ringleader, headed the movement for the reimposition of Palace authority, by the unsparing destruction" of our Military Administration.

It is not necessary to follow Mr. Kinglake through pages of invective against the Prince Regent, or to vindicate the Prince from "the guilt" of "sacrificing his country on the gross, reeking altar of self," for he gibbets the Government, the Lords and Commons, on the same tree, and puts the whole nation, along with the Prince, in his wordy pillory. "Far from saying, 'Beware!' to the Government, its Parliamentary opponents were approvers of the havoc they witnessed, and even strove their best, indeed, to give it a yet wider range." (p. 89.) But his animosity to such a control as is exercised by the Head of the State over the Army—greater in Republican than in Monarchical countries—is a positive mania. Mr. Kinglake denounces, as "serious blemishes," the remnants of personal government which are to be detected in the custom of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief taking the Queen's pleasure on the appointment of officers, and of the Judge-Advocate in person submitting to the Sovereign transactions within his Department, although the Orders in Council of 1872 have, as he points out, given the Secretary of State the power to insist that the grant of every commission, though still passing through the Horse Guards, shall be in uniformity with his will! He does not for an instant pause to tell his readers why an English Sovereign, of the race which certainly has not lacked personal courage and high military qualities out of England, should be so miserably inept and mischievous in war-time, when they sit on the throne of this country; or to show how and why the powers which were exercised by such men as Cromwell and William III., and Queen Anne and the first Georges, should have wrought such evil in the hands of George III. and the Prince Regent; why the functions exercised by Louis the Great, Frederick the Great, or Napoleon should be simply criminal abuses and acts of conspiracy and treachery against the State, if entrusted to English Constitutional Sovereigns. All this sort of disquisition must be meant to screen Mr. Kinglake's idol from close inspection,—lest the feet of clay should be detected on the pedestal. If any one ought to have known the defects which are alleged to have rendered our administrative machinery so entirely untrustworthy, it was surely the Master-General of the Ordnance, the Military Secretary, the man unsurpassed in his knowledge of every branch of the Army. Mr. Filder was, it seems, the first who was struck by the possible want of forage, and he communicated his apprehension to the Treasury on September 22, but it was not "till in November, when bleak winds and chill rains were already sweeping over the Chersonese," the Commissariat was instructed to meet what Mr. Kinglake describes "the last exigency," which had, "so far as we know, remained long unforeseen,—remained even unimagined beforehand by any of the thousands and thousands who were straining their gaze to see what the future might have in store." (p. 95.) As he is careful to pick up every little straw to put into his literary brick, he actually adduces, as a proof of Lord Raglan's foresight, that his Lordship had thought of the subject of winter quarters as early as August 8, and he quotes some vague and, as they seem to me, feeble words, as "impressive representations" to the Government. The words are, "The question where the Allied Armies should winter is one of some anxiety." "I am aware that if the great operation" (the invasion of the Crimea) "be undertaken, and be successful to the utmost extent, there would be room for the two armies in the Crimea; but under other circumstances it would be very difficult to find the means of putting them under cover." When Lord Raglan felt himself constrained to sit down before the place and open trenches, he knew that the great operation was not successful to the utmost extent. He may, however, be excused for not having sounded a note of warning at the end of September, as Sebastopol might fall in a few weeks; but when he saw the bombardment of October 17 had failed, surely the contingency ought to have stared him in the face and have demanded his instant attention? It did not, however. The army of Liprandi descended on the plain of Balaklava and closed the Woronzow Road to us on October 25, but it needed the terrible lesson of Inkerman—the field of neglected warnings—to open the eyes of the Head-quarters to what the future had in store. Then the measure taken by Lord Raglan had, at least, the merit of Napoleonic directness. "On November 8, he instructed his Commissary-General that our Army would winter in the Crimea, and 'directed him to make provision accordingly" (p. 2.)! There is no evidence produced by Mr. Kinglake, and if any existed, it is not probable he would overlook it, that the English Commander-in-Chief at once, with all needful force, pressed on the Government at home the supreme import of the change which had come upon the fortunes of the Expedition, and entreated them to concentrate their thoughts and energies on the supply of all things needed by an army under such conditions, without a moment's delay.

To say that Lord Raglan did not foresee what was to come upon his Army, is merely to accuse him of not being a prophet; to say that he did all that a great General and administrator would have done and would have forced others to do, is, I think, to say the thing which is not. The difficulties were, indeed, too much for the men who had to deal with them. What the Army needed was, first, food and shelter, clothing being included in the latter word; secondly, ammunition and siege matériel. I put the food and clothing in the first place, because it is evident that on them depended the ability of the Army to carry on any military operation whatever. The Generals, however, thought that the exigencies of the situation demanded that the first care should be given to the supply of guns, shot, shell, and ammunition. With a wild recklessness which ought to have been restrained, the troops had destroyed at Kadikoi and at Balaklava villas and dwellings which would have been invaluable as quarters and hospitals. The fine weather was treated as a permanent possession. Calvert's forecast of the climate and description of the possible future ought to have caused even a less considerate man than Lord Raglan to cast about him to provide for the supply of the camps, when the country between the plateau and Balaklava was converted into slush and mud; but we went on in a very vicious circle, gradually extending till the whole Army was within it. The men could not make the road, because they had to carry on the siege, and they could not carry on the siege, because they could not make the road, and so the works languished and the men died. It is scarcely credable that such a result was inevitable,—that it was in the fitness and necessity of things that it should have been. For my own part, I refuse to think so. The recollection of the misery I witnessed then haunts me like a hideous dream. The sights to be witnessed on a battle-field fill the mind with images of horror, and touch the heart with pity and grief beyond words; but somehow or other the impression is effaced by contact with the continuing necessities of war. It is the burning anger and fierce resentment which were aroused, by the aspect of the charnel-houses called hospitals, by the sight of the soldiers of an Army whom no foe could vanquish perishing in rags of cold and hunger, where clothing and food were close at hand, that can never die out. Mr. Kinglake would ask us now to hold a fire in our hand, by thinking on the frosty Caucasus. He sets forth in detail the great sufferings of the French Army in the winter. They were great, indeed, and it must be at once admitted that omelettes cannot be made without breaking eggs, and that the best-provided army, condemned to carry on a winter siege in the Crimea with open trenches, must have endured cruel losses. The French had vast distances to traverse from Kamiesch and Kazatch to the camps on our right and rear, they were exposed to incessant sorties, they had no cessation from work in pushing on trench and parallel, they had inferior rations and wretched tents, but their condition was infinitely superior to ours. In December, 1854, when they had in the field 65,000 men, they had 6,432 admissions into hospital. In the same month, out of a strength of less, much less, than half that of the French, we had 9,259 men in hospital. In February, 1855, when the French mustered 89,000 men, they had 8,298 in hospital. That same month with a strength of 31,000, we had no less than 13,608 men in our ambulances. "But," says Mr. Kinglake, "Death—only Death—kept down to its actual limit the before-given number of 13,608, and prevented it from reaching 22,506, for that last would have been the number in our hospitals at the close of February, if the patients there treated during the period of the same four months had been all alive and well." (pp. 202-3.) In other words, 8,898 men perished in hospital, between the beginning of November and the end of February, out of our small army.

The hideous filth and disorder of the Levantine hospitals—what Mr. Kinglake terms "heinous defects"—had much to do with the tearful mortality; in some, more than half the patients died. There, at all events, the French were in all respects better. But Lord Raglan had, it seems, thought that of all men in the world, Sir George Brown was a safe guide to take on hospital economy! He had received a report from Sir George that the hospitals were all right! I do not wish to say one word against that gallant old soldier, but he was certainly the last man in the Army I should have gone to for an opinion on such a subject. He was for ever at war with his doctors, because of their efforts to secure the ease of their sick; and there are some of the Light Division alive who will remember the words of the camp song:—

> Comforts no trule Peninsular hero possessed.
> When shot through the leg, o'er a mule I was thrown,
> Ere your d——d ambulances, thank goodness! were known.
> So pipe-clay your jackets, and buckle your stocks,
> Away with moustaches and dirt-breeding locks,

Our state was indeed awful. I shall quote Mr. Kinglake's words:—

> "During a period of only seven months, from Oct. 1, 1854, to the end of April, 1855, and out of an average strength of only 28,939, there perished in our hospitals, or on board our invalid-transport ships, 11,652 men, of whom 10,053 died from sickness alone. And those who survived suffered beyond belief. The fate of those who died was often enviable. And yet desertions were not numerous; some preferred suicide."

Mr. Kinglake says:—

> "At the time, no extended comparison could well be even attempted between the condition of the French Army and that of the English, because the one had its sufferings veiled by the will of an absolute Government, whilst the other lay under that glare which extreme publicity sheds, and afforded all the materials for what was, perhaps, a more searching scrutiny and a more keen-eyed criticism than had ever before been applied to the labours of men simply trying to feed, clothe, and shelter an army."

Well, and from my point of view, the comment I would make, accepting the statement as true, would be simply this. The official veil which concealed the sufferings of the French Army in the first winter, covered their graves in the winter that followed; the publicity which was given to the sufferings of the British Army in the first winter, not only saved them from suffering in the winter that followed, but gave them, in every attribute of military fitness, all the conditions which made them in all but number the equal of their Allies—in some, indeed, their superiors—for the prosecution of the war. The labours of Mr. Kinglake and my own, and the writings which aroused the wrath of the people, would have been unneeded or abortive, had Lord Raglan cast aside the official veil, and told the country and the Ministry the truth. Because he tried to conceal it from the public gaze, or only let it peep out, he was accused of either ignoring or being indifferent to it. Is it surprising that when the truth became known there was an outcry—that when people heard of a regiment 1,000 strong, which had not endured much loss in battle, having dwindled down to 30, some said seven men,* of another † that in a few days after landing it had but a handful of men for duty, and that of the Brigade of Guards, reinforced by strong draughts, there were left but 312 men, and so on, they should flame with rage? As he is depicted to us by his historian, Lord Raglan did all he could, no doubt to his great surprise, to incur this odium; "for being by nature both calm and sanguine, and having almost to a foible the habit of detecting a humorous element in the bearing of men overwrought by anxiety" (!), "he was blessed, on the whole, with a freedom from despondency so instinctive, so genuine, that to give to his camp and his people the appearance of resolution and strength, he had only to obey the dictates of his own temperament, and was thus in a measure relieved from what would have been to him the irksome, unfitting task of trying to act a part" (p. 224)! He created, then, an erroneous impression? It is vain to describe his correspondence as a "complete repertory of all that a Minister in London, who was labouring for the welfare of the Army, could usefully wish to know," if it be true that he liked to indulge in "buoyantly worded" sentences, tending "to chase away gloom," and "by the subtle power of language, gliding in alongside of harsh facts," give to the struggles of his army for existence a picture "of animated, successful labour." No wonder "the Secretary of State did not take the alarm which the sinister facts seemed to warrant, when they were put before him in such a shape."

Was it wise or necessary on the part of Mr. Kinglake to rake up the ashes of the fierce passions which had burned so many years ago? Was it prudent to wake up the memories of so much disaster and so many sorrows? In doing this ill-omened piece of work, Mr. Kinglake has affronted the consciences of the living and trampled on the graves of the dead. Nothing has been sacred from the hand of the iconoclast who has struck right and left, that he may rear up an altar to his idol on the ruins of inminciable reputations. He has found it meet for his purpose to assail the military capacity of our Allies, to cast doubts on their courage, and to cover their leaders with obloquy; he has deluged our statesmen with ridicule and abuse; he has torn the dead out of their graves, and he has, at the same time, put up a little row of forcible-feeble puppets, whom he has invested with the attributes of greatness, because they were, he thought, followers of his new religion. Not one word of sympathy or generous consideration is bestowed on a Government tortured by enigmatic sentences; on Ministers maddened, in the midst of popular tumult, by the "divine calm" of an oracle who could not speak; on a people, sickening in the gloom of that terrible winter for a ray of light—even though it were to show them the terrible truth. To my mind, the despatch of Lord Panmure, which Mr. Kinglake lashes so savagely, is in every word a justifiable remonstrance. Well might he ask Lord Raglan who had made any imputation against his honour? Well might he say that, had the Duke of Newcastle "exhibited less of magnanimity in personally confronting the storm of popular indignation, it would have rolled more heavily on you." Lord Raglan carried his point, after all. The Staff were all retained, and the past was forgiven. It was the Minister who suffered. But the British Army, ere the war was ended, never had the chance of wiping off the dust of the Redan which obscured the brightness of its early victories. For my own part, as I have said before, nothing would have induced me to have said or written a word on the winter troubles, but for the appearance of Mr. Kinglake's book. I believe that the miseries of our Army would not have been made known in time to save them by any critical examination of Lord Raglan's despatches; that the heart of the nation would never have been stirred to help by his words; and that help might have come too late. As to the charge that I, and those like me who shouted for succour, might have given aid to the enemy, I care as little as I would do if I were rebuked for calling out "Fire!" to save the lives of the inmates of a burning house, because I invited the attention of the burglars to their opportunity.

WILLIAM HOWARD RUSSELL.

On Thursday next, the corps of Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers will have completed the seventh year of its existence. This force was raised, under Act of Parliament, in November, 1873, as a purely Volunteer corps, receiving no State aid in money, but only in the use of drill-ships, gunboats, a staff of paid instructors, arms, and a certain amount of ammunition. To quote a pamphlet written by Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., when the corps was first established:—"Coast defence, and not service at sea, constitutes the especial sphere for the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers." Further on, Mr. Brassey explains that by "coast defence" he means particularly the defence of the most important of our commercial harbours, by floating batteries, armed rafts, and torpedoes. It was thought that the corps would be chiefly recruited from "persons who, while not possessing the wider experience of the seaman, were accustomed to the management of boats, and in the constant habit of going afloat." We believe that not many persons of this description have joined the Naval Volunteers, but that the force is chiefly composed of business men. There are now altogether about 1,200 Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers attached to the head-quarter brigades of London, Liverpool, and Bristol, and the district brigades of Brighton, Hastings, Southport, &c. At the head-quarters brigades, the members have the use of her Majesty's drill-ships, and they are instructed by a paid staff of officers and petty-officer instructors, attached to each brigade. In the summer, a gunboat is sent to every brigade, and the men who wish it are taken out for a week's cruise, which is chiefly utilised in target practice. The officers commanding these gunboats all testify as to the smart manner in which the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers work the guns, but as yet, no torpedo class has been formed for their instruction. We believe that the corps has not increased much in number of late years. There is no lack of men who wish to join it, but are unable to pay the cost of their uniform. When the force was first raised, donations and subscriptions to start it freely came in. But since November, 1873, the country has passed through an unparalleled time of depression, and the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers have consequently suffered. Donations and subscriptions are falling off every year, and it is, therefore, now doubtful whether the corps can flourish long without receiving the same State aid as the land Volunteers. The Secretary of the Admiralty last Session, in reply to a question from the senior Member for Liverpool, said that the subject of a capitation grant for the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers would perhaps be discussed by the Admiralty, when the Navy Estimates for 1881 were under consideration. The Naval Volunteers would supply a real want during war, by adding to the force available for coast defence, and thus relieving others who would be required for strengthening our foreign squadrons; and we hope that the force will not be allowed to die for want of help. In another column will be found a speech by Mr. Brassey, in which he confidently asserts that if this State aid were given in the form of a capitation grant, corps of Naval Volunteers would be established at all our mercantile ports of importance. This view will, we hope, meet with the support of the House of Commons, should the Admiralty be induced to suggest this measure being carried out, for it is plain that too much is now being expected of those who enrol themselves as Naval Artillery Volunteers. We would also call the attention of the Mercantile Port Defence Committee, just appointed, to this matter, for there can be no question that, next to the question of the provision of defences and fortifications, comes that of having trained men ready at hand to put into them. For working guns of position the Naval Volunteers are specially trained, and we hope that the corps will meet with that consideration to which their seven years of entirely voluntary service entitles them. The force has been highly spoken of by inspecting officers, and it would be short-sighted economy to allow the movement to die for want of a helping hand.

Our "best possible teachers" and leaders—the "leader" writers—are beginning to discover that the cost of "Empire" is heavy. As the Yankee whom we quoted some time ago observed, "If you Britishers will go a-empiring it over the world, you must be prepared to pay for the pleasure, now and then." It is quite out of the range of practical politics to try to establish a "pax Romana" all over our dominions. It cannot be done, even in India Proper. A Naga trouble or a dacoity outbreak may at any moment become something like a little war, and as far as our rulers choose to push their frontiers, they will be sure to find just outside, or somewhere beyond their borders, a chief or a people threatening the peace of their subjects. Some of these disturbances are caused by our own unrest, or by the necessity, real or imaginary, of local and Colonial politics. Such a one seems to be what is called "the Basuto rebellion," which is not a rebellion proper, but the resistance of the Basutos in their own land to the measure of disarmament which the Cape Government deemed imperative. No doubt, officers like Clarke and Carrington at the head of the Colonial troops, many of whom have had experience in the late wars, will ultimately have reason of their enemies, but the results of such operations on the trade and progress of the Colonies must be very mischievous. We see that Sir G. Colley has gone to consult with Mr. Brownlee on the measures to be adopted for the safety of his charge, and there is evident danger that if the Europeans are drawn off to remote fields of action, the Kaffirs in Natal may be encouraged to try if their strength against us be proportionate to their numbers. It is announced that Commandant Ferreira, C.M.G., the partisan who achieved a high reputation for leadership in the recent campaigns, is about to call his old troopers in the Transvaal back to his standard; and as it was stated a short time ago that his offers of service had been repeated, it would seem as if the pressure on the local authority had increased. Ferreira is a Dutchman, with Portuguese blood, and until recently was thought to be of the Boer persuasion in politics. The Orange River Free State appears to be sitting still, and if it can keep out of the fray, it is very wise, in the interests of its own people, to do so, but such an attitude will not tend to conciliate the colonists outside its territory. The force of 10,000 men to be kept at Candahar for the winter will necessitate a large outlay, and cause a serious addition to the heavy demands on the exhausted exchequer of India. Those who were of opinion that it would have been the best policy to have pursued Ayoub Khan to Herat, may find arguments in favour of their views in the accounts which have reached us of his hostile attitude and preparations. In fact, the outlook on the North-West Frontier is by no means bright or promising. At such a moment, the condition of the Bombay Army is a question of grave importance. We are inclined to think that the defects and the merits of that Army are alike exaggerated; and that under good leadership, even if the Bombay troops were really as bad as their detractors say they are, they would dispose of an Afghan enemy in the open with considerable ease. As yet, there has been little or nothing said on Major-General Burrows's side of the question with respect to the action at Kushk-i-Nakhud, but none of the criticisms we have read seem to have taken into account the difficulties of that officer, once Ayoub Khan had come within striking distance. Burrows had orders not to cross the Helmund. He had also orders to cover Ghuznee. How was he to effect that object? Had he retreated after the mutiny and flight of the Wali's troops, all India —and England—would have rung with reproaches against a General who had evinced a spirit which would have petrified Clive, Napier, or Havelock with astonishment and disgust. We are not now concerned so much with the merits of General Burrows' conduct of the action as we are in asking for a fair field for his defence, if he has one; but we may remark that the actual tactical disposition which he made does not appear to us to have been so very bad as some critics say it was. It had, at all events, the merit of affording perfect cover to the Infantry, whose loss was quite insignificant, till the mêlée began; and as to its being outflanked, we can only say we are not aware of any tactical disposition which would have prevented 20,000 men from outflanking a force of little more than 2,000. It may be that the days of Plassey and Meeanee are gone for ever, but there will certainly be more need of caution and skilful handling on the part of British officers, when they are opposed to forces ten times as numerous as those under their orders, than there was wont to be. The praise bestowed on Roberts and Stewart, and on their men, by Lord Ripon, was well won; but surely nobler soldiers never fought than the men of the 66th Regiment, of the Sappers, and of their fellows, who fell at the disastrous battle of Kushk-i-Nakhud. It would be useless to speculate on what Roberts would have done, or not have done, had he been in Burrows's place, but it may be safely assumed that so good a soldier will make great allowance for the difficulties of the officer whose misfortunes enabled him to find a theatre for the display of his brilliant leadership. This week, and perhaps some weeks to come, will be Roberts's own. And so they ought to be. The country honours itself in doing honour to such worthy sons as he. The march on Candahar and the defeat of Ayoub Khan were feats which without chauvinism may be described, each in its own way, as an exemplification of high, soldierly conception executed with a remarkable force and precision. The impression created by General Roberts's deeds will, we think, be enhanced, if that were possible, by his words, and by his generous readiness to claim a share in his honours for the officers and soldiers of the Army who won them for him. These men will recognise the qualities which in the field inspire troops with the confidence and affection that are such potent auxiliaries to a General's success. A great General may win battles with troops ruled by fear rather than by love, but a General who touches his soldiers hearts, and at the same time inspires them with a full reliance on his skill, is, or ought to be, irresistible.

* The 63rd Regiment. † 9th Regiment.

The First Lord of the Admiralty, the Earl of Northbrook, left his official residence on Saturday for a visit to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. Duty, however, soon recalled his lordship to town, as he had to be present at one of those Cabinet Councils which happen to be rather frequent at the present time.

After the late warlike speech of the King of Greece, it is not surprising to find that that country is bent upon strengthening her Navy. But, after all, ordering four new gunboats to be built in England will not strike terror into the breast of a possibly hostile Power, which is in possession of a fleet of some proportions.

Commodore Wilson was at Melbourne on November 1, and was about to sail in the Wolverene for Adelaide, and would return to Sydney by the end of the present month.

Acting Sub-Lieutenants Pakenham, of the Alexandra, and MacAlister, of the Invincible, have returned to England from the Mediterranean. for the purpose of passing their examination at the Royal Naval College and in gunnery.

It is uncertain whether the trials of the Inflexible's guns in the Channel will take place before Christmas. It was intended that they should have been carried out this month, but delays in completing the fittings have occurred, and it is also desirable to have the guns' crews well drilled and efficient before putting to sea for the test trials.

France is alive to the necessity for keeping up her hydrographic service, and a special surveying-vessel, to be named the Chimère, has been ordered to be laid down at Rochefort. She is quite a small craft, and will be used only on the home station.

A number of armourers are to be selected from the gunnery ships to pass through a course of training that will fit them for employment as torpedo artificers, the demand for that class being larger than the present supply.

The celebration of the tercentenary of the return of Sir Francis Drake to Plymouth, after his circumnavigation of the globe, is, we are pleased to hear, likely to become a national affair. The interest with which the proposed commemoration has been taken up at Plymouth, has led to the idea of obtaining the assistance of the Lord Mayor of London. We wish the movement every success.

There is something peculiar in the laying-up of the Livadia at Ferrol for the winter. The reason given is that the yachting season is now over in the Black Sea, so she will remain at Ferrol until April. Members of the Imperial family will then come all that way to join her, and visit some places of interest in the Mediterranean, that being apparently considered a much more suitable arrangement than joining her in the Crimea, and starting thence for the Mediterranean.

Commander the Hon. Horatio Hood, commanding the Pegasus, has recently been permitted to pay a visit of inspection to the Chinese Arsenal at Shanghai, where a considerable amount of work has lately been going on in making preparation against the possibilities of war with Russia.

The delay in the sailing of the squadron under the command of Lord Clanwilliam has necessitated some alteration in the intended programme. No stay will be made at St. Vincent, where the Squadron arrived on Wednesday, and the intended call at Bahia has been ordered by the Admiralty to be abandoned. The cause of this is chiefly owing to the fact of the port not being in possession of a clean bill of health, and if the Squadron communicated with the shore, quarantine would be exacted by the authorities at Monte Video on the arrival of the ships at that port.

We pointed out last week that the Fawn was idly waiting for those orders to pay off which the Admiralty had apparently forgotten to give. We are now assured that the necessary orders have been issued this week, and that the vessel will shortly arrive at Malta to pay off and refit for a further commission on surveying service.

The Admiralty has decided on the abolition of the old-fashioned light allowance on board troopships, the lighting being in future undertaken at the cost of the Crown, lamps and other fittings being supplied as they have been hitherto on board the Indian troopships. This is another result of the amalgamation of the Indian and Imperial trooping service.

Eton, Winchester, and Charterhouse have been asked to assist the Admiralty in coming to a conclusion. Their Lordships are perplexed on the question of throwing open Naval cadetships to competition, and before they make so radical a change, Lord Northbrook wants to know whether competition among small boys has harmful effects. We should strongly advise the Admiralty to leave well alone, and not to take from the Service the privilege of nominations by throwing open cadetships to all comers. What with compulsory retirement and long spells of half-pay, the Service leads to little for the majority; and to take away from old Naval officers the chance of a nomination for a son, as a reward for long service on small pay, will be unkind indeed.

A change of station has been approved for the Dwarf, and the next Navy List will show her as ordered to the South-East coast of America, where she will relieve the Elk. The Rambler takes the place of the Dwarf on the Cape command.

A limited number of new entries as stokers are in future to be drafted to troopships as supernumeraries, so as to gain early experience in stoking. Troopships being always under steam, we congratulate their Lordships on so excellent an idea.

The revised Admiralty Regulations for the supply of furniture to official houses in the occupation of Naval and Marine officers holding appointments for periods not exceeding five years, and of plate, linen, &c., to Admirals and officers in command of her Majesty's ships, have now been so long practically tested, that the value and convenience of the system, so far as officers are concerned, may be fairly commented upon. When first instituted, and before its advantage was fully appreciated, there were many officers, having furniture of their own, who considered it hard to be compelled to store or part with it, and then pay a per-centage for the use of Government furniture, which they could have done without; but the growth of the system has gradually worked a change in their opinions, and now officers who become, by promotion or appointment, placed in a position to come under the Regulations quoted, are quite prepared to take advantage of the system. A per-centage of 7½ per cent. per annum is charged for the use of the furniture, and no further demand is made unless the depreciation exceeds fifteen per cent.; or for replacement, or depreciation occasioned by manifest ill-usage, or culpable neglect. The first occupants of a house newly furnished, of course, pay the highest annual charge as they are assessed, the per-centage on the first cost of the furniture; but as a new valuation takes place on every successive occupancy, the depreciation from fair wear-and-tear in the course of a few years reduces the value of the whole, and therefore the annual payment, to subsequent tenants. The system, altogether, appears of so much advantage to officers who are constantly on the move, that we hope in course of time to see it applied in its entirety to messes both afloat and on shore, to cabins, barrack-rooms, and all occupied houses; so that any officer, on being removed from one ship to another, or from any one Admiralty establishment on shore to another, may have only his personal baggage with which to encumber himself, knowing that he can walk into a furnished apartment, for which he will pay the regulated hire. If the Admiralty find the system answers pecuniarily on the present limited scale, it stands to reason it would pay better still if ramified to its fullest extent.

An unexpected vacancy has arisen by the retirement of Captain Duncan Davidson, who last commanded the Serapis. Age would not have compulsorily removed Captain Davidson from the Active List of Captains until 1888. Captain Davidson has seen some good service, and wears the Burmese, Baltic, Crimea, Turkish, and China medals, with clasps for Sebastopol, Taku, and Canton.

A paper will be read at the Shipmasters' Society, St. Mary Axe, on the 25th inst., at 3 p.m., by Commander T. A. Hull, R.N., late Superintendent of Admiralty Charts, entitled, "The Use of Admiralty Charts in the Practice of Common and Proper Piloting."

The Admiralty has received a telegram, dated 12th inst., from the senior naval officer at the Cape of Good Hope, reporting the arrival of the Miranda, and announcing that no castaways have been found on Inaccessible Island.

Admiral Ryder returned to Portsmouth from leave of absence on Saturday, and re-hoisted his flag on board the Duke of Wellington, when the flag of Rear-Admiral the Hon. Fitzgerald A. C. Foley was transferred to the Asia.

Rear-Admiral W. Gore Jones, C.B., was in the Euryalus at Rangoon up to October 22. He arrived on October 17, and would sail for Trincomalee on October 29.

As we are aware that there is a very considerable want of artificers in the Fleet, and that the Admiralty has recently asked the authorities at the Home ports to devise the best means of obtaining men of this class, it is rather surprising that we should still receive letters from the "centres of industry" asking for instructions as to the admissions into the Navy. An apprentice in a large shipbuilding-yard writes this week seeking particulars as to pay, position, &c., of Naval artificers, as he is desirous of joining. Where one man writes to us, a score do not give the matter a passing thought, as they naturally suppose that if they were wanted the Admiralty would make the fact known. Surely their Lordships must have heard of advertising, and they might try it with advantage at Birkenhead and Hull.

Dr. William Macleod, Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets, who for so long was in charge of the hospital at Yarmouth, has been appointed a civil C.B., by Gazette notice, dated November 11. We are glad to see this officer's services thus recognised, and we would at the same time suggest that there are just one or two officers of other civil branches of the Naval Service whose names might fairly be submitted to her Majesty for some special mark of favour for their services, some of which have been exceptional. Dr. Macleod was appointed, January, 1842, assistant-surgeon of the Wolverene, fitting for the East Indies, and on October 1, 1845, was transferred to the Agincourt, also in the East Indies. He subsequently served in the Prince Regent, with the summer squadron, and in the Mediterranean from December, 1847, until promoted to surgeon, August, 1853. In December following he was appointed to the Racehorse, and in February, 1854, removed into the Driver, fitting for the Baltic, and remained until the close of the Russian War. In March, 1857, he joined the Melville, fitting for the East Indies, and in December, 1858, was appointed to the Madagascar at Rio de Janeiro, and remained until 1863. He was staff surgeon in the St. George, at Portland, from February, 1864, until promoted, June 25, 1866, to deputy-inspector of hospitals, and from the following month, until July, 1880, was employed as principal medical officer at the Royal Hospital at Yarmouth. Dr. Macleod is in receipt of Sir Gilbert Blane's medal.

A correspondent, writing from Queenstown, says, in allusion to the arrival of the Channel Squadron, that the ships took up their station in Cork Harbour in a most seaman-like style, to the admiration of all lookers-on. The officers are receiving all the civilities possible of the local gentry, but the sailors cannot yet be granted leave.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., remains at Badsic, and a telegram from that place on Thursday states that:—"The breeze of the morning gradually increased to a gale, and culminated at about 2 p.m. in a rapid succession of terrific squalls from various quarters. The gun-vessels spun round like tops, and had to let go second anchors. The ironclad Friedland had to do the same, as she was dragging on to the Russian flagship, which had steam up. The English squadron struck their lower yards and topmasts." According to intelligence received at Constantinople, the commanders of the squadrons forming the International Fleet have informed Sir Beauchamp Seymour, in answer to his inquiry, that they would support Montenegro, should Prince Nicholas have to attack Dulcigno in order to gain possession of the place.

Cetewayo—once a king, now a prisoner in a wooden box in Cape Town Castle—with three women, if not four, in attendance on him, is rationed like a convict by the Cape Government, or by the Crown. In seven days they get 15 lb. of fresh beef, 9 lb. bread, 6 lb. potatoes, 1 lb. (!) coffee, 2 lb. sugar, 3 oz. (!) salt, 2 (!) candles, 1 bar of soap. His four male attendants would seem to fare better, if we understand the Blue-book return rightly, for they are on the usual native rations. There is no mention of "Cape smoke."

On November 1 there were on the Establishment of General officers, Line, Guards, and Cavalry, including a few officers retired for age and not reckoning colonels of regiments, six generals, eighty-nine lieutenant-generals, 149 major-generals, whose pay at 25s. per diem, including four General officers from the Guards, amounts to £111,901 per annum. By the proposed scheme, giving generals £850, lieutenant-generals £725, and major-generals £600, the six generals would receive £5,100; eighty-nine lieutenant-generals, £64,525; 149 major-generals, £89,400,—total cost, £159,025, making the additional pay for the first year for these 244 officers £47,124. Besides these there are seven Royal Horse Artillery General officers, now at £1 12s. per diem, and twenty others of Artillery and Engineers at 26s. per diem, whom we have not included in the above calculations, and who would also have to be placed on the new scale of pay. During the three years ending Sept. 30, 1880, twenty colonelcies of regiments fell vacant by death, therefore we may fairly assume that seven of these appointments, £9,000 a year, will drop in. Thirteen lieutenant-generals and seven major-generals on the Unattached List also paid the debt of Nature during the past three years, and we may calculate upon about five lieutenant-generals and two major-generals as the average annual mortality in future, effecting a saving at the new rates of,—five lieutenant-generals at £725, £3,625; two major-generals at £600, £1,200; and add, say, one general at £850; also seven colonelcies of regiments, £7,000,—total, £12,675. The additional expense (£47,124) of the new scheme, as above shown, will, therefore, be absorbed in rather less than four years, provided but few colonels are promoted to the rank of major-general. The scheme will press hardly and unfairly on the colonels, but it will be a welcome boon to the junior General officers, who have now to wait ten years, and upwards, for honorary colonelcies. It is, of course, assumed that General officers already on the Retired List for age, and those to be placed on it, according to new regulations, will share with their comrades retained on the Active List the liberal scale of pay, as all are equally entitled to the eventual position of colonels of regiments. It would be a graceful boon to confer on them, in their turn, the honorary colonelcies of regiments, with some slight additional pay. The case of the colonels whose promotion will be stopped is deserving of the most serious consideration. Meantime, between this date and April 1, we hope that the few vacancies which may occur among the Generals' list will be liberally and fairly filled up.

It is satisfactory to be able to relegate to obscurity, for some months to come, the "prospect" of a conflict between Russia and China. From advices received from Central Asia, it seems that the mountain passes connecting Kuldja with Kashgaria are blocked with snow, rendering a Chinese invasion impossible; while in the Amoor region, the advent of winter has dismissed from the minds of the Vladivostock officials any fear of a land siege or naval bombardment, before next April or May. By that time a more satisfactory feeling may have arisen between the two Powers, although it is impossible not to admit that circumstances are strongly opposed to a peaceful solution of the Kuldja question. Even should China waive her claim to the province, Russia is understood to have in readiness a claim for expenses incurred in war preparations in the Pacific, while should she prudently refrain from presenting this, the shiftless character of Chinese rule in Kashgaria is likely to provoke, at no distant date, an occupation of Kashgar and Yarkund, to put down the disorders reigning in those distant cities.

We are pleased to learn that steps are at length being taken to establish a United Service Home, for soldiers and sailors of the Royal Navy, at Barbados. The want of such an institution has long been greatly felt at the station. The institution will, it is hoped, after a time be self-supporting, but it is indispensable that a sum of £1,200 to £1,400 should be obtained, before it can be opened. His Excellency the Governor of Barbados and the Major-General commanding the troops in the West Indies have expressed their entire approval of and sympathy with the undertaking, and the Vice-Admiral Commanding-in-Chief on the station has given his cordial support. Cheques of persons contributing in the United Kingdom should be forwarded to Messrs. Cox and Co., Craig's Court, S.W., and made payable to the credit of "Barbados United Service Home Fund."

Major-General Sir Frederick Roberts arrived at Dover on Tuesday, and was loudly cheered as soon as he was distinguished on deck. General Roberts was accompanied by the following officers, who had travelled with him from India, viz.:—Generals Hill, Macpherson, Baker, and Gough; Colonel Chapman; Majors Woodthorpe, Prettyman, and Kennedy; Captain Holditch, R.E., and Lieut. Childers, R.E. After receiving a most enthusiastic welcome from the Mayor and Corporation, and a large assemblage gathered in the Maison Dieu Hall, where an address was duly read and replied to by the General, the party proceeded to Victoria. A more informal but not less hearty welcome awaited the successful General, not only from the many distinguished friends assembled to meet him, but from a large and enthusiastic crowd. This was the conclusion of a journey which commenced with a little triumphal progress on the Indus Valley, and was attended with great demonstrations of respect and honour at Allahabad. At Bombay there was no formal or public reception, but enthusiastic greetings of the public attended the General's departure from India, as they have welcomed him to his own country.

The public generally, and the Army particularly, are eagerly asking what is to be Sir Frederick Roberts's reward. If precedent be taken as a guide, he cannot get less than a peerage and pension. Sir John Keane was thus rewarded for the capture of Ghuznee, which was an exploit creditable only to the storming party, who had to risk their lives in a desperate venture, because the General had omitted to bring on his heavy guns from Candahar. Sir Garnet Wolseley was offered a baronetcy, and actually received £25,000 in cash, for his march to Coomassie and back. Sir Frederick Roberts's achievements have surely been of a much higher order than those mentioned above. His march was one of the most remarkable exploits in history, and his skilfully-planned and well carried-out victory at Candahar was a feat of which any General might be proud.

At Kalisch, in Poland, a most disgraceful affair has just taken place. The Colonel of the Emperor's Hussars had a quarrel with one of his captains, which ended in a challenge being sent by the latter. The colonel very properly reported the case, and the superior Authorities decided that it should be investigated by a court-martial at Petrokoff. One day the captain went to the regimental office, to see whether his papers had been sent to Petrokoff. On leaving, he met the colonel, and said, "Colonel, your conduct towards me is mean and ungentlemanly." The colonel drew his revolver, and aiming at the captain's head, exclaimed, "Another word, and I fire!" The captain replied, "You are a scoundrel!" The colonel on this pulled the trigger, but the weapon snapped. He then shouted "Away with you!" but the captain, who had drawn his sword, and held it so that the handle should partly cover his face, answered, "No! fire at me if you dare. Heaven perhaps will protect me." The colonel did fire, the bullet striking the captain in the cheek, and coming out behind the lower jaw. The captain then turned, when the colonel pulled the trigger a third time, and wounded his resistless victim in the left hand. A Staff captain then came up, and had the wounded man removed to an hotel, where he was attended to by a surgeon. The most strange part of the story is yet to be told. The colonel proceeded at once to Warsaw, whence he returned three days later, and resumed command of his regiment; the captain being sent under arrest to Warsaw, in order, we imagine, when recovered, to be tried by court-martial.

The candidates for the Army, whether they seek to obtain their commissions through the Militia or Sandhurst, as a rule spend their years of preparation in a very discreditable manner. In fact they are but slightly superior to the typical "'Arry." Their idea of "seeing life" is to haunt drinking bars, get frequently drunk, lounge away hours talking to barmaids or girls in tobacconists' shops, and indulge in every sort of low profligacy. Over the Militia candidates, even during training, very slight supervision is exercised out of it, there is none at all. At many "crammers'" there is not even a pretence of discipline or control; and when these raw lads arrive in London for examination, they gather in gangs, indulge in perfect saturnalia, and are a nuisance at half the places of public amusement. Some thirty years ago, youngsters were dissipated enough, possibly they were even faster than they are now. But their dissipation—if they were gentlemen—was of a gentlemanlike character; whereas now, the candidates for the Army are low in their vices. The best remedy for this state of things would be to insist that every one who aspires to a commission should go to Sandhurst, between the ages of 14 and 16, and remain there for two or three years. The present building would, if the old system were reverted to, hold quite 400 cadets, and with very little expense accommodation could be provided for another 200.

We publish in another column a complete list of the vacancies which have occurred since January 1 last among the General Officers on the fixed establishment, with particulars as to the number of absorptions and the promotions which should have passed to the senior colonels on the list of the Cavalry and Infantry of the Line, &c., according to the ruling of the Royal Warrant. It will be seen from this that there have been altogether twenty-nine vacancies by death and retirement. The first vacancy occurred on January 2, when General G. A. Malcolm, C.B., colonel of the 105th Foot, was placed on the Retired List. General Malcolm's retirement gave no promotion, the vacancy being absorbed. Now, the Royal Warrant distinctly lays down that, "after the promotion of effective General officers, provided for in Art. 30, one vacancy in every three among General officers of our Cavalry and Infantry shall be absorbed." It follows, therefore, that there should have been nineteen promotions, and the list we publish shows how these should have been accorded. As a matter of fact, however, only thirteen steps have been given, whilst two have still to be gazetted. So that the senior officers in the rank of colonel, major, and captain respectively have been robbed of the benefit of four runs of promotion, a serious matter to them, considering that the fiat has gone forth for the discontinuance of all seniority promotions and the total abolition of a fixed establishment. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that those in authority have intentionally been guilty of an act of gross injustice. There has, doubtless, been some misconception as to the operations of the Warrant, and we feel sure that we have only to call attention to the subject for the errors to be rectified. The following shows the promotions which are due to the officers, commencing from July 1 last:—

In succession to General Lord G. A. F. Paget, K.C.B., colonel 4th Hussars, died July 1: Colonel L. E. Knight, half-pay, late 81st Foot, to be major-general; Major F. B. Sandwith, 10th Foot, to be lieutenant-colonel; Captain J. H. Tulloch, 23rd Foot, to be major, dated July 2.

In succession to Major-General T. R. Crawley, died July 2: Colonel W. Earle, C.S.I., half-pay, late Grenadier Guards, to be major-general; Major F. L. H. Lyon, half-pay, late Royal Artillery, to be lieutenant-colonel; Captain the Hon. R. A. J. Talbot, 1st Life Guards, to be major, dated July 3.

In succession to Colonel H. W. Gwyn, R.M., promoted major-general, July 4: Major H. C. Vibart, 9th Foot, to be lieutenant-colonel; and Captain G. Baker, 67th Foot, to be major, dated July 5.

In succession to Major-General T. Raikes, C.B., died July 10: no promotion, vacancy absorbed.

In succession to Lieutenant-General H. Nott, Madras S.C., placed on Retired List, July 14: Major A. F. de B. Dixon, 14th Foot, to be lieutenant-colonel; and Captain (now Major) G. K. M'Callum, 92nd Foot, to be major, dated July 14.

In succession to Lieutenant-General T. Stock, Bombay S.C., placed on Retired List, July 21: Major J. O. Travers, 17th Foot, to be lieutenant-colonel; Captain H. G. Carleton, 10th Foot, to be major, dated July 21.

In succession to General Sir A. Little, K.C.B., colonel 9th Lancers, died September 8: Colonel P. Robertson-Ross, C.B., half-pay, late of a Depôt Battalion, to be major-general; Major C. J. C. Roberts, 9th Foot, to be lieutenant-colonel; and Captain A. G. Lowry, 8th Foot, to be major, dated September 9.

In succession to General Sir J. Michel, G.C.B., colonel 86th Regiment, placed on the Retired List on October 1: Colonel R. H. Gall, C.B., half-pay, late 14th Hussars, to be major-general; Major G. Forbes, 78th Foot, to be lieutenant-colonel; and Captain J. S. Smyth, 17th Foot, to be major, dated October 1.

In succession to General H. R. Jones, colonel 6th Dragoon Guards, died October 3: no promotions, vacancy absorbed.

In succession to Lieutenant-General R. W. Lacy, placed on Retired List October 5: Colonel G. S. Young, half-pay, late 80th Foot, to be major-general; Major R. C. Martin, half-pay, late 19th Foot, to be lieutenant-colonel; Captain G. Cox, 87th Foot, to be major, dated October 6.

In succession to Major-General E. W. D. Lowe, died October 21: no promotions, vacancy absorbed.

In succession to General S. Braybrooke, colonel 99th Regiment, died October 7: Colonel S. Henning, Brigade Depôt, Dorchester, to be major-general; Major J. O. Vandeleur, 35th Foot, to be lieutenant-colonel; and Captain R. F. Stirke, 69th Foot, to be major, dated October 22.

In succession to Lieutenant-General Hon. J. W. B. Macdonald, C.B., colonel 21st Hussars, placed on Retired List Oct. 31: no promotions, vacancy absorbed.

In succession to General T. Brooke, colonel 28th Foot, died November 4: Colonel A. Wombwell, Brigade Depôt, Winchester, to be major-general; Major M. H. Hale, 26th Foot, to be lieutenant-colonel; Captain R. S. Shinkwin, 59th Foot, to be major, dated November 4.

In succession to Lieutenant-General C. J. Dalton, colonel commandant, Royal Artillery, died November 7; Major D. Townley, 75th Foot, to be lieutenant-colonel; Captain P. M'Laren, 74th Foot, to be major, dated November 8.

In succession to General Sir Edward C. Warde, K.C.B., colonel commandant, Royal Artillery, to be placed on Retired List, November 13: Major R. A. Manners, 1st Foot, to be lieutenant-colonel; Captain C. Middlemass, 17th Foot, to be major, dated November 13.

The Distinguished-Service Rewards, vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-General G. C. Clarke, C.B., to the colonelcy of the 6th Dragoon Guards, Lieutenant-General H. J. Warre, C.B., to the colonelcy of the 99th Regiment, and the death of Major-General E. W. D. Bell, C.B., have been given, respectively, to Major-General C. W. Thompson, Major-General F. Peyton, and Colonel A. Tisdall, commanding the Aberdeen Brigade Depôt. General Thompson entered the Army, February 26, 1836, and became a major-general, September 15, 1875. He served as a captain in the British Legion, and was engaged at Hernani, August 30, 1835; at Arlaban, January 16, 17, and 18, and in the action before San Sebastian, May 5, 1836, when he was severely wounded in the hip and hands (K.S.F., and medal). Served the campaign in the Punjab with the 14th Light Dragoons; was engaged at Ramnuggur (horse wounded), November 22, 1848; at Chillianwallah, January 13; and at Goozerat, February 21, 1849 (medal with two clasps). Present also at the crossing of the Chenab, Jhelum, and Indus; at the surrender of the Sikh army at Rawul Pindee; the capture of the bridge of boats at Attock, and the pursuit of the Afghans to Peshawur. General Peyton joined the Service, January, 29, 1841, and became major-general, October 1, 1877. He served in the 98th Regiment, with the expedition in the north of China, in 1842 (medal), and was present at the attack and capture of Chin Kiang Foo, and at the landing before Nankin. Served also in the Punjab campaign of 1848-49 (medals). He also served with the flank companies at the forcing of the Kohat Pass, in the force under Sir Colin Campbell, in February, 1850; commanded four companies of the 98th Regiment in the Peshawur Expeditionary Force, on the Euzofzie frontier, under Sir Sidney Cotton, in April and May, 1858, and at the affair with the Hindostanee fanatics, on the heights of Sittana, on May 4 (medal with clasp). Colonel Tisdall obtained his ensigncy, June 26, 1840, and became colonel, October 1, 1877. He was engaged in frequent affairs with the mutineers in the Shahabad district, their dispersion from Jugdespore, and pursuit into the Rotas Hills, where he commanded the 35th Regiment in a successful night surprise of the enemy on November 24, 1858 (brevet of major, and medal).

The Irish Times says:—"We regret to see that bills are on the offices, in College Green, of the old firm of Irish Army Agents, Sir E. Borough, Bart., and Company, notifying that they are to let, and to find that the business, after an existence of nearly a century, under the control of the War Office, has been transferred from Dublin to London. We understand that the clerks in this old house have not yet been compensated by the Government, as four others of the same firm were when the business was curtailed by the War Office in October, 1871; but we trust that in this really hard case the Government will now deal with them liberally, in consequence of the total abolition of the office. We may add that two of those gentlemen now thrown on the world, one of 37 and the other of 27 years' service, by reason of their age would find it most difficult to obtain suitable employment. We cannot conceive it possible that their strong claim can be ignored, and we urge its favourable and immediate consideration, in the hope that justice will done to them."

The Times announces that "Mr. Arthur N. Wollaston, the translator of the 'Anwar-i-Suhaili,' has been appointed, in succession to Sir Frederic Goldsmid, now in Egypt, annual examiner in Persian at the Staff College, Sandhurst."

REGIMENTAL COLOURS. — No. III.

Unrecorded Battles.—Quebec, 1759.

The year 1758 closed with varying fortune for the British arms in America. The expedition against Louisburg had been completely successful, Brigadier Forbes had captured Fort Du Quesne, and the gallant Colonel Bradstreet had surprised Frontenac (the present Kingston); but the disastrous repulse at Ticonderoga cast a deep shade over our successes. On the utter incompetence of the commander, or the marvellous gallantry of the troops and their frightful losses, we need not dwell. When the sad news reached England, Mr. Pitt at once recalled the General whose continuance in command would probably have led to further disasters; and appointed Major-General Amherst, who had ably conducted the operations against Louisburg, to the chief command. "The great Minister" then planned the conquest of Canada, and the extinction of the French dominion in America. Amherst, with 12,000 men, was to advance from Albany by Lake Champlain and the river Richelieu, capturing Ticonderoga and Crown Point on his way to the St. Lawrence, and then move down the river to Quebec. A smaller force, under Brigadier Prideaux, assisted by a body of friendly Indians, under Sir W. Johnson, was to take a more westerly course; to attack Fort Niagara, cross Lake Ontario, move down the St. Lawrence, threatening or attacking Montreal, and eventually to join Amherst before Quebec. A third little army of about 8,000 was to embark in a fleet commanded by Admiral Saunders, to sail up the St. Lawrence and endeavour to take Quebec. Major-General Wolfe, whose services as brigadier had largely contributed to the capture of Louisburg, was selected for this command, with Colonels Monckton, Townshend, and Murray as his brigadiers. Wolfe, though very young for a General, had considerable and varied experience in war; and he had shown his soldierly qualities in defeat as well as in victory, at Fontenoy and Laffeldt as well as at Dettingen and Louisburg. Wolfe's force comprised nine of the battalions which had taken part in the siege of Louisburg, the 43rd Regiment, which had been for some time in Nova Scotia, some local corps, and a detachment of artillery. The 22nd, 40th, and 45th were in garrison at Louisburg, and when Wolfe sailed thence for the St. Lawrence on June 1, the grenadier companies of these regiments joined his force, and during the ensuing campaign were known as the "Louisburg Grenadiers." The fleet arrived off the Isle of Orleans, below Quebec, on the 26th, and the troops were landed the next day. Without loss of time, Wolfe reconnoitred Quebec and the surrounding country, and found the prospect very discouraging. The fortifications of the upper town, though not very extensive or massively constructed, were formidable from their commanding situation. The country below the town had strong positions, covered by the St. Charles and Montmorenci rivers, and these had been carefully entrenched by the French. The right bank of the St. Lawrence for several miles above Quebec was high and precipitous, and seemed quite inaccessible. On the left bank, opposite Quebec, Point Levi towered above the highest point of the fortifications, and from it the lower town, at least, could be bombarded. On June 30, Brigadier Monckton, with four battalions, took this position, after some resistance. During the month of July, Quebec was bombarded from Point Levi and from beyond the Montmorenci river, and almost reduced to ruins. Several conflicts occurred at different points, and many soldiers were treacherously killed and scalped by the Indians and the Canadians also. The British retaliated, and the warfare was carried with such merciless cruelty as is almost unknown among the soldiers of civilised countries. An attempt to storm the entrenchments of Montmorenci was made on July 31. The thirteen companies of grenadiers, who landed first from the boats, in their eagerness to close with the enemy, rushed forward before the battalions had formed, or even had all landed; the slope to the works was steep, and the ground slippery from heavy rains; the fire of cannon and musketry was constant and well-directed; the grenadiers fell fast, yet they persevered long in the hopeless struggle. At last they retired behind some battalions which Wolfe, anticipating their discomfiture, had formed to cover their retreat, and the force recrossed. Wolfe issued an order sternly rebuking the soldiers who had made this premature and irregular attack. But the disappointment was too bitter for his delicate constitution and sensitive disposition to bear without injury. He lay helplessly ill for some weeks, during which the brigadiers reconnoitred, and consulted as to the most feasible mode of attack. When Wolfe was sufficiently recovered, he sailed up the river, and noticed a little creek, since called Wolfe's Cove, about three miles above Quebec, with a narrow pathway leading to the high ground. Here it seemed possible to land and to ascend, and Wolfe determined to make the attempt. On September 12, all the ships-of-war below Quebec set sail, and went up the river to join Admiral Holmes's squadron, which was at Cape Rouge, about eight miles above. Monckton's and Murray's brigades marched up the left bank till opposite the fleet, and then embarked unnoticed. The night was calm, clear, and starlit, when at 9 o'clock half the effective men silently got into the boats, and quietly dropped down the stream. As each boat reached this now historic landing-place, the men got out, and the perilous ascent began. By the aid of branches and of projecting points of rock, they scrambled up, but not unperceived. A piquet near the top of the path heard the unavoidable and unexpected noises; they fired a hurried volley and fled, carrying their strange tale into Quebec. The boats returned for the rest of the soldiers, but in the meantime, the ships had dropped down the river, and the second trip was shortened. When day broke on September 13, Wolfe's little army stood formed up on the "Plain of Abraham," with a single gun, which the sailors had hauled up the precipice with much difficulty and labour. As soon as Montcalm realised the presence of the British in a position which he might well have deemed inaccessible, he resolved on the bolder course of attacking at once, instead of awaiting them within the fortifications. About 8 o'clock, his columns were seen advancing from St. Charles, and at 9 he had formed his men for battle. He had 7,520 men, beside Indians, but not more than half were regulars. Wolfe's 8,000 soldiers had lost so many from sickness and casualties in action, that his field-state, on his most eventful, his last day, showed only 4,828 of all ranks; but they were all trained and experienced soldiers. Six battalions and the Louisburg Grenadiers formed the front line, the 15th and the two Battalions of the 60th were in support, the 48th in reserve, and the colonial corps covered the left flank; but eventually all took part in the battle. Swarms of French skirmishers drove in those of the British, but they soon cleared off, and the main body advanced in columns, only halting to let their leading companies fire volleys. The British line stood firmly, with shouldered arms, without firing a shot. No movement was seen in their ranks, save when a man stepped into the place of a fallen comrade. Wolfe was now shot through the wrist, but he merely wrapped a handkerchief round the wounded limb, and remained near the right of the line. A historian of this campaign, whose account is specially minute and careful, and who was engaged in the battle, states that Wolfe ordered his battalions to load the first time with two bullets. At last, when the heads of the French columns were within 40 yards, Wolfe ordered the first line to fire a volley—a volley so awfully destructive that it virtually decided the battle, and with it the possession of Quebec, and finally of all Canada. The French colonial troops fled from the field, and their veteran battalions staggered, but did not give way at once. Wolfe's line reloaded, fired, and advanced, at first in quick time, but the pace soon increased to a charge, which swept away all resistance. After the first volley, Wolfe received a second wound, which must have caused intense pain, but he would not retire. Soon after, he received a third and a fatal shot, and fell. Monckton was severely wounded about the same time, and the command devolved upon Townshend, who took all requisite measures for repelling attacks and maintaining his position, but did not consider himself warranted in attempting an immediate pursuit. Wolfe died on the field, and Montcalm and his second-in-command were carried off mortally wounded. After the battle, the remains of the French Army went up to Montreal, the attack on Quebec was resumed, and the city having few defenders, and being nearly in ruins, surrendered on September 18. The British regiments which fought the battle formed the garrison during the winter; lost 1,000 in the battle of Sillery, on April 28, 1760; stood a siege till May 16, and afterwards joined the rest of the British forces at Montreal, which capitulated for all Canada on September 8. From this condensed narrative many interesting circumstances have been omitted, to save space, and clearness has perhaps been sacrificed to brevity. The regiments engaged in the battle of Quebec and the preceding operations were, the 15th, 28th, 35th, 43rd, 47th, 48th, 58th, 60th (2nd and 3rd Battalions), and the 78th Highlanders, besides the grenadier companies of the 22nd, 40th, and 45th. When the peculiar difficulties of the campaign, the gallantry of both sides, the heavy losses, and the magnitude of the results are fairly considered, it will surely be conceded that no name could be more deservedly or proudly borne by any regiment than that of "Quebec, 1759."

The Irish Times states that:—"On the recommendation of Surg.-Major Reynolds, V.C., an extra quarter of a pound of meat per day will be served out to each man of all the troops under canvas near Ballinrobe, thus increasing the ration to one pound per man. Additional straw is also to be issued, and every possible precaution taken to preserve the health of the men, and to make them as comfortable as possible under the circumstances."

A correspondent writes:—"Noticing in your issue of the 13th inst. a paragraph concerning the weakness of a certain regiment, stationed at one of our camps of instruction, I beg to inform you that instead of placing 150 men in the field, the regiment in question could not place, to the best of my belief, 90 men, all told, on parade."

The directors of the General Expenditure Assurance Company, Limited, have issued their prospectus inviting subscriptions of 1,000,000 promissory notes of the nominal value of £5, at 5s. per note, beyond which the directors guarantee no liability whatever. The prospectus gives all details in so complete a manner that we feel we cannot do better than refer our readers to our advertising columns for further information.

The Army.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). We hear that Col. Owen Williams, who was about to visit India on a sporting excursion, has been obliged to postpone his departure in consequence of an accident at a battue, which nearly cost him an eye. One of the sportsmen, a well-known shot, "raked the line," and peppered his brethren pretty smartly. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Burnaby, who has been in command of the regiment since September, in the absence of Col. Ives, has left for the south of France.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). Capt. Philips has withdrawn his application to retire from the Service.

6th Dragoons. Capt. G. L. Hedley, late of the regiment, died on the 12th inst., aged 49 years. He entered the Army Oct. 12, 1852; became lieut., Dec. 29, 1854; and capt., Jan. 18, 1859. He retired several years ago, by sale of his commission.

8th Hussars. The regiment marched into Rawul Pindee on the 6th ult., from Afghanistan, in splendid condition, notwithstanding the rough work it has undergone.

10th Hussars. The regiment left Rawul Pindee on the 8th ult., and was due at Lahore on the 28th, for the durbar, after which it marches for Lucknow to relieve the 13th Hussars.

13th Hussars. The regiment will march from Lucknow, as soon as relieved by the 10th Hussars, en route to Candahar.

16th Lancers. Brevet Major Stevens has been now selected for the adjutancy of the Fifeshire Light Horse Volunteers, in succession to Capt. Middleton, 1st Royal Dragoons, whose term of service as adjt. has expired.

17th Lancers. Capt. Duke has reverted to regimental duty from the Staff in India, where he has been officiating for some time as a D.A.Q.M.G.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

No. 9 Baty. 8th Brig. will embark at Aden, for England, about the 28th prox., in place of No. 14 Baty. 8th Brig.

The Standard says:—"Capt. F. O. Barrington Foote, R.A., who proceeded to India on the personal staff of the Marquis of Ripon, has been offered and has accepted the appointment of aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. R. P. Radcliffe, R.A., the inspector-general of artillery at the Horse Guards, and will shortly return to England to take up his duties."

Lieut. J. C. Bampfield, who had been transferred to the Horse Artillery of the Hyderabad Contingent, shot himself at Bolaram on Oct. 3. Excessive anxiety about the result of an examination is supposed to have induced the temporary insanity under which he was labouring at the time. The deceased officer was only twenty-three years of age.

The following officers are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, which sailed from Bombay on the 26th ult., and is due at Portsmouth next Tuesday, viz., Brevet Lieut.-Col. S. Parry, A Brig. R.H.A.; Major J. Haughton, 9th Brig.; Capts. W. B. Hoggan, 11th Brig.; F. J. W. Eustace, 7th Brig.; and H. Pipon, A Brig. R.H.A.; and Lieuts. F. M. Goold-Adams, B Brig. R.H.A.; Roakes, C Brig. R.H.A.; W. A. Plant, B Brig. R.H.A.; J. D. Kirwan, B Brig. R.H.A.; and S. K. Mackenzie, A Brig. R.H.A.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Col. the Hon. G. Wrottesley's period of staff service as commanding the R.E. at Woolwich will expire at the end of Dec., when he will be succeeded by Col. Sir Andrew Clarke, C.B., K.C.M.G., C.I.E., who is at present on leave.

Grenadier Guards. The rifle-match between the 1st Batn. and the Guards' Depôt at Caterham, 12 a side, has resulted in favour of the latter by 962 points against 773. The highest individual scores were made for the winners by Corpl. Falconer, 92; Drill-Serjt. Wilkes, 90; Serjt. Garton, 90; and Serjt. Burrow, 84; and for the Grenadiers, Drill-Serjt. Simpson, 81; Serjt. Hardstaff, 77; Capt. Hatton, 75; and Serjt. Murray, 75.

Coldstream Guards. Capt. Pole-Carew, 1st Batn., is on passage home from India, en route from Afghanistan, in H.M.S. Euphrates, which sailed from Bombay on the 26th ult.

Scots Guards. Lieut.-Col. Stracey, Military Secretary to the Governor of Bombay, has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

2nd Queen's. Capt. Collis and Lieut. Elverson, 2nd Batn., are passengers to England from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

3rd Buffs. Capt. Ommanney has succeeded Capt. Kelly as adjt. of the Canterbury Brigade Depôt.

4th King's Own. Major Middleton, 2nd Batn., has been granted an extension of leave to remain in England from India until Jan. 20, on medical certificate. Lieut. Jackson, 2nd Batn., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

6th Regiment. Major Hole, Capt. O'Beirne, and Lieut. Clayton, 1st Batn., have been appointed a committee of paymastership, vice Pymr. Wastell, about to retire.

7th Fusiliers. Capts. Groube and Manning and Lieut. Thunder, 2nd Batn., are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next. The Times' correspondent at Candahar telegraphs, on the 15th inst., that the 2nd Batn., though not very strong in numbers, is in first-rate health. The following is a complete nominal roll of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 2nd Batn. killed, wounded, or missing in the storming of the Deh Khojah village, Candahar, on Aug. 16 last:—Killed—2nd Lieuts. F. P. F. Wood and E. S. Marsh; Colour-Serjt. F. Strong; Serjts. J. Quinn and W. Shorter; Lance-Serjt. J. Fennel; Corpls. W. Cranston and P. Bishop; Ptes. J. Fitzhugh, W. Steer, A. Howe, W. County, W. Gilmour, J. Halpin, W. M'Kevor, G. Trower, F. Huntley, G. Kent, J. Henneffer, J. Job, J. Pringle, J. Rushen, C. Kirby, F. New. Wounded—Major T. B. Vandeleur (died Aug. 26); Capt. W. Connolly; Serjt. W. Stewart; Lance-Serjt. H. Logan; Corpl. H. Bennett; Lance-Corpl. J. Smith; Ptes. T. Trellogan, P. Devine (died Aug. 16), P. E. Newberry, A. Aldridge, G. Tripp, C. Elliott, T. Swan (died Aug. 17), W. Goddard (died Aug. 24), B. Cockle, J. Mabbett, J. Reilly, J. Barnes, A. Ballard, W. Gregory, W. Massey, T. Lanning, R. Hetherington, G. Davis, H. Strickland (died Aug. 17), T. Sykes, C. Dixon, A. Adams (died on Aug. 17), J. Kinsella, and T. Cox.

8th King's. The destination of the 1st Batn. has been changed from Colchester to Manchester. Capt. W. R. Ximenes, late of the regiment, son of the late Gen. Sir David Ximenes, K.C.B., died at his residence, 9 York Street, Portman Square, on the 13th inst. The deceased served in Delhi from Sept. 18, 1857, and was afterwards present in the action of Bolundshur, affair of Allyghur, battle of Agra, relief of Lucknow under Lord Clyde, the affair of Dec. 2 and action of Dec. 6 at Cawnpore, and action of Khudagunj (medal and clasps). He joined the Army Dec. 29, 1848; became lieut., May 25, 1853; capt., May 14, 1858; and retired some years ago, by sale of his commission. Capt. Jervis, 2nd Batn., was to have been given a passage home from India in H.M.S. Orontes, which sailed on the 31st ult.

9th Regiment. Major Roberts, 2nd Batn., has been appointed commandant of the Convalescent Depôt, Darjeeling. The death is announced from Lahore of Lieut. H. O. Weare, 2nd Batn., only son of Major-Gen. Weare, C.B., of 6 Courtfield Gardens, South Kensington, aged 29 years. The deceased entered the Army March 22, 1871, and became lieut., Oct. 28, 1871. He served in the Jowaki expedition of 1877-78.

11th Regiment. The Times' correspondent at Cawnpore telegraphs on the 15th inst. that the 2nd Batn., which has been withdrawn from the outlying camp at Dahalah, is very weak and sickly. Capt. Kinder, 2nd Batn., has applied for sick-leave from India to England, and was to have been given a passage home in the Orontes, which left Bombay on the 31st ult. Lieut. Stanley, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate. Qrmr. Evans, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for 12 months, on medical certificate, and is on passage home in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

12th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. moves to Jersey in H.M.S. Assistance, embarking at Portsmouth on Wednesday next. Lieut. Smith, 1st Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to do duty with the 19th Bengal N.I., on probation. Lieut. Carpendale is also a candidate for the Staff Corps, and has been appointed to the 12th Bengal Cavalry, on probation.

14th Regiment. Lieut. and Qrmr. Bayley, 2nd Batn., has left India for England to take up the appointment of quartermaster in the 4th West York Militia. Though but a short time with the regiment, Mr. Bayley saw a good deal of active service in India and Afghanistan, and was universally popular. Qrmr.-Serjt. Scott is likely to succeed him as quartermaster.

15th Regiment. The Times' correspondent at Candahar telegraphs on Nov. 15 that the 2nd Batn. "has gone to Quetta very weak and sickly." The Candahar correspondent of the Standard telegraphs:—"The 2nd Batn. 15th Foot are ordered to India. As an instance of the effect of short service and youth of soldiers, it may be stated that of 250 men who arrived as a draft from England in March last, only 80 remain fit for service at Candahar; 50 have been already invalided to England."

16th Regiment. Capt. Whittuck, 1st Batn., has still to be seconded on appointment to the adjutancy of the Bedford Militia, with effect from Sept. 1. Capt. Becher, 2nd Batn., has been selected for the adjutancy of the Hertford Militia, and is ordered home from India to take up his appointment. Capt. Riddell, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

17th Regiment. Capt. De Burgh, 1st Batn., has been appointed staff officer of the Convalescent Depôt, Darjeeling. 2nd Lieut. Beale, 2nd Batn., has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee.

19th Regiment. Capt. Briggs, Lieut. Colesworth, and 112 men of the 1st Batn. embarked for Nova Scotia yesterday in the hired troopship Thames, to join head-quarters.

21st Fusiliers. The body of the late Major Hazlerigg has been brought home from the Transvaal by his servant, for burial. Mrs. Justice, widow of Lieut. Justice, who died shortly after Major Hazlerigg, arrived home on Friday last. Capt. Willoughby has arrived home, in anticipation of his appointment to an adjutancy of Volunteers. Lieut. Lindsell was missing when we heard from Pretoria. He had gone, with seven days' rations, to look after deserters, and it was feared he must have lost his way. Lieut. Collings and 2nd Lieut. Thornycroft were down with fever,—the former had got over the worst of the attack. Colour-Serjt. Cook had died of fever. The Irish Times says:—"We are much pleased to observe by the Gazette of the 5th inst. that Col. W. P. Collingwood, lately commanding the 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers, has had conferred on him the C.M.G., for his services in Zululand. Though tardy, it is, nevertheless, a recognition of those services. Had he not been selected for an important post on the line of communication, he would have been with that portion of his battalion which took part in the battle of Ulundi, which put an end to the Zulu supremacy in South Africa, and it was at his request the the wing under Major Hazlerigg, since dead, was allowed by Major-Gen. Newdigate to proceed to the front instead of being employed on other equally important and necessary duty. Had Col. Collingwood had the good fortune to be present at Ulundi, he would have been made a C.B., as other commanding officers were. However, better late than never, and we hope that he will live long to enjoy his new honour. It was by his recommendation that the present title of the regiment was obtained. He was a most painstaking commanding officer, and spared no trouble in contributing to the benefit of those under his charge."

22nd Regiment. Lieut. Gardner, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

23rd Fusiliers. Capt. Williamson completes his five years as adjt. of the Royal Denbigh and Merioneth Militia on the 2nd prox., and is to be succeeded by Capt. Cowan, 2nd Batn. Capt. Knox is to be seconded from the 2nd prox., on appointment as adjt. of the Royal Flint Militia.

24th Regiment. The 1st Batn., at Gosport, is under orders of readiness to proceed to Colchester on Friday, the 26th inst., to make room for the 59th. A committee has been appointed, consisting of Major-Gen. T. Ross (as representative of past officers), Brevet Lieut.-Col. Tongue, 1st Batn., and Capt. Symonds, 2nd Batn., to invite subscriptions from officers, non-commissioned officers, and men now serving, or who have at any time past served in either battalion, for the purpose of erecting a memorial to their comrades who fell in action or died of wounds or disease during the South African campaign of 1877-78-79. Major Farquhar, 2nd Batn., has just arrived from head-quarters, Secunderabad, on leave, pending retirement from the Service. Major Caldwell is to be transferred to the 2nd Batn., Brevet Major Upcher obtaining the majority, vacant by Major Farquhar's retirement, and be posted to 1st Batn., and to do duty at the depôt at Brecon. Capt. Symons, 2nd Batn., has been appointed acting-adjutant of the 25th Brigade Depôt at Brecon, vice Brevet Lieut.-Col. Brander, retired.

25th Regiment. The 1st Batn. when last heard of was suffering very much from fever. The 2nd Batn. is to embark on board the Himalaya at Devonport on Friday next, for conveyance to Ireland. The destination of the battalion has been changed from the Curragh to Fermoy. Lieut. Hutchinson, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

26th Regiment. A correspondent writes:—"I have some recollection of seeing several letters in the columns of the Army and Navy Gazette a few months since (unfortunately, I cannot find that particular issue), referring to the 26th Regt. I fancy it was stated by one correspondent that the 26th was originally raised by an individual named Cameron. Such, however, was not the case. The 26th Regt. (Cameronians), consisting of 1,800 men, was raised in one day by James, Earl of Angus, in 1689. The young earl was made colonel of it on April 19, 1689, and after seeing much active service, fell, together with his two field-officers, at the battle of Steinkirk, fought on Aug. 3, 1692. (See Peerage of Scotland, Vol. I., p. 442; or Chambers's Encyclopædia, Vol. II., p. 538)."

29th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Davis has been granted leave from India to Singapore and the Straits Settlements, for three months, on private affairs.

30th Regiment. Capt. Goldie is holding the appointment of adjutant at the Burnley Brigade Depôt. Capt. Evans has been appointed adjt. of the Umballa Gymnasium.

32nd Light Infantry. The regiment is to be conveyed to Portsmouth from Jersey in H.M.S. Assistance, en route to Aldershot, where it is due at the end of next week. Capt. Lakin completes his period of service as adjt. of the Royal Cornwall Rangers Militia on the 26th inst.

34th Regiment. Capt. Richmond was to have been given a passage home from India in H.M.S. Orontes, which sailed on the 31st ult.

40th Regiment. Capt. Turnbull is en route from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

48th Regiment. The following officers are on passage home from India with head-quarters in H.M.S. Euphrates, viz., Lieut.-Col. Fairtlough; Brevet Lieut.-Col. Trent; Major Feneran; Brevet Major Bally; Capts. Anson-Cartwright, Ellis, Pennell, Fair, Lewes, and Dodd; Lieuts. Chaytor, Power, Bennet, Fraser, Maycock, and Denny; Pymr. (Major) Wahab, and Qrmr. Crawley.

49th Regiment. Promotion has been rapid among the subalterns lately. The senior lieutenant has been promoted into the 66th; three officers have received their companies regimentally; the present senior subaltern has gone to India as a probationer for the S.C.; and Capt. Temple having been appointed to the adjutancy of the Royal Berks Militia, another company will have to be filled on the 20th prox. Four subalterns are now required to complete the establishment.

ROYAL MARINES.

Col. Maskery and the officers, Head-quarters, Kinsale, gave their first afternoon "at home" for the winter on Saturday, the 13th inst. It was attended by the principal residents of the town and neighbourhood.

51st Light Infantry. Capt. G. W. Drought, late of the regiment, died at Cargins, county Roscommon, on the 9th inst., aged 56 years. Capt. Nugent is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next. Capt. Collins has been appointed staff officer of the Convalescent Depôt at Nynee Tal, vice Capt. Baldiston, 34th Foot, deceased. Capt. Kennett has been appointed to the adjutancy of the 1st Durham Rifle Volunteers at Stockton-on-Tees, and took up duty on the 4th inst.

53rd Regiment. On being relieved at Manchester by the 1st Batn. 8th Foot from Colchester, the regiment is to proceed to Chatham.

56th Regiment. The move of the regiment from Portland to Aldershot is not now to be carried out until February.

57th Regiment. Capt. Dewar has proceeded from Dublin to Belfast, to enter on his period of probation for appointment to the Army Pay Department in the pay office of the 1st Batn. 16th Regiment.

58th Regiment. Lieut. Nicol, a candidate for the Indian S.C., has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee. Lieut. Jopp and Qrmr. Wallace, with a draft, are to embark at Southampton on Friday next in the hired troopship Anglian, for conveyance to Natal.

59th Regiment. On arrival home from India in H.M.S. Orontes, the regiment will take over the quarters vacated by the 1st Batn. 24th at Gosport. The following is a complete nominal roll of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men killed and wounded in the storming of the Deh Khojah village, Candahar, on Aug. 16:—Privates: J. Carter, killed; P. Kidney, killed; J. Atterwell, wounded (died Sept. 3); P. Ward, wounded (died Aug. 16). Capt. Ffolliott has resigned his appointment as adjutant of the 3rd Lancashire Rifle Volunteers.

61st Regiment. H.M.S. Jumna sailed from Bombay on the 28th ult. for Kurrachee, with 28 officers, 793 rank and file, and 140 followers. The following are the names of the officers:—Lieut.-Col. Blackett; Majors Heywood and Fane; Capt. Dickin; Brevet Major Murray; Capts. Curtin, Low, and Leatham; Lieuts. O'Connell, Trotman, Archdale, Grove, Humphery, and Vines; 2nd Lieuts. Cure, Baxter, Tuffnell, Hon. R. French, Bishop, Lawson, and Hon. H. H. S. Addington; Surg.-Major H. E. Gillespie; Surg. A. E. C. Croly; Pymr. Sutherland; Lieut. and Adjt. St. J. Partridge; and Qrmr. Wilson. Brevet Major Rumsey completes his period of service as adjt. of the Royal South Gloucester Militia on the 2nd prox. Lieut.-Col. R. Hutton, major on the Retired Full-Pay List, died at Southsea on the 16th inst. The deceased entered the Army May 29, 1849; became lieut., Jan. 19, 1855; capt., April 17, 1862; major, Nov. 17, 1875; and retired upon a pension, with the rank of lieut.-col., July 11, 1877.

62nd Regiment. Capts. Hayne and Denniss are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

63rd Regiment. According to the Candahar correspondent of the Times, who telegraphs on the 15th inst., the regiment "is strong in every way."

64th Regiment. The regiment will leave Ireland about the 30th inst. for Dover. Capt. Richardson is to be seconded from the 26th ult., on appointment as adjt. of the 3rd Royal Lancashire Militia.

66th Regiment. "One who has no connection with the 66th" has addressed to us the following letter from Afghanistan:—"In the face of Gen. Burrows's despatch, which tends to throw a most false and unfair aspersion on a gallant regiment, viz., the 66th, in that Gen. Burrows (himself a Bombay Army man) brackets the 66th, without remark, with the two native regiments who showed up so lamentably at the battle of Maiwand, allow me through your columns to let the public know a little of the truth. At the battle of Maiwand, the 66th were on the right, next some companies of Jacob's Rifles, next the 2nd Bombay Regiment N.I. (Grenadiers); on their left, two more companies of Jacob's Rifles. These two companies of Jacob's Rifles bolted to the rear early in the day, and were formed up again in rear of the Grenadiers. By all accounts, up to the time the Ghazis advanced on the native regiments, the loss of our Infantry had been small from the artillery fire. The 66th had repulsed an attack of Ghazis, with much slaughter. When the Ghazis attacked the native infantry, Jacob's Rifles at once broke, followed by the 2nd Regiment N.I. (Grenadiers), who, instead of retiring to the rear, rushed pell-mell to the 66th, like children flying from a dog and hiding their heads under their mothers' aprons. It is a fact that these native troops tried to get for protection between the ranks of the 66th, whence they were in some cases dragged out by the neck by Col. Galbraith and other officers of the regiment. When the 66th advanced to get clear of the native infantry some of the Grenadiers followed them, and their bodies were found in the orchards, where a portion of the 66th made their now famous stand round the colours and perished to a man. Another portion of the regiment, under Major Oliver, made a stand in some other enclosures, and were eventually ordered to retire by Gen. Burrows, an order which never, apparently, reached the party with the colours. Several men of Jacob's Rifles were shot by their own officers for cowardice. It is also a fact that an officer of artillery saw about 50 of the Grenadiers stabbed in the back by the enemy, these same Grenadiers not having pluck enough left in them to turn round and fire off their rifles. Many other stories might be told, but I have said enough to enable unbiassed men to judge whether it was just, whether it was honest, whether it tended towards truth, for Gen. Burrows to bracket and make no distinction between the doings of the cowardly Bombay N.I. and the 66th Regiment. The Governor-General in Council, from the minute on Burrows's despatch, is assuredly not of this opinion. The cavalry failed no less signally than their infantry brethren. It is well known that the Bombay Army is quite unfit to cope with Afghans, of whom they are in abject terror. On the other hand, the Afghans despise them. Maiwand is not the only place where both Bombay native cavalry and infantry have, within the last campaign, proved themselves worthless! Of course the Staff Corps system tends to make bad worse. Primrose's sortie was one of the most wretched affairs ever attempted, 240 men's and 10 officers' lives utterly thrown away. Let me add that what I have written concerning the Bombay troops in no way concerns their officers, many of whom lost their lives in hopeless endeavours to make cowards face the enemy."

68th Light Infantry. 2nd Lieut. Gunning has been recommended for the adjutancy. "Esprit de Corps" writes:—"In reference to 'Territorial Regiments,' a Durham 68th Man' is surprised at the suggestion to remove that regimental depôt out of the county, after the feeling of regard and sympathy with which it is so firmly established. I assure you the county folks point with much pride to the monument in the Cathedral in this city. I trust the Authorities will 'let well alone.' The 106th is also now considered to belong to us."

77th Regiment. Capt. Fenton has been appointed adjt. of the 49th and 50th Brigade Depôts at Hounslow.

78th Highlanders. The Times' correspondent at Candahar hears excellent accounts of the regiment, which is on its way there to relieve the 2nd Batn. 15th.

80th Regiment. Lieut. Griffin has been awarded a gratuity of £1,200, on his retirement from the Service. 2nd Lieut. Ussher, a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to do duty with the 11th Bengal N.I., on probation.

83rd Regiment. Major Karslake having been relieved in his duties as an A.Q.M.G. on the Staff of the Bombay Army, has been appointed an officiating D.A.Q.M.G. Lieut. Browne has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

85th Light Infantry. Capt. the Hon. C. Dutton is on passage home from India, en route from Afghanistan, in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

86th Regiment. The Morning Post says:—"Gen. Sir John Michel, G.C.B., who has for some years been in command of the troops in Ireland, has just returned with Lady Michel to their Dorsetshire estate at Dawlish, near Dorchester. On Tuesday evening they attended a meeting of the parishioners held in connection with the Church of England Temperance Society, and were very warmly welcomed and congratulated upon their safe return." Col. C. Darby, major on the Retired Full-Pay List, died at Leamington on the 8th inst., aged 58 years. The deceased served with 200 volunteers from the 13th Light Infantry, attached to the Scinde Camel Corps, during Sir Charles Napier's campaign of 1845 against the mountain and desert tribes on the right bank of the Indus; served with the 86th Regt. in India throughout the Mutiny of 1857-58; in the campaign in Central India under Sir Hugh Rose; was present at the siege and storm of Chundaree (led the storming column), battle of Betwa, siege and storm of Jhansi, led the breach storming party, and was severely wounded (mentioned in despatches, medal with clasp, and brevet of major). He obtained his commission, Sept. 6, 1839; became lieut., July 30, 1842; capt., Dec. 19, 1854; major, July 20, 1858; lieut.-col., March 25, 1869; and retired upon a pension, with the rank of col., June 8, 1870.

89th Regiment. Capt. Barker has been granted leave from India to Australia for six months, on private affairs. Capt. Cave has applied to have his name noted for an adjutancy of Auxiliary Forces. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Robinson is a passenger from Bombay in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

93rd Highlanders. Major G. E. Aylmer, late of the regiment, died in Jermyn Street, St. James's, on the 15th inst., aged 73 years.

94th Regiment. Capt. Brooke is a candidate for an appointment as adjutant of the Auxiliary Forces, and will most probably be gazetted to the Cavan Militia. Lieut. Adams-Connor will embark at Southampton on Friday next in the hired troopship Anglian for Natal, in charge of a draft.

95th Regiment. Capt. de Salis completes his period of service as adjt. of the 1st Derby Militia on the 30th inst.

97th Regiment. A telegram to the Standard, dated Halifax, Nov. 18, states that "the 97th Regt. is preparing to depart for Gibraltar, but a rumour is current in military circles that, after the troops are embarked, the officer in command will find sealed orders for the despatch of the regiment to Ireland."

99th Regiment. Lieut. Macmullen, a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to do duty with the 2nd Bengal N.I., on probation.

100th Regiment. Lieut. Clery was to have been given a passage home from India in H.M.S. Orontes, which sailed on the 31st ult.

101st Fusiliers. Capt. Fowler and 160 men will embark at Queenstown for Nova Scotia, on Monday, in the hired troopship Thames.

103rd Fusiliers. Lieuts. Dick and Proby have arrived home from special duty in South Africa, and will rejoin head-quarters at Bradford on the expiration of their leave of absence.

106th Light Infantry. Two companies are about to fall vacant, Capt. Berwick being seconded from the 17th inst., on appointment as adjutant of the 1st Durham Militia; and Capt. Jervis, from the 15th proximo, on appointment to the adjutancy of the 2nd Durham Militia. Major E. R. C. Pechell, late of the regiment, died at Toronto, Canada, on the 11th inst., aged 43 years. The deceased, who was formerly in the Royal Canadian Rifles and Military Train, and exchanged to the 106th from the 65th Regt., entered the Army, May 28, 1858; became lieut., Jan. 7, 1862; capt., Nov. 7, 1868. He was placed upon half-pay on April 1, on the disbandment of the Military Train, and was afterwards in the Royal Berks Militia. He was appointed adjutant of the Durham Fusiliers Militia, March 14, 1877, which appointment he held until his retirement upon pension last year.

108th Regiment. The regiment will not now relieve the 56th, at Portland, until February.

Rifle Brigade. Lieut.-Col. Lord Edward Clinton, 1st Batn., has arrived in England from India, in anticipation of his retirement. Col. Newdigate has also reached England, on vacating command of the 4th Batn. and a brigade in Afghanistan. We learn from Ireland that all arrangements for the accommodation of troops at Tuam having now been completed, a detachment of the 3rd Batn. will be quartered there at an early date. Capt. Forbes, 3rd Batn., is en route to England from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

3rd Brigade Depôt. Capt, Allan, 106th Light Infantry, and Lieut. Carleton, 68th Light Infantry, are still studying at Hythe. As Paymaster D. Hepworth, A.P.D., attains the age of 60 on Jan. 21, 1881, the paymaster's appointment of this depôt will be then vacant. The Sunderland adjutancy also becomes vacant about the same time. Route-marching has commenced.

2nd West India Regiment. Lieut. Salmon, a probationer for the Indian S.C., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Medical Department. Surg.-Major M. Cogan has been selected to organise the Base Hospital, 2nd Division, Field Force, Candahar, under the command of Major.-Gen. Phayre, C.B. It is notified by Sir W. M. Muir, K.C.B., Director-General, that the next examination of candidates for commissions in the Department, will be held at the London University, Burlington Gardens, on Feb. 14 next and two following days. Candidates having two qualifications—one to practise medicine and the other surgery—under the Medical Act, and who are not under 21, nor above 28 years of age, at the date of the London examination, are eligible to attend. A subscription is in progress throughout the Army Medical Service for the erection of a memorial in Netley Chapel to the late Surg.-Major Porter, who died in Afghanistan. Surg.-Major T. M. Kirkwood and Surg. P. J. M'Quaid, M.D., and J. M. Beamish, M.D., are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next. Surg.-Majors W. Sly and G. J. H. Evatt, and Surg. N. McCreery, were to have been granted passages in H.M.S. Orontes, which sailed from Bombay on the 31st ult. Surg.-Major J. Bonnyman has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate. Surg-Major C. M'D. Cuffe, C.B., embarked at Portsmouth yesterday for Nova Scotia, in the hired troopship Thames.

Veterinary Department. Vet.-Surg. W. B. Spooner is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

INDIA.

The Times' correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta on Nov. 14 :—"Yesterday a review was held of the troops now encamped at Lahore, including the 92nd Highlanders and several other regiments that had returned from Afghanistan. After the review Lord Ripon addressed Gen. Haines and the troops in a long speech. He commenced by expressing his pleasure at meeting the worthy representatives to the British Army, European and native, and then went on to allude to the events of the Afghan war. We might, he said, be proud of what history would have to tell of the deeds of the British Army during that war, whether in the earlier and shorter campaign, or in that which had followed the treacherous murder of Sir Louis Cavagnari. The soldiers of England had done their work nobly at Cabul, and again when, under his gallant friend Gen. Stewart, they had defeated tremendous odds at Ahmed Khel. After that battle peace and a speedy return home had seemed probable, but another circumstance had occurred which called for great exertion. He need not remind them of the history of the great march from Cabul to Candahar. He had written to Gen. Roberts before that General left Cabul and told him he had no doubt the march would be famous in history. His prophecy had been amply fulfilled. The great march had been nobly accomplished. Its speed and skill had attracted the admiration, not only of Englishmen, but also of Continental military critics, and it had wound up by a battle which he hoped might have a lasting effect. Nor could he forget the services rendered by the officers and regiments set to guard the line of communications. Gratitude was not less due to those who had performed that difficult duty with unwearying patience than to those who had been engaged in the front. He also desired to say how proud he felt to have heard from all hands of the discipline, moderation, and justice displayed by the troops towards the people of the country. Their conduct in this respect had done as much for the fame, reputation, and honour of England in a political point of view as their victories had in a military. A finer force had never been collected in India, and he ventured to think that Gen. Haines would not fear to lead it against any army in the world. In conclusion, it was a pleasing duty to inform the troops that he had on the previous evening received a telegram from the Secretary of State intimating that her Majesty had been pleased to grant, in addition to the Afghan medal, six clasps for Ali Musjid, Peiwar Kotal, Charasiab, Cabul, Ahmed Khel, and Candahar, and also the special decoration of a bronze star for those who had taken part in Gen. Roberts's march to Candahar. He was confident the troops would consider this as another proof of the Queen's regard for her Army and as an incentive to deeds such as they had performed so well, and for which, in her Majesty's name, he thanked them from the bottom of his heart."

The correspondent of the Times of India at Candahar writes on Oct. 19 :—"The greatest indignation is expressed here with reference to the recent attacks made by a portion of the Indian Press upon Gen. Primrose. It is considered that the fair limits of criticism have been exceeded, and that his motives and actions have been misrepresented and misconstrued, while if inquiries had been properly made they would have effectually rebutted the charges made. The incident of the stoppage of commissariat mules is an instance. Gen. Primrose simply forbade the despatch of one or two mule-loads unescorted, and temporarily delayed the party to keep the road clear for the artillery, which were being sent out in compliance with Gen. Roberts's urgent demand, as the danger of his reconnaissance party being forced into action was imminent, and a general action might have followed. As to the Bengal division being unable to obtain information regarding the nature of the country towards Mazra, the Assistant-Quartermaster-General and many others knew it thoroughly. Neither can Gen. Burrows in the action of the 1st be held liable to censure, as by arrangement he was all day in direct heliographic communication with and under the command of Gen. Roberts ; therefore he was unable to act independently. Gen. Primrose has already been censured by the Commander-in-Chief. Whatever his faults as a General may be, all who know him esteem him as an upright and honourable man, who would himself be the last to throw a stone at fallen men. It is, therefore, felt that he is not deserving of such ungenerous, not to say unjust, attacks."

Cols. B. F. Heysham and M. K. Bourne and Lieut.-Col. E. H. R. Chambers, Madras S.C., are about to retire upon pension.

The Marquis of Ripon's staff, on his tour, consists as follows :—Lieut.-Gen. the Hon. Sir D. M. Stewart, G.C.B. ; H. M. Durand, Esq., Under-Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department ; H. W. Primrose, Esq., Private Secretary, Major G. S. White, Military Secretary, and Surg.-Major H. Muir, Surgeon, to the Viceroy ; and Lieuts. C. W. Muir, Bengal S.C., E. L. S. Brett, Scots Guards, Capt. the Hon. C. FitzWilliam, Royal Horse Guards, aide-de-camps.

The following notification has been issued by the Commissioner in Sind :—"It is with the greatest regret—a regret which will be shared by all classes throughout Sind—that the Commissioner n Sind has seen announced the death of Major-Gen. Sir William Lockyer Merewether, who was so long and so honourably connected with this province, where the mention of his name is always accompanied with expressions of affection and respect."

The Viceroy held a grand Durbar at Lahore on Monday, at which he invested Gen. Stewart with the insignia of the First Class of the Order of the Bath, and Gen. Maude with that of the Second Class of the Order.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs :—"It is reported that Mr. J. B. Lyall, Financial Commissioner of the Punjab, will succeed Mr. Melville as Resident at Baroda next March. The post of Resident at Hyderabad will also fall vacant shortly, owing to the retirement of Sir Richard Meade. It seems likely that it will be offered to Col. Bradford, now the Governor-General's agent for Rajpootana, and that he will be succeeded by Col. J. Watson."

FRAUDULENT ENLISTMENT.

"A. R. C." writes :—"Having read your remarks in the Army and Navy Gazette of the 13th of this month, with regard to the frequency of fraudulent enlistment and the methods which might be applied to stop this growing evil, I can thoroughly endorse the urgent necessity for so doing. Some eighteen months ago I commanded a depôt battery of Royal Artillery, and the number of courts-martial were more than quadrupled by this cause ; and at the present time, being in command of a station where a depôt battery is quartered, I can state from personal experience that this state of things still continues. Two men have lately been tried here,—one had been in seven regiments and the other in four. As the squeamishness of the public prevents the scoundrels who thus dishonour the Service from being marked with the letter 'D,' or in any other way, I suggest (as serving her Majesty is an honour of which all men of all ranks should be proud) that all officers and men serving now and about to serve should be tattooed (say underneath the right arm) with such a mark as the Authorities think fit. I am certain no good man who intends to make a profession of the Service would object to this, but only those who mean to make what they can out of the Service, and who now cause an amount of trouble and, what is worse for the country, an amount of expense of which none but those behind the scenes have the least idea."

MILITIA ADJUTANTS.

"X. Y. Z." writes :—"A short time ago, you were good enough to make some very just remarks touching the emoluments of Militia adjutants at brigade depôts, who had been recently deprived of their allowances, save that of 'forage,' which you know is contingent on the actual keep of a horse, which costs more than 1s. 8d. or 1s. 9d. a day! It is to be deplored that the Authorities should have adopted such a short-sighted system of economy, and have thus acted so unjustly towards those adjutants who accepted their present appointments on the faith of the warrants then in force. It must be admitted by those who have a personal and experienced knowledge of the responsibilities and duties of a Militia adjutant, that it is essential he should have an appreciative interest in his regiment, such interest being in a measure proportionate to the emolument he receives. As a Militia adjutant has, in accordance with the regulations, the control of 'certain services' provided for in the Estimates, he of course has, by electing whether to avail himself of such services or not, power to increase or diminish the expenditure of the regiment during the year, and that without impairing its efficiency in the slightest degree. I trust that what we have been deprived of may again be restored to us."

ARMY QUARTERMASTERS.

"One of Them" writes :—"I was, through the kindness of a Member of Parliament, permitted some few years ago to have the privilege of perusing the proceedings of a Committee on the subject of Transport and Reorganisation of the Army, having, I believe, for its president Lord Strathnairn. Allusions and references to those proceedings have often been made in the columns of the Army and Navy Gazette. Sir Charles Trevelyan, if not a member of the Committee, was examined, and gave evidence before it ; and if my memory now serves me, he advocated the claims of quartermasters and deserving non-commissioned officers, as being well qualified to discharge the duties of local accountants, and of fulfilling places of trust. In answer to question 2,692, the following extraordinary statement is made :—'From my experience, which is a long one, I should deprecate very much the quartermasters being appointed as accountants.' The name of the gentleman who gave this answer will be found on reference to the Report. It may be asked,—What has brought about the change, as some quartermasters have been made 'sub-accountants?' I never was, I never shall be considered qualified to be a paymaster ; but I have been a paymaster since April, 1878, £11,000 of public money having passed through my hands. How much have the public lost thereby? How much have they gained? I am not a paymaster, but I have to answer queries and observations on the regimental accounts ; I have to write letters for authorities to pay some allowances, and the settling of some disallowances. I am only a quartermaster, not yet threescore years of age. I am something more. I am one of the remnants of those weary, worn, frost-bitten, Crimean soldiers. I dragged my poor, attenuated, ill-clad frame, night after night, week after week, month after month, through mud and sludge, through frost and snow, through rain and sleet, from the dreary heights above to the wretched, miry trenches before Sebastopol. I am one of those of whom it was said, 'The Queen thanks you, the country honours you.' I have more than three war-medals, yet I have no Army rank. I am only a quartermaster, and therefore I am nobody."

Our Woolwich correspondent writes :—"In illustration of the observations made by the Duke of Cambridge on a recent occasion, relative to the slight put upon soldiers in uniform at places of public entertainment, a brigade serjeant major of the Royal Artillery has written to a local paper stating that a few nights since a serjeant and himself visited the London Pavilion Music Hall, and, finding no seats vacant except in the stalls, applied for stall-tickets, and offered the fixed price, but were refused, the attendant courteously informing them that his orders were not to admit non-commissioned officers and other soldiers in uniform to the best parts of the house. The money which they had paid for admission to the hall was returned to them, and they repaired to one of the largest theatres in London, where they asked what part of the house soldiers were allowed to sit in, and were answered that they might go to any part of the house they chose to pay for."

Referring to our statement of last week respecting the want of stability of the Sheldrake class, the Hampshire Telegraph says :—"The discovery that the Sheldrake class of gunboats lack stability affords a striking commentary on the way in which the Navy is looked after. The first of this class, of 455 tons displacement, but with varying indicated horse-power, from 367 to 515 horses, was the Cygnet, which was launched from Messrs. Droxford's yard at Sunderland as long ago as May, 1874, and now, at the end of 1880, it is found that their stability as a class is unsatisfactory. To remedy this, an additional amount of ballast is to be placed on board, and an opportunity is to be taken of having the bilge-keels widened, so as to ease their rolling propensities. Unfortunately, nearly the whole of this class of vessel are in commission, and the difficulties that will, in some instances, present themselves in carrying out these directions are great. The Contest and Forester are on the North America station ; the Cygnet and Express in the Mediterranean; the Firebrand and Firefly on the West Coast of Africa ; the Firm is at home ; the Forward on the South-East Coast of America ; the Foxhound, Moorhen, and Sheldrake are on the China station. Thus of the whole twelve of the class which have been unthinkingly constructed on the same lines, there is but one, the Mallard, laid up in reserve at home. That the necessity for having this alteration made is sufficiently great may be taken for granted from the wholesale nature of the orders given, but why have so many years elapsed from the first of the class being commissioned for this discovery to be made? The officials of the Constructor's Department seem the veriest children in calculating the stability of ships, and it is not until an outside official is asked to lend a hand that the instability of some of the ships in which our officers and men are sent to sea is discovered. And yet the 'Director of Naval Construction' has the assurance to do battle with the man who first taught the department that dangerous ships were being sent to sea, and whose warning voice as to the qualities of the Captain was only too sadly verified by her almost immediate loss. Who will have any faith in the assurances of the department that the Atalanta was in all respects a seaworthy ship, when it takes more than six years to find out that a class of vessel which has been ordered by the dozen requires more ballast and more bilge keel to ensure keeping right side up?"

Admiral Lessoffsky, commander-in-chief of the Russian forces, is now at Vladivostock, in which port the vessels of the Russian fleet will rendezvous. Vladivostock is a convenient base for operations on the Korean land frontier or sea coast, and, moreover, has the advantage of two lines of telegraph,—one overland, viâ Irkutsk and the Urals to Moscow; the other, viâ Hong Kong, Madras, and the Red Sea, to London. The time required for communication with Peking is also short, and, according to season, will not occupy more than from six to eight days. One of the Russian Patriotic Society's trading cruisers, the Asia, has arrived here. She is heavily armed, and has a speed of 14 knots, but, although she would inflict dreadful damage on unarmed traders, she is not well fitted to cope with a man-of-war like the Comus, or with the Champlain, which latter has much superior speed. The Asia's engines are of the common inverted type, and the steam-chest is exposed to shot.—London and China Telegraph.

The Standard says :—"Major-Gen. Gallwey, Inspector-Gen. of Royal Engineers, has now completed his inspection of the huts in the North and South Camps, Aldershot, with a view to the reconstruction of those two camps. It is proposed to ask Parliament next Session for a grant of £100,000 for the works, to be followed yearly by a similar grant until the whole of the works are completed. It is rumoured that a number of convicts will be employed during the reconstruction of the huts, which will be erected on an entirely new principle."

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

D.—The case might be made an exception, if one of influence was brought to bear in the proper quarter. Has the lady no friends who would interest themselves on her behalf?

GREENOCK.—Yes, the 1st and 4th Batns. in 1866, commanded respectively by Cols. Lord Alexander Russell and F. R. Elrington.

QUARTERMASTER.—He is not regarded as such officially.

KILDARE-STREET CLUB.—We have noted your request with pleasure.

INQUIRER.—Write to the Captain of the Steam Reserve at Chatham, Portsmouth, or Devonport, giving full particulars as to age, &c. Cannot say whether there are any competent instructors in Liverpool, but imagine they would not be difficult to find.

A. WICKSTEED.—The additional pension was stopped because it is alleged that the funds of Greenwich Hospital will not bear the strain put upon them by the many applicants for the fivepence.

ONE INTERESTED.—Nothing yet decided.

"T. B.," "J. H. D.," "LINE OFFICER," and others.—We regret that we are obliged to close our columns to the further discussion of the subject, as we announced our intention of doing last week.

FIELD BATTA.—Enquiries shall be made.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1880.

THE employment of the military in carrying out the decrees of the French Government against the unauthorised religious orders has been most distasteful to the Army in general, and especially to the officers. The troops, for example, who besieged a few monks called Prémontrés, in their monastery, felt that they covered themselves with ridicule. In some cases, the Territorials, out for a month's training, were told off, much to their disgust, to aid the secular force in breaking open cells and dispersing harmless monks. Having made a clean sweep of the unauthorised orders, the probability is that the radicals in the French Chamber will now insist upon ecclesiastical pupils being subjected to the law of compulsory service. It is asked why young theologians should escape the general lot, and we are assured that a great many young men adopt the clerical profession simply to escape the conscription. The conscription already furnishes more men than the military authorities can well deal with; but about 1,000 men a year escape service by preparing for the Church, and this, in a land of perfect equality, is considered a shameful abuse. Once on a time, a French soldier of considerable reputation, the Marquis de Bouillé, dined with Frederick the Great at Breslau. There were present several Polish Princes, the Bishop of the diocese, and Abbé Bastiani. His Majesty said to the French Marshal, "Would you believe it? I have just been putting my poor Jesuits' finances into order. These poor fellows understand nothing about such things. They are useful to me in forming my Catholic clergy. I have arranged matters with his Holiness the Pope, who is a friend of mine, and behaves very well to me." Pointing from his window to the convent of the Capuchins, he added:—"Those fellows trouble me a little with their bell-ringings. They offered to stop it at night for my sake, but I declined. One must leave everybody to his own trade; theirs is to pray, and I should have been sorry to have deprived them of their chimes." The greatest soldier of his age was not overburdened with recruits, and was not orthodox, but heretic. In the good old days, when the Roman dreaded the impetuous and restless, there was a law, lex de vacatione, enacted which exempted priests from military service,—"Nisi bellum Gallicum exoriatur." Now things are changed, and it is the Gaul who would enlist priests to aid in repelling the Teuton. The French Royalists are highly indignant at the idea of theological students being called upon to serve in the Army, but in the days of the ancient régime, churchmen often exchanged the mitre for the helmet. A century and a half ago Picardy and Champagne were invaded by the Infant, Cardinal Piccolomini, and John de Werth, at the head of 40,000 men; and at the same time operations on the Spanish frontier were directed by Cardinal Sourdis, Archbishop of Bordeaux, and the Prince de Condé, whose lines were forced by the Admiral of Castile. The last Frenchman in Orders who took the field was the Comte de Claremont, of blood Royal, abbé of St. Germain-des-Près, who was beaten by Ferdinand at Crevelt in 1758, and retired with his motley host "in full flight of universal cackle." Paris, which in those days was easily consoled for defeat, sang of this General of Benedictines that he was half-plume, half-bands, as fit for one as for the other; that he fought like an apostle, and served God as he fought:—

> "Moitié plumet, moitié rabat,
> Aussi propre à l'un comme à l'autre;
> Clermont se bat comme un apôtre,
> Et sert son Dieu, comme il se bat."

A good many theological students threw off the frock at the commencement of the Revolution. Napoleon and Joseph Bonaparte, who were intended for Holy Orders, began their studies at the seminary of Autun; Murat was being brought up as a priest, when, no doubt seduced by a brilliant uniform, he deserted the spiritual career for that of arms. One of the Ornanos, too, four or five of whom became Marshals, was an abbé. The Duc de Joyeuse became a Capuchin. However, when two of his brothers fell at Coutras and a third committed suicide, he renounced his cowl to resume his sword. After having ravaged Languedoc, he treated with Henri IV., and was created marshal. Standing on the balcony one day with the king, his Majesty said, "My cousin, the people appear very pleased to behold together an apostate monarch and an unfrocked monk,"—an observation which so displeased Joyeuse that he quitted the world once more for the cloister, and walking to Rome bare-footed, died of the fatigue. Voltaire thus alludes to the duke in the Henriade:—

> Il prit, quitta, reprit, la cuirasse et la haire" (horse-hair
> "Vicieux, pénitent, courtisan, solitaire, [shirt).

The union of sword and surplice, therefore, accord with monarchical traditions, such as M. Taine has depicted when describing a bishop who had the privilege of saying mass with a helmet and sword lying on the altar, and who held his see by divine wrath.

Major-General Sir Frederick Roberts has signified his acceptance of the offer of the Madras command, and will leave England early next year to relieve Sir Neville Chamberlain, who will be appointed Commander-in-Chief, should his health permit him to accept the post. Sir F. Roberts will be entertained by the United Service Club on Friday next, and we are informed that it is likely that Field-Marshal the Prince of Wales will be present at the banquet.

We believe General Lord Napier of Magdala, G.C.B., has forwarded to the War Office a most able and exhaustive paper on the advisability of the retention of Candahar.

The War-Office Committee which has been sitting on Ordnance Corps grievances, met yesterday to consider their final report. As the composition of the Committee gives a guarantee that the consideration of the grievances of the corps will have been approached in a friendly and judicious spirit, and as the labours of the Committee have been constant and well-directed, we trust the report will indicate a solution acceptable to all branches of the Service.

It has been decided to mount the 15th Hussars, on their arrival in England, by drafts of horses from the whole of the Light Cavalry corps in the United Kingdom.

It is not yet settled whether or not Colonel R. H. Gall, C.B., shall vacate his appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of Chelsea Hospital on his early promotion as a Major-General.

It is a matter for reflection whether it is advisable that the time of the military officials at the Horse Guards and War Office should be, as is now the case, almost wholly taken up by interviewing numberless officers and their friends. It is becoming a scandal that to obtain rank, honour, and reward, and certainly commands, the military world should be ever pressing their claims, and that it should be thought impossible that the many distinguished officers in the military departments of the Army would dispense patronage solely according to the merits and capabilities of the officers themselves.

Colonel P. J. Campbell obtains the vacant jacket in C Brigade R.H.A., consequent on the promotion of Colonel Pipon, C.B.

Colonel R. Curtis, R.A., will, we understand, proceed to India in the place of Colonel Campbell.

The command at Woolwich will, by the rules of the Service, become vacant at the end of the financial year by the forthcoming promotion of Major-General J. Turner, C.B., to lieutenant-general's rank. The singular popularity of this officer will, we have reason to believe, induce the Authorities to continue his command for another year. It would seem a matter worth considering whether, on the vacancy occurring, an Infantry or Cavalry General should not be given a turn at this station.

It is probable that the post of Purchaser of Horses for the Artillery will not be filled up till April, by which time it is believed the Treasury will have given its sanction to the projected large retirement of field-officers in the Royal regiment.

Colonel Grodekoff has no cause to regret having rode through Central Asia to Herat in 1878. When he left Tashkent, he was a plain colonel of the infantry, with no prospects of early promotion. On his arrival at St. Petersburg, he was honoured with an audience of the Czar, received a decoration, and was appointed to a lucrative post at the Etat Major. Early this year he was selected to accompany Skobeleff to the Caspian, and when Colonel Kouropatkin resigned his position as chief of the staff, he was appointed by Skobeleff his successor. Recently he received a second decoration from the Emperor, and stands to-day a good chance of getting the much prized cross of St. George, and promotion to the rank of Major-General, before the invasion of Akhel comes to a close. In itself, his ride to Herat, to judge from the narrative published by Allen and Co., was not half so arduous or dangerous as Burnaby's ride to Khiva; but note the difference. The one has made the fortune of Mr. Cockle, the other has made his own.

The officer referred to by us last week, Lieutenant R. Armstrong, half-pay, late 70th Regiment, is the senior subaltern in the Army,—not the senior captain, as stated,—and his grandson, 2nd Lieutenant R. Armstrong, 22nd Regiment, the youngest. The singularity of the coincidence lies in the fact of grandfather and grandson holding the same rank, the one heading, whilst the other closes the list.

There seems little doubt that General Skobeleff's campaign has really commenced against the Tekkes. So long ago as October 28, the town of Petrovsk, on the Caspian, was crowded with troops, bound for the expedition on the opposite coast, and but a few days would be required to convey them across to Michaelovsk. Here they would be conveyed across the Molla Kara sands by rail, and afterwards would march easily over the grassy plain stretching from Molla Kara to Kizil Arvat and Bami. Bami is the point of concentration of the Krasnovodsk column; while Fort Skobeleff, between Tchat and Askabat, is the rallying-point of the troops of the Tchikishlar detachment. To these two columns will be confided the task of conquering Akhel, the Turkestan detachments on the Oxus threatening Merv, so as to prevent the Merv Tekkes from hastening to the assistance of their Akhel kinsmen. Skobeleff's delay in commencing the campaign has not been due to faulty commissariat arrangements, but to a desire to avail himself of the temperate weather marking the period from December to March. A telegram from Krasnovodsk speaks of warm, dry, sunny weather prevailing in the Turcoman steppes. This weather is the characteristic of the climate of Akhel throughout the whole of the Asiatic winter.

Colonel W. Earle, C.S.I., half-pay, late Grenadier Guards, is to be allowed to retain his appointment as Chief of the Staff commanding the troops at Shorncliffe until April 1 next, on promotion as a general officer.

The commands of the Dorchester and Winchester (Rifle) Brigade Depôts are about to fall vacant, by the promotion of Colonels S. Henning, C.B., and A. Wombwell.

A vacancy is about to be created on the establishment of Queen's Aides-de-camp, by the promotion of Colonel R. H. Gall, C.B. Colonel C. C. Teesdale, V.C., C.B., will be placed on the establishment, to fill the vacancy. A second vacancy will be occasioned shortly, by the promotion of Colonel H. H. Morant, half-pay, late 27th Foot, who really heads the list of colonels for promotion. Colonel Sir Howard Elphinstone, K.C.B., C.M.G., Royal Engineers, will succeed to the establishment of paid Aides-de-camp, to fill Colonel Morant's place.

After the promotions now due have been gazetted, the list of captains for brevet majorities will stand as follows, viz.:—J. E. Forster, 3rd Foot; T. G. Crawley, 8th Foot; H. H. Griffiths, 59th Foot; J. E. Wetherall, 108th Foot; L. A. Gregson, 70th Foot; C. M. H. Wilson, 6th Foot; J. O. M. Vandeleur, 75th Foot; W. F. Thacker, 18th Foot; R. Nagle, Staff, Canada; R. H. Fawcett, 33rd Foot; G. Forbes-Robertson, 93rd Foot; W. W. Taylor, 87th Foot; M. D. Hill, 99th Foot; H. H. Hooke, 45th Foot; E. B. St. John, 35th Foot; A. H. Luck, 84th Foot; P. A. Howley, 58th Foot; C. T. Wallace, 74th Foot; G. C. S. Ducat, 28th Foot; G. Jervis, 8th Foot; J. J. F. Grant, 46th Foot; and A. G. H. Church, 96th Foot. This will work off the list up to December 31, 1867.

We hope, in the interests of the Army in general, that there will be a little more justice and discrimination exhibited as regards the Cavalry branch of the Service in the distribution of patronage, and in the selection for appointments. The number of cavalry officers who have held high Staff appointments and commands at the Horse Guards, at home, in India, or the Colonies, may be counted on one hand. The career of the Cavalry officer seems to be purely regimental. Exceptions prove the rule.

Some dissatisfaction has been expressed at the change of the sash from the shoulder to the waist, in the superior grades of the Army. It was suggested that as it is desirable every officer should carry a field-glass and compass, for which a belt was necessary, that the sash should be abolished; but objection was made in the highest quarter to the change, and it was resolved that the sash should be shifted, to allow of the belt, with its glass, &c., being worn over the shoulder. The alteration would have extended to all officers, but for the feeling to which we have alluded, and now only general officers are provided for.

We hear that the greased cartridges in use in Turkestan often becoming worthless, owing to the effects of the hot climate upon the tallow, which causes it to saturate and spoil the powder, General Kaufmann has applied to the Russian Minister of War to obtain for him, in England, the modes of manufacturing and preserving cartridges in India.

The news of the rising in Cashmere, published in the Daily Chronicle, imports, if true, another most unpleasant factor into the problems connected with the relations of the Imperial Government with the native States. The kingdom is of our own making; the Maharajah can only rely on our power for his support against any serious trouble, and hitherto he has ground his miserable subjects to powder without a word of remonstrance, at least without effective remonstrance, from us. Never were people more wretched, never tyranny more absolute, and on the top of the wretchedness of the people recently came a fearful famine, in which thousands perished. We are sorry to hear the news, but it is what might be expected naturally enough.

Within a few days after the Lord Mayor and citizens of London had listened to an earnest appeal from the Duke of Cambridge to do all they could to elevate the condition of the soldier and to respect the uniform, a letter appears in a daily paper from the trumpet-major of a distinguished Cavalry regiment, setting forth the insolence of a tavern-keeper, at Norwich, who refused to serve him and a gentleman in his company with refreshments at the bar, because of the coat he wore—the livery of the Queen, as worn by one of her most distinguished regiments! Now, would it not be well if officers and their friends were to take a note of such houses as these, and abstain from giving them any custom or patronage?

The Navy.

WAR OFFICE, Pall Mall, Nov. 11, 1880.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of William Macleod, Esq., Inspector-Gen. of Hospitals and Fleets, to be an Ordinary Member of the Civil Division of the Third Class, or Companion of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath.

ADMIRALTY, Nov. 17, 1880.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of Feb. 22, 1870, Captain Duncan George Davidson has been placed on the Retired List from this date.

Active has been ordered to be taken in hand and refitted for another commission, and Messrs. Humphrys, Tennant, and Co. have been entrusted with the repair of her machinery. She will be supplied with the electric light.

Alacrity, Lieut.-Com. W. Moore, has been at Fiji surveying, and proceeds to Auckland in November.

Albatross, Com. A. Errington, was at Chefoo by last accounts.

Assistance, Capt. Buckle, arrived at Portsmouth on Monday morning from the Mediterranean. She brought Capt. M'Causland, 41st Foot, Capt. Van Homrigh, 61st Foot, Lieut. Young, 46th Foot, and 16 invalids for Netley and Woolwich. The Assistance will next proceed to Ireland with Marines, to relieve some at present there.

Bacchante, Capt. Lord Charles Scott. Letters from the Bacchante state that, having left Vigo on Oct. 31, they reached off Porto Santo on Nov. 5. The first two or three days of the voyage were accompanied by foul winds, but from that time up to the despatch of the mails on the 10th inst. the weather was everything that could be desired. At daylight on the 6th the fleet were close in to the southward of the island, standing up for the anchorage of Funchal. The Tourmaline was found at anchor, having arrived from Plymouth the night previously after a rather rough passage. The fleet is now complete, and started on the 10th for Monte Video, calling at St. Vincent for letters. Bahia is to be dropped out of the programme. On the night of the Prince of Wales's birthday, the Bacchante entertained the fleet on board their ship, and in the middle of the entertainment a telegram was read from the Prince of Wales, thanking the captain and ship's company for their good wishes on his birthday. A telegram had been sent to his Royal Highness that morning by Lord Charles Scott, in command of the Bacchante. The health of the two young Princes continues excellent, and the stay of the fleet at Madeira was pleasantly occupied by the officers ashore.

Beagle, Lieut.-Com. de Hoghton, has been cruising off New Ireland, and adjacent islands.

Boadicea, Comdre. Richards, C.B., was at Simon's Bay up to Oct. 26.

Comus, Capt. J. W. East, was at Nagasaki on Sept. 13.

Conflict, Lieut.-Com. Izat, arrived at Cooktown, Australia, on Sept. 26, and would proceed to Sydney.

Cormorant, Com. J. Bruce, arrived at Melbourne on Sept. 27, and remains.

Danae, Capt. Purvis, was to leave Lyttleton (New Zealand) for Auckland on Sept. 18, and to be at Fiji by Oct. 31, to convey Sir A. Gordon to Rotumah and Auckland.

Duncan, Capt. T. Sulivan, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir Reginald Macdonald, K.C.S.I. On Tuesday evening Lady Macdonald received a large and fashionable company at Admiralty House, Sheerness, to witness some private theatricals. The performance commenced with "Uncle's Will," the characters being—Charles Cashmore, Com. Fitzgeorge, R.N.; Mr. Barker, Lieut. Le Strange, R.N.; Florence Marigold, Miss Holden; which was followed by A Practical Man, the representatives of which were—Cloudsley, Lieut. Le Strange, R.N.; Rockstone, Mr. Butterfield; Jennings, Mr. H. Rivers, R.N.; Biggs, Lieut. Cavendish, R.N.; Horton, Com. Fitzgeorge, R.N.; Mrs. Mildmay, Mrs. Sulivan. The Admiral's band, under the direction of Mr. A. Tesco, bandmaster, played selections from Offenbach, Sullivan, &c. Com. Fitzgeorge and Mr. Le Strange acted admirably, and all the others sustained the characters they represented most creditably, being cordially applauded at the end of both plays, and recalled several times.

Dwarf, Com. Bainbridge, sailed for West Coast Division on Oct. 19 from Simon's Bay.

Egeria, Com. C. Johnstone, was at Sandakan on Aug. 4, and was to be at Labuan on Sept. 12.

Elk, Com. Clanchy, was on her way from Cape Frio to Monte Video on Oct. 15, with orders to call at Santos and Santa Catharina.

Emerald, Capt. Maxwell, arrived at Melbourne on Sept. 27, and would eventually relieve the Danae in New Zealand.

Encounter, Capt. Hon. A. Denison, was at Chefoo by last accounts, and would return to Shanghai on Sept. 26.

Euphrates, Capt. Hand, which is due at Portsmouth on the 23rd inst., will call at Queenstown to disembark the 48th Regiment, and will then proceed to Portsmouth with 190 time-expired men for Netley, and 16 time-expired men for Woolwich and Chatham. She left Malta on the 15th inst.

Euryalus, Capt. King, flagship of Rear-Admiral Jones, C.B., was at Rangoon up to Oct. 22. She had arrived on Oct. 17, and would sail for Trincomalee on Oct. 29.

Firefly, Lieut.-Com. E. Law, at St. Paul de Loanda; would leave for St. Helena and Ascension on Nov. 15.

Flirt, Com. Brackenbury, C.M.G., was at St. Helena on Oct. 1; would proceed to Ascension and Bights, meeting Commodore at Sierra Leone on Feb. 15.

Fly, Com. A. St. Clair, was at Yokohama on Aug. 31.

Flying Fish, Lieut.-Com. Hoskyn, was surveying Carimata Strait when last heard from.

Garnet, Capt. T. Jones, was off Flores Island, South-East coast of America, up to Oct. 15. She arrived at Monte Video on Oct. 5, and proceeded to Flores Island for quarantine on Oct. 6. She was at Monte Video on Nov. 5.

Hotspur, which has just completed her full-power trials, has been in the hands of Messrs. Laird Brothers for some time past, undergoing very extensive alterations and overhaul. The principal alterations which have been made are the institution for the fixed tower of a revolving turret of the latest construction, protected with compound steel armour-plates, equal in resisting power to 12 inches of iron, and carrying two guns of equal size to the one originally carried. The breastwork has been enlarged to give increased accommodation to the crew, and an armour-plated pilot tower has been added. Appliances for working the Whitehead torpedo, and fittings for torpedo boats are provided. A central-line bulkhead has been built in the boiler space, making two stokeholes, the boilers being fixed amidships. In addition to new boilers, several new auxiliary engines for various purposes have been provided and the steering engine, which formerly worked an ordinary barrel with hide rope of long leads, now works a long length of shafting, to the after end of which is attached a cast-iron barrel, working a steel wire rope of short lead, which runs smoothly and without noise to the tiller, which is fitted with Rapson's slides. The main engines have been thoroughly overhauled, and many improvements have been made in the general fittings of the hull.—Western Morning News.

Inconstant, Capt. Fitzgerald, flagship of the Detached Squadron, arrived at St. Vincent (Cape de Verdes) on the 17th inst., and will sail with the rest of the ships after completing with coal.

Inflexible. On Friday afternoon last week, Prince William of Prussia, who had been staying with Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar at Government House, Portsmouth, visited the Inflexible, in company with Prince Edward, Capt. von Bülow, and Admiral Foley, and was shown over the ship by Mr. W. B. Robinson, the Chief Constructor of the yard. His Royal Highness remained about an hour on board, during which he made a descent to the after magazine passage below the armour deck, by means of the hydraulic lift, and saw the charges and shells brought up from the magazines, taken up the hydraulic slopes, lifted up to the muzzle of the guns, and rammed home by the hydraulic rammer. The turret was then revolved by the hydraulic rotating engine, and the guns run out and in, and elevated and depressed. The party were also shown the citadel, the under-water torpedo arrangements, and the upper works. On leaving the Inflexible, the Prince went on board the Dreadnought, where the differences between the two were pointed out by Mr. Robinson. During his visit Prince William took great interest in the drawings representing the condition of the König Wilhelm after her collision with the Grosser Kurfürst, and the state in which she left Portsmouth after having had her stem repaired in the dockyard. His Royal Highness was presented with sets of photographs.—Times. Mr. Barnaby, Director of Naval Construction, completed his inspection of the Inflexible on Wednesday. The purpose of the visit was to prepare for the forthcoming trial of her armament of 80-ton guns. As, however, some mistake has been made in the size of the zinc cartridge cases, which are too large to enable them to come between the guides and the muzzles of the guns, and additional gear will have to be fitted, it is not likely that the trials will take place this side of Christmas. It has been determined to fire five maximum charges in addition to the 21 rounds previously agreed upon, and as there will have to be a long and careful scrutiny instituted after each discharge, the trials will probably extend over three days.

Lily, Com. S. Grove, was at Chefoo by last accounts, and would leave for Shanghai and Hong Kong on Sept. 23.

Magpie, Capt. R. H. Napier, arrived from Hainan Straits on Sept. 21, and was refitting at Hong Kong.

Miranda, Com. Hon. E. Dawson, arrived at Simon's Bay from Inaccessible Island and Tristan d'Acunha on the 11th inst., having found no trace of castaways, and will sail for Australia on the 21st inst.

Moorhen, Lieut.-Com. Corfe, would proceed from Hong Kong to Singapore on Sept. 30, calling at Saigon.

Mosquito, Lieut.-Com. Hon. F. Sandilands, was at Ningpo on Sept. 11.

Northampton, Capt. J. Fisher, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir L. M'Clintock, was at Bermuda up to Oct. 29. She had arrived from Halifax on Oct. 25.

Pegasus, Com. Hon. H. N. Hood, was at Shanghai on Sept. 7.

Philomel, Com. Berners, was to leave Aden for a cruise on Nov. 6.

Ranger has been put into dock at Sheerness, to be brought forward for sea service as soon as possible. A large number of riggers, shipwrights, and others are engaged upon her.

Renard, Lieut.-Com. G. Richards, which has been employed at Solomon Islands, surveying, would be at Sydney by the end of December.

Repulse has had her machinery overhauled, and is at present completing a refit at Portsmouth, after which she will relieve the Revenge as guardship at Cork. The Revenge, which is a wooden frigate, was condemned by the Admiralty during their recent inspection, and on being replaced will be taken to Plymouth and broken up.

Sandfly, Lieut.-Com. Bower, which has been employed at Solomon Islands, surveying, would be at Sydney by the end of December.

Seagull, Com. M. Byles, was at Aden up to Oct. 29. Would leave on Nov. 2 for Jeddah, probably calling at Mocha, Hodeidah, and Massowah, and to cruise in suppression of slave trade.

Sheldrake, Lieut.-Com. Bridger, was at Foochow when last reported.

Superb, Capt. Thomas Le H. Ward, was inspected at Sheerness on Monday morning by Vice-Admiral Sir R. J. Macdonald, K.C.S.I., Commander-in-Chief at the Nore. A very close examination of the ship was made, after which the crew were mustered and also inspected. Upon the completion, the Admiral congratulated Capt. Ward upon the condition of his ship and the efficiency of his crew. A salute of 15 guns was fired when Admiral Macdonald left the ship, which was answered with 7 guns from the flagship Duncan. She anchored at Spithead on Thursday morning, and saluted the flag of Admiral Ryder. She is on her way to join the Mediterranean Squadron. As the Admiralty are desirous that she should reach her station as soon as possible, it is not intended that she should remain more than 48 hours at Portsmouth. There are certain defects in her electric lights, and when these have been remedied she will proceed.

Swallow, Com. J. B. Warren, was at Monte Video when last heard from.

Swinger, Lieut.-Com. Tudor, was at Amoy when last reported.

Sylvia, Com. Pelham Aldrich, was paid off on Wednesday at Sheerness. She was re-commmissioned at Hong Kong on May 9, 1877, and arrived in Sheerness Harbour about a fortnight since. The Sylvia will be taken to Chatham, and placed in the fourth division of the Steam Reserve.

Victoria and Albert, Capt. F. T. Thomson. Instructions have been received at Portsmouth for the Victoria and Albert, to be prepared in advance of the other Royal yachts. These instructions are supposed to imply an intention on the part of her Majesty to be present at the marriage of Prince William of Prussia, as, if the Prince and Princess of Wales, with the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, were to represent English royalty on that occasion, as has been stated, the Prince's steam yacht Osborne would be brought into requisition.

Vigilant, Lieut.-Com. Annesley, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Coote, was at Cheefoo up to Sept. 22. She had arrived from Nagasaki, with Modeste in company, on Sept. 11, and was at Shanghai on Nov. 11.

Wolverene, Comdre. Wilson, was at Melbourne up to Nov. 1. She had arrived from Sydney on Sept. 27, and would visit Adelaide (South Australia), returning to Sydney by the end of November.

The following men have been awarded medals for long service and good conduct:—Charles Richards, engine-room artificer, of the Enchantress; Edward Waygood, boatswain's mate, of the Cambridge; William Edwards, shipwright, of the Britannia; Alexander Hall, chief engine-room artificer, James O'Brien, engine-room artificer, and George Clarke, A.B. pensioner, of the Pembroke; A. Turner, ship's steward, of the Tyne; Babtest Cauche, A.B., of the Hibernia; Thomas Inghan, John Collings, George F. Smith, Arthur Treffry, and Edward C. Young, boatmen, of the Coastguard; James Knight, private, 37th Company, R.M.L.I.; John W. Physick, chief engine-room artificer, of the Rapid; Courtney H. Stone, boatswain's mate, of the Royal Adelaide; Thomas K. Sullivan, writer 1st-class, of the Implacable; James Buckland, engine-room artificer, of the Lord Warden.

COASTGUARD INSPECTION.

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, Superintendent of Naval Reserves, has been engaged during the past week on a tour of inspection, on the north-eastern coast of England. His Royal Highness left London on Monday and arrived at Newcastle on Tuesday morning. Before leaving Newcastle he was presented with addresses by the Mayor and Corporation of Newcastle, and by the Trinity House. The Duke of Edinburgh then embarked in the Tyne Commissioners' steam launch, proceeded down the river to Tynemouth, and inspected the training-ship Wellesley, and the Royal Naval Reserve drill-ship Castor. He then landed at Tynemouth, was presented with an address by the Mayor and Corporation, and drove to the Coastguard station, which he inspected, and witnessed the exercise of the Tynemouth Volunteer Life Brigade. This brigade was the first of the kind established in the kingdom, and during the 16 years of its existence has been the means of saving a large number of lives at shipwrecks by the use of the life-saving apparatus. Crossing the Tyne and landing at South Shields, his Royal Highness next inspected the Coastguard station at South Shields, and exercised the Life Brigade, and subsequently inspected the Naval Reserve drill-ship, Durham, at Sunderland, and the Coastguard station and Life Brigade, after which he proceeded to Whitburn and inspected the Coastguard and life-saving company. He spent the night at Whitburn Hall, the guest of Sir Hedworth Williamson. On Wednesday, the Admiral Superintendent inspected the Coastguard stations and Royal Naval Reserve drill batteries at Seaham Harbour and Hartlepool, and the Coastguard stations at Whitby, after which he proceeded to Scarborough. At Hartlepool, his Royal Highness visited the new extension and harbour works. Com. Prowse, inspector of life-saving apparatus, accompanied the Duke of Edinburgh on these two days. On Thursday, his Royal Highness inspected Scarborough Royal Naval Reserve battery and Coastguard station, also the stations at Burniston, Clayton Bay, Filey, Bempton, Reighton, Flamborough Head, Flamborough, Sewerby, and Bridlington Quay. From Bridlington, his Royal Highness proceeds to Boston, where he sleeps the night. Yesterday, the Duke was to inspect the Coastguard stations of Wrangle, Friskney, Hobb Hole, Frieston, Fosdyke, Fleethaven, Sutton Bridge, and Lynn, and on Saturday will complete the inspection of the Lynn Division. The Duke of Edinburgh will next week pay a visit, which will probably last over sevedral days, to Mr. Tyssen-Amhurst, M.P. for West Norfolk, arriving at his seat, Didlington Hall, near Swaffham, on Monday. The Duke and a distinguished party of guests will shoot over the well-stocked preserves at Buckenham.

THE LOSS OF THE CLYDE.

At the Nisi Prius sittings at Westminster on Monday, before Mr. Justice Bowen and a special jury, the action, "The Lords of the Admiralty v. Temperley and Others," was heard. This is an action on a charter party, by which it is sought to recover between £40,000 and £50,000, the value of a large quantity of military stores, alleged to have been lost on the coast of South Africa, in 1879, through the negligence of the master of a ship belonging to the defendants. The Attorney-General (Sir Henry James, Q.C.), Mr. Stavely Hill, Q.C., and Mr. Bosanquet appeared for the Admiralty, being instructed by the Solicitor to the Treasury; Mr. Butt, Q.C., Mr. Cohen, Q.C., and Mr. J. C. Mathew were for the defendants. The Attorney-General, in opening the case, said it would be remembered that owing to the disaster of Isandlana it became important that reinforcements should be sent to South Africa in the spring of last year with the utmost despatch. Among other vessels, a screw-steamer called the Clyde was then chartered by the Admiralty for the conveyance of troops and warlike stores to Natal. The vessel was hired by the month, or three calendar months, from the end of February, 1879, at the rate of 20s. a ton per calendar month. The defendants covenanted to be responsible for any loss or damage which should arise to the public stores or provisions from the state of the ship, stowage, or from any incapacity, want of skill, insobriety, or negligence on the part of the master, officers, or crew of the ship, according to such valuation as should be put thereon by the proper officer of the department to which they should belong. The claim now made by the Admiralty was that within the terms of that clause the master of the Clyde, had, from a want of skill and care amounting to negligence, lost a large quantity of stores on April 3, 1879, when his vessel had been run on to Dyer's Island, a point distant some 40 miles from the Cape of Good Hope Lighthouse.

On Wednesday the case was concluded, and the jury returned a verdict that the loss was occasioncd by the negligence and want of skill of the captain. The amount of damages will have to be assessed by an arbitrator.

The Costa Rica war steamer Heredia, having proved to be a "white elephant" on the hands of that government, has been turned over to Mr. Minor C. Keith, and will, we hear, be employed in the fruit and passenger trade, we presume, with New Orleans.—Panama Star.

Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil.—Its Unequalled Efficacy in Cases of Chronic Cough.—This celebrated Oil has been most extensively and successfully used in the treatment of Chronic Coughs. It effectually corrects the morbid action and deposits of the mucous surfaces of the throat and bronchial tubes, and speedily allays the irritation which produces frequent and prolonged coughing. Dr. Hunter Semple, Physician to the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest, writes:—"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil introduced into medical practice by Dr. de Jongh, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is, by no means, disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I can fully believe that, from its richness in chemical principles, it is superior in efficacy to many, or perhaps all, of the pale-coloured Oils. I have found Dr. de Jongh's Oil very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s; with his stamp and signature and the signature of his sole consignees on the capsule and the label under wrapper, by all chemists. Sole Consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77 Strand, London.

WAR AND MERITORIOUS SERVICES.

A correspondent, who appears to fear that the Navy may drift into the ways of a "Mutual Admiration Society," sends us the following fancy sketch of war and meritorious services of the future. But although there may be an inclination to record events almost trifling as "services," it must be remembered that a Naval war is a thing of which later generations know nothing, and that heroes are not to be made without opportunity. In the absence of opportunities for doing great deeds, we may excuse some for being proud even of their smaller performances; and if they are magnified by being put in print, the one to blame is the too-indulgent editor of the publication in which they appear.

Admirals.—Lord Marmaduke de Fitz-Palmerston served as midshipman in the Royal Sovereign, under Admiral Sir Shifty Politics; was flag-lieut. to the Earl of Patronage; while com. of the Royal yacht was specially commended for the excessive zeal he displayed in the performance of his duties; succeeded to the command of the Royal yacht, serving in her for no less than four summer cruises. On giving up the command, received the written thanks of the Admiralty for not having run down more than three private yachts. Was Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean on the occasion of the whole fleet striking simultaneously against the Rock of Gibraltar. Shortly after was made First Lord of the Admiralty, G.C.B., G.S.P., K.T., D.C.L., C.S.I., B.F. De Bouncey, S.T., was midshipman in the flagship of the Channel Squadron during the New Zealand War; served as mate in H.M.S. Prudence during the operations against Malayan pirates, being stationed in the maintop while a desperate attack was made by her boats on the piratical stronghold some miles away; was mentioned in despatches, and afterwards promoted. Was flag-lieut. to the Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth during the Fenian disturbances; commanded the Dædalus, Fisguard, Castor, Unicorn, Indus, and Asia; was Commander-in-Chief of the Antarctic Squadron; in the Inflexible when she engaged for three days the Patagonian ironclad Lilliputian, of 200 tons, driving her under the shelter of Tristan d'Acunha, which place was strongly defended by natives with bows and arrows. The Lilliputian, however, escaped while the signal man was engaged in cleaning his telescope. Received the approbation of the Admiralty for the "energetic, but discreet" manner in which he kept out of range of his opponent's guns, by availing himself of the superior speed of his ship.

Captains.—Capt. I. Server, midshipman of the Appearance, flagship of Admiral D'Oily Ragge, at the bombardment of Fort Constantine, when the ship was compelled to withdraw, her ornamental woodwork having been terribly cut up by the Russian fire; was mate of the upper deck of H.M.S. Gandy, and received the special commendation of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty for the brilliant condition in which he kept the galley funnel, for which service he was promoted; was commander of the Humbug, boys' training-ship, received a letter of approval from the Admiralty for his zeal in personally superintending the education of the boys in the essential duties of scrubbing ladders and polishing spitkins; was captain of the Glass-case, narrowly escaping severe injury in the terrible explosion which occurred on board that vessel owing to his not entirely understanding the nature of gunpowder and its action on the application of heat; for this he received a medal and a letter expressing approval of the celerity with which all traces of the accident were removed and the paint-work restored to its pristine condition; was in command of H.M.S. Spitanpolish, engaged in suppressing the slave trade on the East Coast of Africa, but was unsuccessful in effecting any captures, owing to his natural abhorrence of coal-dust precluding his keeping a supply of fuel on board; and was specially commended by the Admiralty for the economy thus secured, and for the "skill and energy displayed" in chasing dhows under sail; was presented by the Sultan of Zanzibar, in recognition of his eminent services, with 500 scrubbing brushes, which, however, the rules of the Service prevented him from accepting. Capt. Verry Bashful was midshipman of the Flyaway's dingy, and assisted to land troops at Bombay during the Afghan war; was severely scratched by a nail on getting in to his boat to return on board (Afghan medal, Bombay clasp, pension for wounds); was 8th lieutenant of the Inflexible during her action with the Patagonian ironclad Lilliputian; was specially selected to command the boarders, should their services be unfortunately required before the action. During the action was stationed in the cockpit, and was particularly commended for the "cool and gallant manner" in which he stood at his post beside the sick-berth man; applied for and received promotion for his distinguished services (Antarctic medal).

The Lords of the Admiralty have issued handbills for circulation, stating that boys (second-class), artificers, and stokers are wanted for the Royal Navy. The standard of height and chest-measurement for boys has been somewhat raised, and is now to be as follows:—

Age.	Height without shoes. ft. in.	Measurement round chest.
16 to 16½	5 2½	31½ ,,

The artificers chiefly required are carpenters' mates, shipwrights, and tinsmiths. Stokers (second-class) are not at present to be entered, unless of the most desirable kind.

The French steamer Euphrate has left Portsmouth, by agreement with the Government, for the purpose of conveying freight from England to the London, at Zanzibar. The freight consists of torpedo and other boats, to be used on the coast in the suppression of slave traffic. Although a strong head wind was blowing, and the heavy weather threatened to continue, the Euphrate put to sea at once.

The schooner Jane and Catherine has arrived at Harwich in charge of the Coastguard. The vessel was observed off Aldborough flying distress signals, and when boarded the crew were found to be in a state of mutiny. They were all arrested.

THE HASTINGS R.N.A. VOLUNTEERS.

Mrs. Brassey presented the prizes to the Hastings R.N.A. Volunteers last week, in presence of many ladies and gentlemen. After the distribution, the brigade was addressed by Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., hon. commander R.N.A.V., and Civil Lord of the Admiralty, who, after some preliminary remarks, said,—"I am able to speak in terms of the highest satisfaction at the spectacle we have witnessed this evening. I am glad to be able to say that Lieut. Foote, who is here fresh from H.M.S. Excellent, has spoken to me in terms of most unreserved praise of the drills which he has seen this evening. We do not indulge the supposition that our Naval Artillery Volunteers can accomplish all the varied duties which the country would demand of its regular seamen in time of war. We are not a substitute for the Royal Navy; but we desire to be an auxiliary to that gallant Service. There are many duties which must be performed, even in a gunboat, which our Volunteers would not be able to perform. Keeping a look-out in a dark night, in the English Channel, requires a knowledge of seamanship, an eye accustomed to discover objects in the darkness, and familiarity with the rules of the road at sea, which is not required in the Naval Artillery. But, on the other hand, there are a great many essential duties to be performed in a gunboat which our Volunteers are fully able to discharge, and I venture to say that the Naval officers present this evening, who have seen our Volunteers drill at the gun, have felt that if they were called upon to command a flotilla of gunboats for the defence of one of our great estuaries, they would be glad to number among the crew men who could do their work so well. I dare say you share with me the wish that our Naval Volunteers were a more numerous force. If the Admiralty were disposed to give a capitation grant, and place them upon the same footing as Volunteers of the land Service, our numbers would rapidly increase. We should not see such important places as the Tyne, the Tees, and the Humber entirely destitute of a local force of Naval Volunteers, and we should see the corps which has been established on the banks of the Thames, and the sister forces at Liverpool and Bristol, rapidly increase in numbers. We should find the Clyde with a local force of Royal Naval Volunteers. But at present the capitation grant is not given. I may say at once that I am not prepared to pledge the Administration, of which I am a humble member, to any promise upon that subject. But I would say that the first step to be taken, in order to obtain the capitation-grant, would be a unanimous expression on the part of officers commanding brigades that they wanted the capitation-grant. . . . . . Admiral Phillimore, who lately held the office of Admiral Superintendent of the Reserve Forces, in making his official report on the conduct of the forces under his command, spoke in the highest terms of the Naval Artillery Volunteers, and he made that report on the testimony of officers who commanded the gunboats in which the Volunteers had served. We may be sure of this, that if an emergency really arises, the good example set by men who have done the work we have seen this evening will be followed by thousands and tens of thousands. Believe me, you will always have in me a warm and hearty sympathiser with the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteer Corps."

CONSIDERATION FOR OUR BLUE-JACKETS.

Sir,—All the Blue-jackets of the Navy are greatly indebted to you for the able way in which you from time to time advocate their cause. As you justly remark, in your valuable journal of the 13th inst., "It is not the extra 1d. or 2d. a day that will make him contented." What he really wants is a little more consideration, and better opportunities for laying out what he has, in English ports, when belonging to the (so-called) Channel Squadron. We have lately read of some men of the Agincourt being capsized in a waterman's boat whilst going off to the tender for passage to the Sound. Why does the tender not embark officers and men at the victualling yard, instead of putting them to the expense of having shore boats into the stream, to say nothing of the intolerable nuisance to all concerned, and the constant danger to the men, both in the elements and those fatal "last drinks?" Admiral Somerset, to get over the difficulty, orders an officer to attend, to regulate the embarkation. Far better to have gone direct to the Port Admiral, and ask that in future the men might be embarked at the dockyard or victualling-yard, and so put an end for ever to a nuisance of some years' standing. At Portland, the men are regularly taken to and from their ships in private steamers at 6d. per head. Why the same consideration cannot be extended to them, when there is an opportunity, by Government tender, is best known to the powers that be; but I much fear it is only indifference.—I am, &c., An Admirer of the Blue-jacket.

Sir,—The remarks in your paper of Nov. 13, on sending the Channel Squadron to the coasts of Spain and Portugal about this and Christmas-time, ought certainly open the eyes of our rulers on such a really important subject. Sailors, as a rule, like to be within hail of home, off and on their own coast at all times, especially so at Christmas time, when their appearance and money are so welcome. Moreover, it stands to reason that the British Channel is the best school for seamanship and vigilance in the world of tides and ocean difficulties; and the custom of sending ships on a sort of yachting cruise only makes fresh smooth-water sailors of officers and men.—I am, &c.,

Royal Cork.

Allen and Hanburys' "Perfected" Cod Liver Oil is not only freer from taste and smell than any oil ever before offered to the public, but it does not give rise to the nausea and eructations which render the use of ordinary oil, even of the finest quality, so repulsive. It is the pure Oil made at Allen and Hanburys' own factory in Norway, and prepared by an entirely new and special process, and presents in the most effective condition all the invaluable properties of the remedy. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' Perfected Oil. Sold only in capsuled imperial quarter-pints, 1s 4d; half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

THE AFGHAN DESPATCHES.

Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. O'Nial.

Surg.-Major J. Arnott, M.D., Indian Medical Department.

Vet.-Surg. W. B. Spooner, who, in addition to his own duties with the Transport Department, did duty on the walls.

Capt. W. Law, R.A., Brig.-Major, 1st Infantry Brigade.

Lieut.-Col. G. F. Beville, Deputy-Judge-Advocate, and who also performed the duties of Provost-Marshal.

Mr. C. L. Griesbach, Geological Survey of India, who did duty with the 66th Regt.

To Father T. Jackson I am deeply indebted for his constant care and attention to the sick and wounded; as also to the Rev. A. G. Cane, M.A.

My thanks are specially due to Major C. J. Burnett, my Assist.-Adjt.-Gen., for the manner in which he performed his arduous duties, and who at all times was prepared and volunteered to proceed to any post of danger.

To Major F. J. S. Adam, my Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., my special thanks are due for the zeal and ability with which he carried on the important duties appertaining to his position.

My Aide-de-Camp, Lieut. E. O. F. Hamilton, 2nd Queen's, deserves my thanks for the satisfactory way in which he always performed his duties.

My special thanks are due to Mr. R. Boteler, Telegraph Superintendent, who, in addition to performing duty with the 19th N.I., acted as an Assist.-Field-Engineer, doing excellent work. I trust his name may be brought to the favourable notice of the Government.

My thanks are also due to Mr. H. T. Pinhey, of the Government of India Telegraph Department."

"Where all did their duty so willingly and effectually, there may seem little room for the selection of individuals for prominent notice. I cannot, however, refrain from recording the names of some officers whose exceptional services, I consider, entitle them to the favourable consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

Major-Gen. J. Ross, C.B., commanding the Infantry Division and second-in-command, afforded me every assistance during the march from Cabul, and the operations at Candahar. By the able manner in which he conducted the attack on the Afghan position on Sept. 1, he has given a fresh proof of his many soldierly qualities, and of his fitness for command.

Major-Gen. Ross speaks in high terms of the following officers of his staff :—Major G. de C. Morton, Assist.-Adjt.-Gen.; Major R. G. Kennedy, Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen.; Officiating Deputy Surg.-Gen. J. Ekin, M.B.; Capt. J. D. Mansel, Rifle Brigade, A.D.C.; and Lieut. A. Davidson, 2-60th Rifles; Lieut. the Hon. M. G. Talbot, R.E., and Lieut. F. B. Longe, R.E., Orderly-Officers.

I am greatly indebted to Brigdr.-Gen. H. T. Macpherson, C.B., V.C., commanding the 1st Infantry Brigade; Brigdr.-Gen. T. D. Baker, C.B., commanding the 2nd Infantry Brigade; Brigdr.-Gen. C. M. MacGregor, C.B., C.S.I., C.I.E., commanding the 3rd Infantry Brigade; Brigdr.-Gen. Hugh H. Gough, C.B., V.C., commanding the Cavalry Brigade.

With such able and experienced officers in command of brigades, success was a certainty. Throughout the long and trying march from Cabul they maintained the strictest discipline, and brought their troops to Candahar in the highest state of efficiency.

Brigdr.-Gen. Macpherson reports favourably of the following officers, who served under his command :—Major J. C. Robinson, R.A., commanding No. 6-8th R.A.; Lieut.-Col. G. H. Parker, commanding the 92nd Highlanders; Lieut.-Col. A. Battye, commanding the 2nd (P.W.O.) Goorkhas; Lieut.-Col. H. Collett, commanding the 23rd Pioneers; and Col. F. B. Norman, commanding the 24th Punjab N.I.

Lieut. E. S. E. Childers, R.E., Orderly-Officer.

Brigdr.-Gen. Macpherson records that the devotion of the medical officers of the brigade in attending to the wounded in the field under fire was most admirable.

He mentions—Surg.-Major S. B. Roe, M.B., 92nd Highlanders; Surg.-Major W. Finden, 2nd (P.W.O.) Goorkhas; Surg. E. H. Fenn, No. 6-8th R.A.; Surg. H. J. Linton, 24th Punjab N.I.; and Surg. H. Hamilton, M.D., 23rd Pioneers.

Brigdr.-Gen. T. D. Baker would wish to mention specially the names of the following officers :—Major G. Swinley, R.A., commanding No. 2 Mountain Baty.; Major C. M. Stockwell, commanding the 72nd Highlanders; Lieut.-Col. J. J. Boswell, commanding the 2nd Sikhs; Lieut.-Col. A. FitzHugh, commanding the 5th Goorkhas; Col. O. V. Tanner, commanding the 29th Bombay N.I.; Capt. W. C. Farwel, General List, Infantry, Brig.-Major; Lieut. F. T. N. Spratt, R.E., D.AQ.M.G.; Capt. W. G. Nicholson, R.E., Field-Engineer; Capt. M. N. G. Kane, 72nd Highlanders, Orderly-Officer; Surg.-Major G. W. M'Nalty, M.D.

Surg.-Major C. A. Atkins, 'for the manner in which he attended the wants of the wounded in the fighting line.'

Brigdr.-Gen. MacGregor desires to record his appreciation of the support and assistance he received from Major J. M. Douglas, R.A., commanding No. 11-9th R.A.; Lieut.-Col. J. J. Collins, commanding the 2nd Batn. 60th Royal Rifles; Lieut.-Col. G. R. Hennessy, commanding the 15th Sikhs; Col. J. W. Hoggan, commanding the 25th Punjab N.I.; and Lieut.-Col. F. F. Rowcroft, commanding the 4th Goorkhas.

Capt. R. Chalmer, 2-60th Rifles, Brigade-Major, who proved himself a most zealous officer.

Capt. A. Gaselee, Deputy-Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen., who aided much by his knowledge of the country.

Capt. A. E. Duthy, 11-9th R.A.

2-60th Rifles—Major W. G. Byron and Capts. J. N. Blackwood-Price and H. S. Marsham.

15th Sikhs—Major D. W. Inglis and Capt. H. A. Abbott.

4th Goorkhas—Major E. P. Mainwaring, Capt. C. A. Mercer, and Surgs.-Major G. C. Chesnaye and E. C. Markey.

Brigdr.-Gen. Hugh Gough states that his thanks are specially due to Major J. A. Tillard, R.H.A., commanding E-B, R.H.A.; Lieut.-Col. H. A. Bushman, commanding the 9th (Queen's Royal) Lancers; Lieut.-Col. A. R. D. Mackenzie, commanding the 3rd Bengal Cavalry; Lieut.-Col. C. Martin, commanding the Central India Horse; Major A. Vivian, commanding the 3rd Punjab Cavalry; Capt. J. P. Brabazon, 10th Hussars, Brigade-Major; Major B. A. Combe, 10th Hussars, Deputy-Assist.-Qrmr.-Gen.; Capt. C. F. Call, R.E., Field-Engineer; Capt. H. Burnley, 6th Dragoon Guards, and Lieut. M. O. Little, 9th Lancers, Orderly-Officers; and Surg.-Major R. Lewer.

I beg to acknowledge with thanks the aid I have received throughout from Col. A. C. Johnson, R.H.A., commanding the Royal Artillery, and Col. Æ. Perkins, C.B., R.E., commanding Royal Engineer, officers commanding batteries, whose names are brought forward by the officer commanding the Royal Artillery, have already been mentioned by the Brigdr.-Gens. commanding the brigades to which their batteries were attached, with the exception of Major P. H. Greig, R.A., commanding C-2nd R.A., whose services on Sept. 1 Col. Johnson desires to acknowledge, and Major T. Graham, commanding No. 6-8th R.A., who shared the arduous march from Cabul, but was unfortunately prevented by sickness from commanding his battery during the operations at Candahar.

He mentions also Capt. H. Pipon, R.H.A., Adjt., R.A., and Lieut. R. A. Bannatine, R.A., Orderly-Officer, both of whom afforded him every assistance.

I trust I may be permitted here to record my opinion of the excellent services performed by the following regimental officers who have been with me throughout all, or the greater part of the campaign in Afghanistan, and are still serving under my command :—

Royal Artillery—Lieut. E. A. Smith.

72nd Highlanders—Major C. W. N. Guinness, Capt. R. Garnett, Capt. M. N. G. Kane, Capt. R. H. Murray, Lieut. R. L. Milne, and Lieut. S. C. H. Monro.

92nd Highlanders—Major G. S. White, Capt. L. C. Singleton, Capt. R. F. Darvall, Capt. the Hon. J. Scott-Napier, Capt. C. W. H. Douglas, and Lieut. W. H. D. Cunyngham.

Central Indian Horse—Major H. M. Buller, Major J. Colledge, and Major M. G. Gerard.

3rd Sikh Infantry—Major C. J. Griffiths and Major W. W. Aislabie.

5th Goorkhas—Major J. M. Sym, Capt. E. Molloy, Lieut. A. R. Martin, Lieut. C. C. Chevenix-Trench, and Lieut. C. C. St. E. Lucas.

Lieut.-Col. E. F. Chapman, R.A., who has held the important post of deputy-adjutant and quartermaster-general, has afforded me throughout the most valuable and material assistance. His services in Afghanistan are well known to the Commander-in-Chief in India; I am, glad, however, to have this opportunity of bringing the name of this excellent staff officer prominently before his Excellency.

Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. Hanbury, M.B., proved himself to be an efficient administrative medical officer, and carried on the duties of his responsible office to my entire satisfaction.

To Major A. R. Badcock, Deputy-Commissary-General, the entire force is deeply indebted. The manner in which he, and the officers under his orders, overcame difficulties of no ordinary nature, and the way in which they exerted themselves to procure the daily supply, are deserving of particular mention. The administrative talent possessed by Major Badcock is of the highest order, and I cannot recommend his services too strongly for recognition by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and the Government of India.

Major Badcock speaks in the highest terms of all the officers of the Commissariat Department with the force, but he brings forward especially the name of Capt. A. T. S. A. Rind, Bengal S.C.

The valuable services performed by Lieut.-Col. R. C. Low, Bengal Cavalry, Chief Director of Transport, and the officers of his department, can scarcely be considered apart from those of the Commissariat Department.

I would wish here to record my high sense of the admirable work accomplished by Lieut.-Col. Low and his able staff of assistants. The mobility of the force depended upon the efficiency of the transport, and it is mainly due to the untiring energy of these officers that the troops were able to perform such long and continuous marches, and to reach their destination with the transport animals in such excellent condition. Lieut.-Col. Low brings to special notice Capt. W. A. Wynter, 33rd Foot, and Lieut. L. E. B. Booth, 33rd Foot.

Major C. A. Gorham, R.A., Deputy-Judge-Advocate-General, has carried on his duties entirely to my satisfaction.

Major C. Cowie, R.A., Comy. of Ordnance, had a difficult and arduous task to perform, his successful accomplishment of which deserves my acknowledgment. My thanks are also due to Lieut. W. G. Small, 59th Foot, in charge of the field treasure-chest.

The Rev. J. W. Adams, B.A., Chaplain, Church of England; the Revs. G. W. Manson, B.D., and A. Ferrier, M.A., the Presbyterian Chaplains; and the Very Rev. Father G. Browne, were throughout most attentive in their duties.

Major E. G. G. Hastings, Chief Political Officer, and the following officers of the Political Staff—Capt. J. W. Ridgeway and Majors C. B. E. Smith, C.S.I., and M. Protheroe—have rendered me every assistance, and have spared themselves no trouble nor exposure in their endeavours to gain information and to procure supplies for the force.

It affords me much pleasure to bring forward the names of the officers serving on my personal staff who have at all times been unremitting in the performance of their duties:—Major G. T. Pretyman, R.A., has, in addition to his duties as Aide-de-Camp, held the position of Commandant of Field Force Head-Quarters; Lieut. J. Sherston, Rifle Brigade, Aide-de-Camp; Capt. H. Pole-Carew, Coldstream Guards, and Capt. the Hon. W. C. Rowley, R.A., Orderly-Officers; Surg. J. F. Williamson, M.B."

The prospects of the Royal Arsenal are seriously threatened by a proposal to remove to certain of her Majesty's Dockyards work which has hitherto been performed in the Royal Carriage Department. For several years past there has been a growing dissatisfaction in the Navy on account of its officers having little or no voice in the preparation of the Naval armaments, the manufacture not only of guns and ammunition, but also of gun-carriages, slides, and platforms being wholly and absolutely under the control and management of the War Office authorities. Quite recently the claims of the Admiralty to be represented upon the Select Committees appointed to investigate questions of gunnery and kindred subjects has been conceded; but this has only partially abated the grievances, and now that officers of the Navy have the advantage of a special training in the scientific branches of their profession, and are required to pass examinations in Artillery at the Naval Colleges, their protests against the War Department supervision have been gradually gaining weight. It is believed that a commission which has been investigating the subject will recommend that, as a first step, the repair of gun-carriages and other portions of their equipment shall be carried out at one or two of the dockyards—probably Chatham and Portsmouth—where provision can readily be made for the purpose, with a view, naturally, to the subsequent removal of the whole manufacture. This arrangement would materially impair the utility of the costly machinery provided for the combined War Office and Admiralty services, and, if carried to its legitimate conclusion, would remove half the work now done at the Royal Arsenal to the dockyards. As a reasonable alternative, it has been suggested that Naval officers shall be employed jointly with Military officers in superintending the manufacture of war material, in which case the main objections to the place of manufacture would disappear.

THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE AND THE SOLDIERS.

"Ranker" writes :—"The recent speech of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge at the Mansion House should be sufficient to awaken pleasing and lively sentiments in the heart of the British soldier. The speech exhibits, to value it at a moderate rate, a forecast of better times, so far as the future social status of the said soldier is concerned; but one is inclined to ask himself if the theory set forth by his Royal Highness be intended to be put into practice, and if so, how or why did he permit the Royal Warrant of Jan. 31, 1880, to be issued, in which the very evil he condemned, and which for the good of the Army he would have the civilian community to deprecate, is introduced by the creation of a lower class or grade of commissioned officers, which class is exclusively composed of promotions from the ranks, and conveniently called the 'subordinate section.' It is unnecessary to point out that all that can be said by even so high a personage as his Royal Highness, for the purpose of urging on the civil community the improvement of the soldier's status, will prove futile so long as Army administrators ignore the claims of the soldier to advancement in this direction, and so long as they devise every means possible to keep him from lifting his head socially beyond a certain well-defined line of demarkation. It is rumoured that the Secretary of State for War (Mr. Childers) is at present busying himself with Army reforms, and it is generally considered that a clearer brain could not be engaged in such matters, and it is, therefore, fervently to to be hoped that he will be able to put into practical form some of those recently well-expressed ideas (concerning the respectable soldier) of his Royal Highness. To commence at the root, Mr. Childers could not do better than to remove the gangrene from around the canker permitted to come to a head by his predecessor, which canker bears, for the time being, the ignoble title of 'subordinate section.' Should the Secretary of State for War and the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief wish for a better class of recruits, and more of them, they have only to see that no social slight is thrown on the officer promoted from the ranks, and that once favoured with her Majesty's commission there should be no line or barrier to his further advancement. These are the views of one who has served in the ranks, and in the uniform of his Sovereign with pride and honour."

THE SHAFT BARRACKS, DOVER.

"Observer" writes :—"In your timely notice of the disgraceful state of the Shaft Barracks, Dover, you say that the Royal Engineers cannot repair them on account of having no money. I should very much like to know what has become of the money stopped on account of barrack damages; quite sufficient to put the whole place in thorough repair."

SOLDIERS DYING ON SERVICE.

Sir,—Several letters have lately appeared in the Standard, complaining of neglect on the part of the authorities to give timely notice to next of kin in cases where soldiers die on service. Three instances are mentioned, namely,—(1) a young officer who died in Afghanistan, (2) a serjeant who died of low-fever in South Africa, and (3) a soldier murdered by a comrade. I do not trouble you with details of these painful cases, but as many thousands of families are interested in the matter, I would seek your influence in urging on the authorities not only that prompt notice should be given to the next of kin in all cases where the addresses are known, but that in cases where the next of kin cannot be traced (and they are very numerous), notice of death should be published in the leading newspapers. If this were done, many of the missing next of kin would be found, as the notices would be sure to be seen by the persons interested, or by the comrades of the deceased. Suspense and anxiety would thus be set at rest, and the Government of the day would win golden opinions for an act of thoughtfulness. The cost of advertising might easily be defrayed from the "Soldiers' Unclaimed Balances."—I am, Sir, &c., EDWARD PRESTON.

Reviews.

History of the Indian Mutiny, 1857-58-59. By Colonel Malleson, C.S.I. (W. H. Allen and Co.)

The third volume of this work, now published, concludes the history of the great Indian uprising of 1857. The principal point at issue is whether the movement was simply a mutiny, or whether it was a revolt of which that mutiny constituted the prominent feature. In the concluding chapter, the author endeavours to throw additional light on the dispute, by the simple process of tracing effect to its cause. The conclusion at which he arrives, is that the uprising of 1857 was not primarily caused by the greased cartridges, that it was neither conceived nor designed by the Sepoys, but that the mutiny was in reality the offspring of the discontent roused by the high-handed measures inaugurated, or at least largely developed, by Lord Dalhousie, and brought to a climax by the annexation of Oude. The greased cartridge was the opportune instrument, skilfully used by a band of conspirators, for the most part men of Oude, for the purpose of rousing to action the Sepoys, already made disaffected by consecutive breaches of contract and of faith. This, the concluding volume of Colonel Malleson's work, may be regarded as the most interesting of the series. Its military portion deals partly with the operations carried on before Delhi and Lucknow, "the wings of the rebel army," but mainly with the formidable "centre," still most formidable, although deprived of much of its power and prestige by the loyalty of Sindia. Here were displayed the remarkable capacity and daring of our Generals, as well as the endurance and courage of our men, to which the author points, as forming a page in history that every Englishman will read with pride and satisfaction,—with pride, because the deeds it records were heroic; with satisfaction, because many of the actors survive, ready, when they are called upon, to repeat their triumphs in other fields. Scarcely less interesting is the political action recorded in this volume. On Lord Elphinstone devolved a duty of immense magnitude. He it was who had to decide whether he would rest content with saving his own Presidency, or, risking everything, would endeavour to save India; and he it was who did not hesitate for a moment in adopting a course which vitally affected the interests of England, at the most critical period of the struggle. In a minor point of view, this volume will also prove welcome. Notwithstanding the author's anxious endeavours to ensure accuracy of detail in describing the military operations, he feels that many gallant deeds, the details of which never reached him, passed altogether unnoticed; and also, that in some instances corrections or more explanatory particulars were desirable. The reader will, therefore, find attached to this volume several amplifications and corrections of great importance to many. It is almost superfluous to say that the History of the Indian Mutiny, narrated by Colonel Malleson in these three volumes, will be at once accepted as a standard work, on one of the most momentous events in the military history of England.

The Child's Life of Christ is a new work, the first part of which is now published by Messrs. Cassell and Co. It has been evidently prepared with much care and attention; and when complete, will, no doubt, form an instructive and highly-attractive volume.

A telegram from New York to the Standard states that the trial of the submarine torpedo of the Destroyer was concluded last week in New York harbour. The last shot was fired 250 yards, and the speed 160 miles per hour. The trial was eminently successful. The torpedo boat is an ordinary ironclad with a speed of 20 miles an hour. The torpedo gun is a smooth bore breech-loader, 30 ft. long, with a 16-in. bore, and it is placed in the bottom of the vessel, with the muzzle in the stem. The projectile is 25½ ft. long, 16-in. in diameter, and its weight is 1,500 lbs., including a charge of 250 lbs. The explosive matter, with a minimum charge in the projectile, traversed the first 350 ft. in three seconds. Firing through netting made no perceptible trajectory curve. The bows of the vessel are being protected by inclined transverse armour. The hull is nearly submerged when in action. It is 11 ft. deep, 12 ft. beam, 90 ft. long, and has an intermediate deck, which protects the machinery and the magazine. The helmsman, standing behind the inclined armour, steers the vessel and discharges the gun. The rudder and propeller are below the water-line. Mr. Ericsson claims that the Destroyer will supersede steam rams, and he calculates that one torpedo could destroy an Inflexible with a hundred compartments. Trial will be made shortly to ascertain if the Destroyer can carry enough coal to cross the Atlantic.

A HEALTHY TRIM versus SUPERFLUOUS FAT.—ENO'S FRUIT SALT acts as simply, yet just as powerfully, on the animal system, as sunshine does on the vegetable world. It has a natural action on the organs of digestion, absorption, circulation, respiration, secretion, and excretion, and thus removes and hinders (by natural means) the unnatural and dangerous accumulation of Fat. It keeps the body in healthy TRIM, by preserving and restoring health. Instead of being lowering to the system, this preparation is in the highest degree invigorating. It supplies the want of ripe fruit, so essential to animal economy, and may be taken as an invigorating and cooling draught under any circumstances from infancy to old age, and may be continued for any length of time, and looked upon as being PURE FRUIT SALT, the product of ripe fruit. It is impossible to overstate its value; on that account, no household ought to be without it, for by its use many disastrous results may be entirely prevented. In the nursery, it is beyond praise.—Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

Obituary.

Major-Gen. H. D. Twysden, on the Retired List of the Indian Army, died at Harrogate on the 5th inst., aged 60 years. The deceased was son of the late Rear-Admiral H. D. Twysden, and retired from the Local Army with the honorary rank of major-gen., Nov. 25, 1874.

Capt. E. B. Goodman, late adjt. of the Dublin Recruiting District, died at Birmingham on the 8th inst., aged 52 years. The deceased, who was the son of the late Major-Gen. S. A. Goodman, K.H., C.B., entered the Army, May 4, 1849; became lieut., May 21, 1854; and was appointed adjt. of a recruiting district, July 25, 1859. He retired some time ago by the sale of his commission.

Amusements.

The performances during the week at HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE have comprised only repetitions of those operas produced earlier in the season, and the play-houses are generally doing too well to run the risk of producing needless novelties.

At DRURY LANE the highly-successful drama of "The World," now on the verge of its hundredth night, will be withdrawn next week to make way for the customary Christmas annual, which will be this year entitled "Mother Goose the Great." The drama thus displaced will be reproduced at the end of the pantomimic season of eight weeks. "Virginius," with Mr. John M'Cullough, the American tragedian, will be the attraction in April, and during the height of the London season will appear the famous German troupe, known as the Ducal Meiningen Court Company, who will represent a series of Shakespearian plays.

Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft will reappear at the HAYMARKET on Saturday week, when the winter season will be commenced with a repetition of "School," preceded by the picturesque dramatic story of "The Vicarage."

Mr. Boucicault will close his engagement at the ADELPHI next week, and withdraw "The O'Dowd." A revival of "Proof" will then be played.

Mr. Edwin Booth, who has drawn excellent houses at the new PRINCESS'S THEATRE, by his thoughtful and interesting embodiment of "Hamlet," will this (Saturday) evening appear as Richelieu.

At the CRITERION, on the same night, will be produced a new farcical comedy from the German, framed in three acts, and entitled, "Where's the Cat?" in which Mr. Charles Wyndham will make his reappearance after a long interval.

This week Mr. J. L. Toole celebrates the first anniversary of his management of the FOLLY THEATRE. A new farcical sketch by Mr. H. J. Byron, called the "Light Fantastic" is produced on the occasion.

Gathering as usual an admirable equestrian company, reinforced by the best Continental acrobats and grotesques from the Continent, Mr. Charles Hengler has commenced under the brightest auspices his tenth season at the GRAND CIRQUE, Argyll Street, Oxford Circus. The notable novelty introduced into his present programme is a highly-trained bull, who leaps over hurdles and fences as neatly as any of Mr. Hengler's horses. The entire entertainment is characterised by great variety in the dexterous feats, performed and marked by an exceptional artistic finish in their execution.

The Atalanta Inquiry Committee have, according to the Press Association, decided on making the report more lengthy and complete than originally contemplated, and to add several additional diagrams. In consequence of the large amount of additional work which this has involved, the Committee have resolved on postponing the publication of their report until early in December. A meeting of the Committee will be held on Monday next for the purpose of reconsidering that portion of the evidence relating to the lack of staying-power displayed by the Atalanta in several gales in 1876, and which it is stated on one occasion caused her to narrowly escape the fate which is supposed to have subsequently overtaken her. Great interest is being exhibited in the proceedings of the Committee by foreign Governments, and official applications have been made to the Admiralty for early copies of the report by the embassies of France, Germany, Austria, Russia, and the United States.

The plan devised by Com. Noel, of the Royal yacht, for the defence of ironclads against torpedoes, has been experimentally fitted to the Sultan. It is intended that one of the heads of the Departments at Whitehall shall inspect it shortly, with the view of ascertaining its theoretical suitability for the important purpose for which it has been originated, with much thought and skill on the part of Com. Noel; and afterwards, if a satisfactory report is made upon this inspection, its practical merits will be determined by a test with dummy torpedoes. The plan is recommended by reason of its simplicity and inexpensiveness, and it now only remains to be seen whether it will realise the expectations of Com. Noel.—Portsmouth Times.

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms, use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. Glycerine, in these agreeable confections, being in proximity to the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d. and 1s. 1½d., labelled "JAMES EPPS AND Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment), in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice. In no case can they do any harm.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES, L.R.C.P.E., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

ROWLAND'S ODONTO is the purest and most fragrant Tooth Powder ever used, and contains no acid or mineral ingredients, which are so detrimental to the teeth and gums. All who have a good set of teeth, and wish to keep them, should use it; and they who, by early neglect or ill-health, suffer from discoloured or imperfect teeth, which are the forerunners of dyspepsia and indigestion, will find that ROWLAND'S ODONTO will keep them sound and white, and prevent and arrest decay. Its purity especially adapts it for the teeth of young children. Ask any chemist for Rowland's Odonto.

ARUNDEL & CALEDONIAN HOTELS.

The ARUNDEL is near the New Law Courts, in the Strand, being next door to the Temple Station.

These two old-established Family Hotels, from their especially advantageous position, both overlooking the Thames Embankment, combine light, air, and perfect quiet, although in the centre of London. They are now under one management, AND AT EITHER ESTABLISHMENT VISITORS CAN ARRANGE FOR FULL BOARD AT A FIXED CHARGE OF SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE PER DAY, which includes a good Bedroom, Breakfast of hot and cold meats, Luncheon, Dinner of six courses, and Tea and Coffee in the evening; also the use of large, well-appointed Sitting-rooms, including an ELEGANTLY-APPOINTED DRAWING-ROOM.

These Hotels, containing upwards of 200 Rooms, have been for many years largely patronised by Members of Parliament, the Clergy, and by Military and Naval Officers and their Families, by reason of their central, but retired localities, affording all the comforts and luxuries of high-class Hotels.

Second Master—CHAS. MORGAN, Esq., B.A., Senior Optime, late Scholar and Mathematical Prizeman of Jesus College, Cambridge.

With an efficient staff of Assistants.

This Proprietary School was founded in 1876 expressly to enable gentlemen of moderate means to obtain for their sons—

A liberal and well-appointed dietary and domestic ménage.

The best associations of a Public School and companions exclusively of their own class.

The work is tested yearly by Public Examiners, whose reports are published, and one of the first pupils at the School has already passed with credit into Cooper's Hill College.

The sanitary and domestic arrangements will also be inspected and reported on periodically.

The New Buildings, on a fine site of ten acres, and fitted with every modern appliance, were opened in September last.

Terms, £54 a year.

A full prospectus will be sent on application to the Head Master, Salisbury School, Salisbury; or to the Warden, Batcombe Rectory, Evercreech.

Any examination allowed. —For particulars, apply to the HALL PORTER, Naval and Military Club, Piccadilly. Price £25 each, or £40 for the two. The cases contain various loading and other apparatus.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Health or Wealth.—No sane person would hesitate an instant in the choice between these two conditions. Now is the season to secure the former, either by restoring or confirming it. These Pills expel all impurities from the system which fogs, foul vapours, and variable temperatures engender during winter; this medicine also acts most wholesomely upon the skin, by disgorging the liver of its accumulated bile, and by exciting the kidneys to more energetic action; it increases the appetite for food, and strengthens the digestive process. The stomach and liver, with which most disorders originate, are fully under the control of these regenerative Pills, which act very kindly, yet most efficiently, on the tenderest bowels.

ARMY (Special). — Captain BISSON, M.A., compiler of the Examination Records at Oxford and Cambridge, and Author of "Our Schools and Colleges" (officially recognised by the Queen and H.R.H. the Commander-in-Chief) sends (gratis) his Private List and full Prospectuses of the most successful ARMY TUTORS, and gives his counsel free. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S

CHLORODYNE.

THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE,

Which is admitted by the Profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered.

CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhœa, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery.

CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation, and Spasms.

From Lord FRANCIS CONYNGHAM, Mount Charles, Dec. 11, 1868.

Lord Francis Conyngham, who this time last year bought some of Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne from Mr. Davenport, and has found it a most wonderful medicine, will be glad to have half-a-dozen bottles sent at once to the above address.

⁂ Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manilla, to the effect that Cholera has been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

CAUTION.—BEWARE of PIRACY and IMITATIONS.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE; that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say, had been sworn to.—See Times, July 13th, 1864.

Sold in Bottles at 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d. None is genuine without the words, "Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming Medical Testimony accompanies each bottle.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' 'Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

The MANOR HOUSE, LEE, S.E.

At the last Literary Examination for Militia Officers, held in October, the Seven Candidates from Professor WOLFFRAM'S Establishment were all successful, viz., Messrs. H. F. Holland, H. Swann, H. L. Barrow, Percy Lees, J. Cockerton, E. C. J. Williams, C. H. M. Walker Myln.

On this occasion, Mr. Barrow obtained first marks, out of all the candidates in English; Mr. Holland was first in Geometrical Drawing; and Mr. Lees was second in Geology and Geometrical Drawing.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—WATCHES.

The Rev. Robt. Cass, Settle, Yorkshire, writes, February 19, 1880:—"The Ladies' Gold Lever Watch received from you for 70s in size, workmanship, and beautiful appearance, resembles a watch usually sold at £10. It gives entire satisfaction."

The Rev. James Arthur Kemp, Lew Down, North Devon, also writes, March 8, 1880:—"The watch I ordered of you at 25s, for my servant, arrived quite safely, and I am exceedingly well pleased with it in every way. It is an excellent timekeeper, very neat and handsome in appearance, and in my opinion worth far more than those that cost treble the money. I do not think anybody should be without a watch, when they can obtain from you such an excellent article at so reasonable a price."

"I am very much pleased with everything I have had from your Company. The watch (25s) has proved to be an excellent one, and is a marvel of cheapness. It is fully equal to, or indeed superior to, many I have seen purchased by regimental clubs for treble the money. I am positive your Company will prove itself a boon to Army men at home and abroad, particularly the latter, who are often compelled to pay enormous prices for very inferior articles indeed. Your Company is deserving of every success, and I deem it a duty, to you and the Army, to become an amateur agent, unpaid."

THE MIDLAND COUNTIES WATCH COMPANY supply their celebrated Watches direct to wearers, at very lowest wholesale cash prices. They guarantee watches supplied by them to be most perfect timekeepers, and honestly assert their price to be under one-half those charged by watchmakers; and as a guarantee of good-faith they undertake to return the full amount paid for any Watch if not to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

The Company's chief manufacture are their celebrated Crystal Glasses, which dispense with all risk of breakage. Their LADIES' and GENTLEMEN'S SILVER WATCHES, at 25s, and their LADIES' GOLD LEVERS, at 70s, are acknowledged to be the cheapest Watches in the world.

Catalogues, containing list of testimonials, and beautifully illustrated descriptions of more expensive watches, gold and silver jewellery, electro-plate, &c., are sent gratis on application. We may safely assert that the prices in same will be a surprise to all who see them.

Mr. S. HISSEY, Vyse Street, Birmingham.

On receipt of which any watch will be registered post free to any part of the United Kingdom, and for 2s 6d per watch extra to any part of the postal world.

COOPER COOPER and CO. undertake to answer the oft-heard question,—Why is Tea so dear? and they say that it is simply because the public in this, as in other matters, are powerless to insist on having their share of the advantages which result from falling markets. Tea, in fact, was never so cheap to buy since it was first imported into England, as may be easily ascertained by a reference to the current market reports, and yet relatively the retail price was never so exorbitant. Now Cooper Cooper and Co. have resolved to rectify this discrepancy, and to this end they undertake to SELL the BEST TEAS that can be purchased at their respective prices at a small commission only on the actual prices paid to importers. This system of business is specially intended to bring the public into partnership, as it were, or at all events to enable them to become participators in the great margin of profit which lies between the wholesale and retail price of tea. COOPER COOPER and CO.'S prices will be found to be ninepence per pound les s money than those usually charged for identical qualities.

POST-OFFICE ORDERS should be made payable at the General Post Office, and cheques crossed National Provincial Bank of England.

FAMILIES residing in the country can, by joining together to divide the expense of railway crrriage, save 9d a pound in the price of their TEA, by sending to COOPER COOPER and CO.; or Cooper Cooper and Co. will pay railway carriage on parcels of the value of £2 and upwards to any station in England, on receipt of 9d in addition to the cost of the tea.

The Directors of the GENERAL EXPENDITURE ASSURANCE COMPANY, Limited, invite subscriptions for 1,000,000 Promissory Notes of the nominal value of £5 each, at 5s per Note, beyond which there is no liability whatever.

All Notes will participate (until redeemed) in the quarterly drawings to be held in each year, and the holder will receive £5 for each Note drawn, so that for every £5 received by the Company the ultimate return of £100 is guaranteed.

800,000 of these Notes will be allotted, in sums of not less than £5 (representing 20 Notes), and the remaining 200,000 will be set aside for distribution, in amounts of five shillings and upwards, thus giving facilities to all classes of the investing public.

The General Expenditure Assurance Company, Limited, was established in 1874, for the purpose of enabling the public, by means of their Coupon System, to collect from tradesmen discounts (hitherto unobtainable) on all cash purchases. These discounts (after deducting working expenses and profits) are invested by the Company in sound securities, and by means of compound interest these small sums ultimately return the full amount of capital expended.

In consequence of the numerous applications received from persons who cannot, from various causes, avail themselves of the Coupon System, the Directors have determined to make an issue of Promissory Notes direct to the public.

The funds to meet these Bonds will be invested in the names of the Trustees on behalf of the Holders. A portion of the interest derived from the investments will be applied to the quarterly drawings, the remainder being allowed to accumulate at compound interest, so as to provide for the total redemption of all Notes within a given period.

For they secure the ultimate return of £100 for every £5 invested.
„ they encourage thrift, enabling the provident classes to invest small sums in Government or other sound Securities.
„ „ „ „ Mortgages.
„ „ „ younger branches of families.

They are also particularly suited:—

To those whose health precludes them from the benefits of Life Assurance.
„ Artisans, as they return a higher rate of interest than can be obtained in the Savings Bank.
„ Corporations, for by taking Notes to cover loans they secure the ultimate return of the same, and thus decrease the amount to be paid by the ratepayer.
„ persons desirous of making bequests to Charities, as the sum invested will eventually represent 20 times the amount of the donation.

To all financial undertakings, as by giving Notes to Shareholders for the full amount of their investments, the ultimate return of their outlay is secured, thereby inducing the public to invest with greater confidence.

The Company will repurchase Notes at any time, on terms depending on their age, or will advance 90 per cent. of their cash value, thus leaving holders their right to the quarterly drawings.

From a financial point of view, no better investment could be made, for not only is a good rate of interest secured by the Notes, increasing in value each year, but the additional important element of the drawing renders an increased rate certain.

It should particularly be observed that the holders of Notes incur no liability of any kind beyond the Five Shillings paid for each Note.

Applications, in order to participate in the first drawing, should be sent in without delay, either to the Offices of the Company, or to the National Provincial Bank of England, Bishopsgate Street, London, and Branches,

The First Drawing of Promissory Notes will take place in April next.

THE importance of a thorough training in the use of the carbine for the cavalry soldier has latterly become more and more evident, and the Authorities have taken some steps towards attaining the end in view. The cavalry officer of the old school will maintain, and rightly, too, that the place for a cavalry soldier is in his saddle, and the weapon he should put his trust in is his sabre. Granting this principle, however, to be correct, it does not prevent the carbine of the present day from playing an important part as an auxiliary weapon upon special occasions; yet, to be of real value, where the numbers using it must be comparatively small, every man should be as far as possible a marksman. The carbine will seldom be required for rapid or hasty firing, will never be used at very short ranges (where careful aiming would be less requisite), and at long ranges would be almost harmless in the hands of a semi-trained man. Therefore, even more in cavalry than in infantry, is it important that as many men as possible should be trained as cool, reliable shots at long ranges. Much depends upon the interest shown, not only by the men, but also by the officers of regiments, in the attainments of the rank and file, whether musketry becomes popular or not. There are, unfortunately, few cavalry regiments in which the troop officers display any real interest in the firing of their men. Musketry is usually voted the greatest ordeal of the year, and its termination a matter of rejoicing, and non-commissioned officers and men naturally view the whole performance in the same light as their seniors. The instructors of musketry in the cavalry have also very little inducement to give their entire energy to their employment, and endeavour to counteract, by their encouragement, the damage done by the apathy of the troop officer. The instructor in infantry regiments is paid all the year round, has forage allowed him for a horse, has an extra servant to look after the horse, and has absolutely no regimental duties to perform, and usually gets leave for the greater part of the winter period, when musketry is suspended. He also has an assistant told off, who shares the labours of instruction, and affords him a chance of occasional relaxation. It is not so with the cavalry. The cavalry instructor gets, it is true, two shillings and sixpence per day, but only for the days on which he actually gives instruction, and these are limited to a certain fixed number, so that should rain or other cause interrupt a day's work, he has to complete it the day following for nothing. Beyond this "generous pittance," there is absolutely no advantage or remuneration allowed the cavalry instructor. The moment he has concluded his work for the time being, he becomes at once a regimental officer, and his comrades and seniors are usually gratified that "the man who does no duty" is available to share the work of the regiment. The cavalry instructor has no assistant authorised, nor indeed do we suppose that our meagre establishment of subaltern officers, most of whom are, as a rule, undergoing some course or another, would allow of such a luxury. The musketry instructor, consequently, has to superintend both the drills and ball-firing of his regiment, and four or five hours spent on a bleak range in November, with a sharp east wind blowing, and occasional showers of sleet, is not the most enjoyable method of whiling away a day. Yet this is commonly the fate of the instructor in cavalry; and for this and similar experiences in the spring, he is considered as liberally rewarded by a payment of half-a-crown and the execration of his comrades in arms, who view his office as they would that of executioner. Is it to be wondered at that it is often difficult to get men to take the post, and that when they do accept it, they soon recognise that it is a perfectly thankless office, and one that ensures personal discomfort and actual monetary loss? The entire remuneration for putting the troops and casuals of a regiment through their annual course is £7 17s. 6d., and this represents pay for work extending over two months and a half at the very lowest computation, and usually from three to four months, owing to interruptions incident in all cavalry regiments. Is it fair, or even possible, to expect an officer to devote himself to surmounting the difficulties already in the way, and to the improvement of this branch of instruction with proper zeal, when he is so treated? Why should not our parsimonious Government pay him as it pays the instructor in infantry? We have but twenty-eight regiments of cavalry, exclusive of Household troops, and the payment of half-a-crown per diem to an officer instructor in each of these would increase the yearly estimates by only £1,277, a mere trifle compared with the millions wasted annually on much less worthy objects. The instructor of musketry should also be gazetted, like his brother instructors in the infantry, though, indeed, under existing arrangements, this latter is a privilege he would willingly forego. The case of the serjeant-instructor is a precisely similar one. He is merely a duty serjeant acting for a period, and in winter returns to the routine of guards and troop work. He has no position given him by his appointment, and, instead of being looked up to, as in the infantry, he has no weight with the other non-commissioned officers, most of whom are probably his seniors. His work entails a great wear and tear of uniform and much exposure, and he gets in return the magnificent donation of one shilling for every half-crown the officer enjoys, thus obtaining three guineas for the instruction of the regiment. This anomaly should be remedied at once, and the serjeant-instructor should be given his staff rank and receive his small extra remuneration all the year round. Until something is done to ensure an extra amount of interest being taken in the carbine training of the cavalry, no satisfactory results can be expected to arise from the increase of individual rewards for the men, paltry as they still are; and no efforts of commanding officers can effect a really beneficial and marked improvement in the firing of their regiments, so long as the staff on whom the instruction depends is underpaid, overworked, and expected to submit to a sacrifice for the benefit of an eminently cheeseparing country. We would also suggest that, as a means of enabling the cavalry soldier to obtain at least the same amount of practice with his carbine as the infantry soldier has annually with his rifle, he should fire sixty rounds individual firing, and ten skirmishing dismounted, as at present. It is not easy to permit the cavalry soldier to spend double the present allowance of time on his course, but why should he not regularly fire twenty rounds per diem, instead of ten, as at present? Six hours, at the outside, would suffice to fire a troop of sixty men, and now that the annual course can commence in the spring, the days are amply long enough to admit of this being done. No more protracted separation of the soldier from his cavalry duties would result from this arrangement, and the practice at the short ranges is an excellent preparation for good shooting at long ones. Also, ridiculous as it may read, were the officers of the best shooting troop to be entitled to an extra fortnight's leave in the ensuing leave-season, it would be truly astonishing to witness the energetic endeavours at improvement that would take the place of the present indifference displayed, and the deep interest the officers would take in the firing of their men. The whole subject is one which calls for careful consideration, and with so practical a soldier as Major-General Sir Frederick Fitz-Wygram holding the appointment of Inspector-General of Cavalry, and an equally good officer (Colonel A. L. Annesley) filling the position of adviser on all Cavalry questions at head-quarters, we bring this matter to notice, fully convinced that our remarks will receive the attention they deserve.

It is not beyond the mark to say that in recent years it has been generally accepted that, to ensure anything approaching a reasonable flow of promotion, a constant succession of Retirement schemes is an absolute necessity. The praiseworthy effort of Mr. Childers to put the Service in possession of a grand scheme that should work smoothly without constant supplementary provisions to grease the wheels of Promotion, soon showed signs of weakness; and the "temporary clauses" by which a rapid clearance was to be made, were succeeded by more lasting provisions, giving still greater inducements to those who might be wavering in their minds as to the wisdom of accepting retirement. To have given the ideas of Mr. Childers a really fair trial, it would have been necessary to have adhered to the complements of the various Lists as laid down by him; but it was found that not only would the limit to the numbers on the Senior Lists create such a terrible block in promotion as to make the Service a hopeless profession for the majority, but that the very smallness of those lists reduced the efficiency of the Service, and took from it that expansiveness so needful at any moment, when an augmentation of the Fleet may be required for the safety of the country. Thus, then, the main idea upon which Mr. Childers based his scheme was exploded very shortly after the new arrangement was introduced, and first one list and then another was obliged to be increased. There are, as a result, three more Admirals, three more Vice-Admirals, and seven more Rear-Admirals than were allowed for, while the Captains are twenty-four and the Commanders eight in excess of their complement, as laid down by Mr. Childers. And lastly, it has been found necessary to give the Sub-Lieutenants an outlet, by increasing the complement of the Lieutenants' list from six hundred to a thousand. Without this, the junior commissioned rank would be stagnated in an alarming manner, and would have seen but little chance of ever getting beyond Lieutenant's rank, even if they attained that. Such is the hopeless condition at which a strictly seniority Service arrives, in these "piping times of peace," when our foreign squadrons are comparatively attenuated, and the Channel Squadron consists of but four ships. The fact of having given Sub-Lieutenants an outlet by increasing the Lieutenants' list is not all that is required, for a glance at that list (which is now less than 150 below its full complement of 1,000, while the Commanders' List is not one-fourth as strong), shows plainly enough that not one in four who obtain their commissions as Lieutenants will ever be Commanders on the Active List. And now the question arises,—What is to become of the rest, and how are the seniors to be induced to go, so as to clear the way for more junior men? If only senior Lieutenants were promoted—and we now have officers who have been 20 years in that rank—it would follow that by the time they had advanced half-way up the Commanders' List, they would be compulsorily retired for age, and a young captain should be an impossibility, while our Admirals would only get their flags in time to haul them down again on retirement. Of course this would right itself in time, as the elderly officers went off day after day, and made room for those who were a little junior to them; but, in the meantime, the Service would be drifting into inefficiency, by the employment of none but disheartened officers, who had been kept too long waiting and waiting for promotion which was but of little use when it came. This being so, it is now proposed to make the age for compulsory retirement of Lieutenants earlier than at present; and, in the cases of those who have not served a certain time, either from choice or from the bad-luck of not being able to get a ship, to remove them at the age of 40. As a rule, Lieutenants have had no great difficulty in finding employment at sea, as the reduction in the complement of the list gave most of them an opportunity of serving, although the Navy has been for so long maintained on a peace footing. But, even under such circumstances, there are a great number who would be affected by this new rule, and as the list approaches its full complement, that number will increase, for employment will be more difficult to obtain. This new rule would, then, gradually cause a more steady flow of promotion, and if coupled with an increase in the number of Commanders, would give a better prospect of advancement to those who now feel, as they approach the head of the Lieutenants' List, that their professional life hangs on a thread. This is all, as far as we can ascertain, that the Admiralty has an idea of doing for the Lieutenants, and as those officers have long since recognised the fact that it is only by the minority that the higher grades can be reached, it would be something if the road to the Commanders' Active List were made more easy, and also if the fate of compulsory retirement were made less hard to Lieutenants, by giving them a step in rank and a corresponding increase in their retired pay.

There is, perhaps, hardly an officer in or out of France who will not feel glad to see the attacks against General de Cissey disproved before going into Court. General Farre, the present War Minister, has declared in Parliament that after a thorough examination, nothing has been found in his office to justify the ignominious charges brought against his predecessor. Some of these accusations are too absurd to be repeated, such as the purchase of horses which had been cast in the German service. For one grave charge there was some sort of basis. A considerable sum of money was advanced in 1875 to the contractors engaged on the forts round Paris. This was irregular; but at the moment a new war with Germany was anticipated, and it was considered of the utmost importance to push on the new forts with the greatest alacity. Paris had been taught a severe lesson in this matter in 1870. The Prussians seized on the heights of Chatillon, which commanded the south of the city, and from where they afterwards threw shells up to the walls of the Louvre. While Louis Philippe was yet on the throne, it had been decided that two additional forts to those constructed in 1840 were necessary,—one at Chatillon, the other at Montretout; but it was only when matters were looking black on the Rhine in 1870, that a redoubt at Chatillon was commenced, and in consequence of some dispute between the contractor and his workmen on the subject of wages, it was not finished when the Germans arrived. General de Cissey determined, in 1875, that money should not stand in the way of the new girdle of forts being placed in a condition to defend the capital in the event of war breaking out. When General de Cissey, it is said, was taking the waters at Contrexeville, he was accompanied by Madame de Kaulla, and the people at the hotel where he was stopping declared to the landlord that if that lady came to table any more, they would leave his establishment. M. de Girardin was represented as having been on intimate terms with the guilty pair. M. de Girardin declares that he was never at Contrexeville, and Madame de Kaulla also denies having ever been there. Madame de Kaulla is represented as having been driven from Russia as a German spy. The French Ambassador at St. Petersburg, General Chanzy, writes to inform his Government that General Trepoff and the Russian police know nothing whatever of the lady in question, and doubt if she ever visited St. Petersburg. Madame de Kaulla is reported to have been driven from London, on the representations of Madame Novikoff. Madame Novikoff writes that she knows nothing whatever of Madame de Kaulla. However, the Chamber has decided that there shall be an investigation. General Farre, after declaring that there was no foundation for the accusations brought against the ex-War Minister, acquiesced in this course, possibly deeming that as General de Cissey had himself demanded a court-martial, or a court of inquiry, he would like to confound his libellers before Parliament. The consequences, however, of Parliament meddling with this affair are exceedingly serious, and touch the dignity of the uniform. General de Cissey is accused of having revealed the secrets of his department, and the Chamber appoints a committee of twenty-two members who will publish the result of their researches into all the arcana of the War Office to the whole world. While the Parliamentary inquiry is going on, the Courts of law on their side will try the actions for libel brought by General de Cissey, and also by Madame de Kaulla, against several Radical papers, and in this accusation two deputies —M. Laisant and M. le Faure—are defendants. What the Radicals cannot forgive in General de Cissey is the fact that he not only served the Empire, but that he was War Minister during the Commune, and he is, consequently, one of the parties held responsible for the "bloody week." It is some consolation to find a veteran journalist like M. Emile de Girardin, who for half a century has been pleading in favour of the unlimited liberty of the Press, giving vent to his disgust at the conduct of the Radical journals on this occasion, and qualifying M. Rochefort, his colleagues, and his confrères as "infamous calumniators." The result of all this fuss will, probably, be to show that General de Cissey had a liaison with Madame de Kaulla.

H.R.H. Rear-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh, Superintendent of Naval Reserves, made an official inspection on Monday of the Coastguard stations of Mundesley, Bacton, Hasborough, Palling, Winterton, and the Battery at Yarmouth, and proceeded thence to Didlington Hall, on a visit to Mr. Tyssen Amhurst. The Duke was accompanied on his tour of inspection by Commander George Parker, Inspecting Officer, Yarmouth, and Assistant-Paymaster Rickard.

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh has brought to the notice of the Lords of the Admiralty the splendid services rendered by the Coastguard of the Hull district to distressed ships, under very trying circumstances, during the severe gale which visited that part of the coast between the 29th and 31st of last month. The Coastguard were exposed for many hours to the severe weather, and saved lives from or rendered other services to no less than 81 wrecked or distressed vessels. One and all on every occasion fully did their duty, and upheld the high character of the force to which they belong. There were many instances of gallant behaviour, notably that of Charles Evans, boatman, of Robin Hood's Bay station, who at great personal risk went through a heavy surf, and succeeded in saving the crew of the Flower Girl. It is to be hoped that Evans may be awarded the Albert medal.

The Channel Squadron, under the command of Vice-Admiral Hood, C.B., consisting of the Minotaur, Agincourt, Achilles, and Northumberland, after being detained by stress of weather, left Queenstown on Tuesday for Vigo.

With reference to a paragraph of last week alluding to the issue of handbills calling for candidates for entry in the Navy, as boys 2nd class, we regret to find that the standard of height and chest-measurement for boys is slightly lowered and not raised. Possibly if their Lordships would take to heart our leading article of November 13 on "Unpopular Sailing Orders," and would show more consideration for the Blue-jacket in many little ways, the Service would be sufficiently popular to allow of a very high standard being still enforced, instead of its being necessary to lower it to obtain fresh entries.

Vice-Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock was at Bermuda in the Northampton on the 12th inst., with the Druid, Contest, and Flamingo in company.

The loss of the Clyde is not yet quite a settled matter, for the verdict given in favour of the Admiralty has been appealed against on the ground of misdirection and the improper rejection of evidence. A new trial will now take place.

The Detached Squadron, under the command of Rear-Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam, C.B., left St. Vincent, Cape de Verdes, on Saturday, for Monte Video. The Princes Albert Victor and George, on board the Bacchante, Captain Lord Charles Scott, are both in excellent health.

Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., was at Bombay, in his flagship, the Euryalus, on Tuesday last.

Admiral Clouet, the Minister of Marine and the Colonies of France, has presented a Bill for authorising the annexation of Tahiti. It is rumoured that Admiral Clouet will shortly be superseded in his office as Minister of Marine, by Admiral Jaures, who is now the French Ambassador to the Spanish Court.

Sir Allen Young, lieutenant commanding the London Brigade of Naval Artillery Volunteers, is about to leave England for a cruise in the Mediterranean in his yacht.

Lieutenant William Henn, in his yacht Gertrude, has carried off a prize of 5,000 francs, having won the race from Gibraltar to Oran. The Cetonia was one of the competitors. It is evident that Lieutenant Henn did not retire from the Active List from any distaste for a life at sea.

We recently called attention to the gallantry of the Seedie boy, Farabani, of the Wild Swan, in saving a slave from the jaws of a shark, and gave some account of the act. He has now been awarded the Albert medal, and the Gazette of Tuesday gives the following account of the services in respect of which the decoration has been conferred:—"On August 8 last, while the Wild Swan was off the coast of Mozambique, a fugitive slave-boy, named Farejallah, having jumped overboard from a stage alongside the ship, was immediately seized by an enormous shark, which bit off his leg at the knee, dragging him under the water. When he rose to the surface the shark again attacked him, tearing off his remaining leg and part of the thigh. On Farejallah beginning to rise to the surface again, closely followed by the shark, Farabani jumped from the netting into the water, and brought the unfortunate boy to the surface; nor did he leave the water till he had placed him in a position of safety. The captain of the Wild Swan adds that what makes this, if possible, a more gallant deed, is the fact that Farabini saw the whole of the horrible catastrophe from the first seizure of the boy, and that when he jumped into the water, not only the attacking shark, but three others, were seen close to the ship, attracted no doubt by the blood."

The following appears in last night's Gazette:—"Notice is hereby given, that the medals awarded to the officers and crews of her Majesty's ships Egeria, Fly, Modeste, Philomel, Ringdove, and Thistle, for service in the Malay Straits (Perak Expedition), between November 2, 1875, and March 20, 1876, are now in course of distribution. Application should be made personally or by letter addressed to the Accountant-General of the Navy and Comptroller of Navy Pay, Admiralty, London, S.W. Petty officers and seamen, whether applying in person or by letter, are required to produce their certificates of service."

We are glad to hear that our statement, of some weeks since, that the China command would be offered to Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, C.B., is likely to be confirmed at an early date.

Rear-Admiral Stirling arrived at Panama from Esquimalt in the Triumph on the 7th inst.

The lieutenant of the watch on board the Achilles at the time when she so narrowly escaped annihilating a merchant barque, on the passage to Queenstown, is not, we regret to hear, absolved from all blame by those who have inquired into the circumstances of the case. A better look-out on a hazy night might also have been expected from one of her Majesty's ships, if all we hear be true. The fact that the officer in question has not been held blameless is all the more regrettable, as up to this time he had a most promising career in the Service, having won special promotion over the heads of many who were his seniors.

At the recent examination of officers of the Royal Marines, at the conclusion of a course of military instruction at Eastney Barracks, Lieutenant F. White obtained 2,012 marks out of a possible total of 2,500; Lieutenant W. S. S. Harvest, 1,733; Lieutenant C. Field, 1,726; Lieutenant F. H. N. Wilson, 1,510; Lieutenant J. H. Swanton, 1,458; Lieutenant F. J. Raitt, 1,436; and Lieutenant A. H. Kellie, 1,089. Lieutenants White and Field were also specially mentioned in one or more subjects.

A report of the loss of the American Arctic ship Jeannette has been received, but it must, as yet, be accepted with reserve, and in the hope that it may not be true, as confirmatory evidence is wanting. The news has been received from the American steamer Courier, which arrived at Hakodadi on October 12, from the north, and reports that a steam whaler returned to Petropauloski had been informed by the natives during her cruise that the Jeannette had been totally lost, after having been cut through by the ice. It will be remembered that the Jeannette had been specially strengthened to resist such a possibility.

The restriction of men only being allowed to be recommended for the Coastguard from ships paying off has been removed for the present, and they may now be recommended from any ship.

The Admiralty have extended the period of service of Staff Captain Harvey, in his present appointment as Master Attendant of Devonport Dockyard, for two years from October 14, 1880.

At the last meeting of the Royal Humane Society, the silver medallion was unanimously voted to Lieutenant C. H. Bayly, of the Encounter, for saving life under the following circumstances:—An ordinary seaman belonging to the Encounter, named William Yarwood, while at sea in lat. 23° 13′ N. and long. 117° 41′ E., jumped overboard from the bow port, the vessel at the time being under steam, and proceeding at the rate of over seven knots an hour. On hearing the cry of "A man overboard!" Lieutenant Bayly, who was in the ward-room at the time, immediately rushed on deck, and seeing the man in the water, jumped from the embrasure port to the rescue. After swimming a considerable time, Lieutenant Bayly succeeded in reaching Yarwood, who was insensible and all but drowned, and supporting him until he could reach a lifebuoy which had been thrown overboard. In the meantime, a boat had been launched from the ship, and after the lapse of fully ten minutes both rescuer and rescued were picked up. The danger incurred by Lieutenant Bayly was much enhanced by the close proximity of reefs, which were known to abound with sharks.

Sir Edward Reed, who made an onslaught upon pensions generally some time ago in an electioneering speech, has now the support of two other notable Members of the House of Commons, Bradlaugh and Labouchere, to wit. Such a combination should, indeed, carry great weight in the eyes of the public.

The Right Hon. W. H. Smith (who has been at Constantinople in his yacht Pandora) and Mr. Goschen had the honour of dining with his Majesty the Sultan on Monday, the 15th inst. Mr. Smith was to leave Constantinople on the 16th inst. for Mitylene and Smyrna.

As might have been expected, Sir Bartle Frere is not satisfied with the latest efforts of the Admiralty Hydrographer in "geographical research." The newly-published charts, Nos. 2,089, 648, and 1,806 of the old preliminary surveys of 1825, of the east and west coasts of Africa, northward of the Cape Colony, are not considered by Sir Bartle Frere as being equal to the requirements of modern civilisation. At the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society on Monday last, Sir Bartle remarked:—"As to the extent to which the information recorded in our best maps was accurate, the coast-line from Orange River was near enough perhaps for some purposes of navigation, but further survey was necessary. He suggested that there should be instituted an official survey, a vessel being continually employed for the purpose, assisted by a party travelling along the coast; and the society would not be going beyond its proper sphere of action if it added the weight of its influence with the Government to insure a complete and thorough survey of the coast of the East and West South Africa. Against the cost of the operations must be set the loss incurred by shipwrecks, and he hoped that some such survey would be undertaken without delay." We trust their Lordships will listen to these evidences of "the unsurveyed world." The Sylvia is already in England, and there are therefore officers and men ready to hand for this service at the Cape; and no time should be lost in preparing a properly equipped surveying vessel, to carry out the wants of the Cape Colony, as expressed by Sir Bartle Frere.

The Arethusa, Leander, and Phæton are to carry four revolving guns, which will be mounted on carriages designed by the Elswick firm. Experimental trials with a carriage of this pattern are, we hear, to be made at Portsmouth on board the Kite.

The surveying vessel Alert, which some time ago completed her labours in the Straits of Magellan, has now arrived at Levuka, Fiji, and is engaged in making a survey between that place and Tonga. She will probably be at Sydney early in 1881.

We are glad to learn that a Bill, providing for the safer navigation of the Solent, has been drafted, and will be laid before Parliament by the Board of Trade, supported by the Admiralty, early next Session.

It would be interesting to know whether the Enchantress has been condemned as unseaworthy, for if not, it seems somewhat extravagant, even for a wealthy nation, to build a new and expensive vessel which is only used by the Authorities for a few days in each year.

It has been decided by the Admiralty to pay off and recommission at Hong Kong several ships now employed on the China station, the new crews being sent out early in January in the Tyne, which will return with the paid-off crews. The ships named for paying off are the Magpie, commanded by Captain Napier, since September, 1877, and which was recommissioned at Hong Kong in November, 1878; the Foxhound, commanded by Lieutenant Nowell, since November, 1877, when she was commissioned at Devonport; the Fly, commanded by Commander Adolphus St. Clair, since March, 1879, and which was recommissioned at Hong Kong, January 1, 1878; and the Vigilant, commanded by Lieutenant Annesley, since September, 1877, and recommissioned at Hong Kong in January, 1878. It will be seen that three out of the four vessels have already been recommissioned on the station, and three of the commands will fall vacant, the only reappointment being that of Commander St. Clair. The Magpie will be reduced to a lieutenant's command, and will be re-employed on surveying service on the China station.

The Fawn, on being recommissioned at Malta, will leave the Mediterranean station for surveying service on the East Indies command, taking the Red Sea survey on her passage. Complaints have recently been made by shipowners, notably the Peninsular and Oriental Company, as to the existing charts of the Red Sea, and the Admiralty has decided on having those waters re-surveyed without delay, some of the recent losses of ships being, it is alleged, attributable to defective charts.

In view of the possibility of accidents with the electric light—similar to that which caused the instant death of a stoker on board the Russian yacht Livadia—happening in our own Service, the Admiralty are taking precautionary measures. Captain Gordon, of the torpedo school-ship, has been called upon to report upon the case, and to suggest such regulations and cautionary orders as will put on their guard officers and men who may be placed in charge of electric gear.

We believe that it is not improbable that after next June the Admiralty will adopt the system of a limited competition for Naval cadetships. Those in power will thus be enabled, while admitting the principle of competition, to reward an even greater number of political adherents than is now the case.

The reliefs of ships-of-war on foreign stations appear to be falling somewhat into arrears. Seven steam-vessels, viz., the Swallow, Modeste, Penguin, Wild Swan, Griffon, Turquoise, Elk, and Pelican, have completed a three-years' commission abroad, and as far as we can ascertain, no immediate steps are being taken to provide ships for the relief of any, except the Penguin and Elk.

The good-service pension which became vacant by the death of General Brown-Grieve, C.B., of the Royal Marines, has been conferred upon General Schomberg, R.M.A. As there were three General officers on the Retired List who had not been provided for in this respect, and several on the Active List having a better show of service against their names, there was some difficulty in deciding who should be the recipient of this reward of £200 a year. General Schomberg is a fortunate officer, for although holding his own in seniority on the Generals' list, yet his first commission in the Service was junior to nine of his brother Generals who are still unfavoured with the G.C.B. General Schomberg obtained his present seniority through the separation of the Artillery branch of the corps from that of the Light Infantry. He has seen good service, having been in the Baltic, where he commanded the Marine Artillery of a division of gunboats at the bombardment of Sweaborg, in 1855, and also commanded the Royal Marine Artillery with the Brigade in China in 1857-59. He was deputy-adjutant-general from 1872 to 1875.

The delay in issuing orders for the Royal Marines to adopt the latest change in uniform, which principally consists in removing the badges of rank from the collar to the shoulder, was attributed to a desire to place something on the collar of the tunic and jacket, in lieu of the badges when removed. Without this the collar would look bare, and as various regiments wear the bugle, a castle, or other device on the collar, it was thought that the Marines might have either the bugle as light infantry, or the globe and laurel as the badge of the corps. The orders now issued make no reference, however, to a device for the collar.

In consequence of the length of time lieutenants of the Royal Marines still serve before obtaining their companies, it is desired to urge upon the Admiralty the advisability of adopting some measure for relieving the stagnation,—one suggestion being the offer of some additional years' service or a bonus to captains, as an inducement to retire.

A letter has appeared in the New York Tribune from General Gillmore, of the United States Engineers, on the subject of Ericsson's submarine torpedo artillery. The General maintains that though this invention may possess destructive powers in the highest degree, the invention cannot alter the existing relations between attack and defence, as the device can be used by every fleet, so that neither purely naval defence nor mixed defence can derive any strength from its use which is not equally shared by the attacking force. He contends that Ericsson's invention can have no greater effect than to hasten and intensify disasters on both sides in combats between fleets. It appears to us that the General's argument applies to all weapons, whether guns or torpedoes, which are open to adoption in all fleets.

The designs for the Afghan medal have been submitted to her Majesty for approval. The colour of the riband will be green and red.

The Canada Gazette of the 8th inst. contains the following appointments:—"Hon. Sir A. Campbell, K.C.M.G., late Minister of Militia and Defence, to be Postmaster-General for the Dominion of Canada, vice the Hon. J. O'Connor, appointed Secretary of State of Canada; Hon. J. P. R. A. Caron to be Minister of Militia and Defence, vice the Hon. Sir A. Campbell, K.C.M.G., appointed Postmaster-General."

We are happy to learn from several sources that the rations which we were led, by the way in which the official paper was quoted, to suppose constituted the week's supply of Cetewayo and his followers, now prisoners at Cape Town, are the daily issues; and very ample they are. The King, as the Zulus still consider him, has 2 lbs. of candles and one bar of soap every week, and one pint of square-face is issued to him daily.

A Militia lieutenant-colonel writes to suggest that as it is generally at licensed places of entertainment that British soldiers are insulted on account of their uniforms, it would be well for some instructions on the subject to be issued to those who issue such licences. If this cannot be done officially, he suggests that a committee of officers should be formed for the purpose of receiving notice of such insults, such committee, when in possession of full details, making it their business to call the attention of licensing magistrates, &c., to them. The mere publication of names, in such cases, would probably lessen the evil.

Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Wily (late 83rd Regiment), Director of Stores and Keeper of Militia Properties in Canada, has, at his own request, been placed on the Superannuation List from October 31. In a farewell order, General Luard, commanding the Dominion Militia, says:—"Lieutenant-Colonel Wily cannot be permitted to retire from office without an expression of the high value entertained of that officer's long and faithful service in the Militia and in the Store Branch of the Department."

We are glad to learn from Ottawa that a Canadian Militia Museum has been established in the Drill Hall at head-quarters in that city, with the object of preserving historical records and articles of interest relating to the Militia of the Dominion of Canada or to the Militia previous to confederation, or any of the provinces now constituting Canada.

Mr. Childers, acting on the advice of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, having in the summer abolished the theory that an Artillery or Engineer officer cannot hold high Staff employ at home, though able to do so in India, the Scientific Corps, we understand, await with interest its practical application, in one or more of their officers being appointed to divisional or brigade commands in England.

We learn from Ceylon that there has been an animated discussion in the Legislative Council, on Sir John Coode's proposals for the further extension of the breakwater works at Colombo. That gentleman submitted two alternative plans, but the result of the Council's deliberations has been to reject them both, and to adopt a design prepared by the local Surveyor-General, Colonel A. B. Fyers, R.E. The full expenditure on these works has been limited to £800,000, and it is decided that extra accommodation for the British Navy, if required, should be provided for by Imperial funds.

The dispatch of the 98th Regiment from Malta to India is the first instance that has ever occurred of both the West and East Indies being included in the same tour of foreign service of a British regiment. The nearest approach to this of late years was the case of the 69th, which had only returned a few weeks from the West Indies, when in 1857 it was sent to India.

The 1st Battalion, Rifle Brigade, having proceeded to India, the 1st Battalion, 15th Regiment, is now, with the exception of course, of the Guards, and of three or four of the 2nd Battalions raised in 1857 and 1858, the only battalion of British infantry that has never been stationed in that country.

An Indian contemporary hears that Colonel Hugh Rowlands, V.C., C.B., half-pay, late 34th Regiment, will shortly get a brigade command in Bengal, but we doubt the probability of this report being confirmed, as Colonel Rowlands already occupies a senior position on the list of colonels for promotion, and it seems scarcely likely that he will be offered an appointment which he would be disqualified from holding on his becoming a major-general in the course of the next few months.

Lieutenant-General J. M. Primrose, C.S.I., is returning home from India by the mail steamer Bangalore, which reached Suez on the 17th inst. He will land most probably at Southampton.

A notice appears in Indian General Orders regarding the new Afghan War medal. Her Majesty the Queen-Empress having been graciously pleased to confer a separate war medal in commemoration of the services of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers, European and native, employed on field service in Afghanistan, the Commander-in-Chief directs that commanding officers and heads of departments will furnish rolls, as early as practicable, of officers and others who served under their command and are considered entitled to the decoration now authorised. All claims must be submitted through the officer commanding the regiment, or the head of the department in which the applicant was serving, at the time when the decoration was earned. The operations for which the medal is granted are held to have commenced in the first phase of the war, on November 22, 1878, and to have closed on May 26, 1879. And, similarly, for the second phase, from September 3, 1879, to August 15, 1880, for the Khyber and Kurum lines; and to September 20, 1880, for Southern Afghanistan. None but those who crossed the frontier on duty between these dates are to be included in the rolls.

We gladly give insertion to the following extract from the Irish Times, and we regret that so many of our contemporaries were erroneously led into publishing reports of inefficiency on the part of our Military Departments. The Irish Times throws some light upon the causes which mislead non-military critics in such matters, and we are glad to find that there has been no proved shortcomings in the Departments presided over by Commissary-General Sir E. Strickland and Deputy- Commissary-General of Ordnance Nagle, respectively :—

"Our attention has been called to the remarks made by our special correspondent at Lough Mask with reference to the inefficiency of one of our military departments. We have it on excellent authority that the Commissariat, properly so-called, has been found thoroughly efficient, and that no complaint has been made to the officer in charge of the district, or to Sir Edward Strickland. We are glad to state these facts. At the same time, if there are any military departments regarding which a civilian may pardonably plead ignorance, they are those entitled respectively the Commissariat and Ordnance. We are not sure that a young deputy-assistant-commissary would off-hand be able to explain the mysteries of the organisation. Within a comparatively short period we have had military storekeepers, barrack-masters, purveyors, controllers, commissaries, a Military Train, Army-Service Corps, Ordnance, &c., with such a multiplicity of deputies, assistants, seniors, and subs as to puzzle any civilian not very conversant with the departmental affairs of the Army. There is a mess-room story that a heedless young D.A.C.G., in a small garrison town, was, by the confiding natives, devoutly believed in as a General officer. It is satisfactory to know—whatever other branch of administration was at fault—that the Commissariat did not fail in providing for the poor fellows encamped at Lough Mask."

MILITARY PRISONS.

SIR,—I, and no doubt many other officers, read with much interest the article on the new Military Prison Regulations, in your number of the 2nd of last month. I had some difficulty in obtaining a copy of these rules, which it does not seem to have been thought necessary to send to commanding officers of regiments, and I quite agree with your opinion that no Military man can have had anything to do with such an incongruous production. I see by Rule 82 that corporal punishment can now be inflicted with a "birch rod;" I presume this intended to be in keeping with the boy-soldiers now filling our ranks, who will now be treated as the obstreperous lads in the reformatories. Why not give commanding officers this jurisdiction? In the excellent speech of his Royal Highness Commanding-in-Chief, at the Mansion House, he appealed to the civilian population to welcome and encourage the red-coats to their social and public assemblies as military citizens. Nothing would tend more to this end than keeping military offenders by themselves, to be dealt with by a military executive, instead of, as it were, flaunting them before the public, by sending them to civil jails. I have been a "Visitor" to the military prison near Edinburgh, and also at Dublin, Cork, and Limerick, and they appear to be admirably managed. The strictly military discipline kept up, together with the regularity and cleanliness enforced, must be the means of instilling a healthy element, which would be a lasting benefit to a soldier inclined to resist authority, or of irregular habits. I think, with many others I have conversed with on the subject, that it is a great mistake to send soldiers for military crimes to civil jails, and I hope it will be discontinued. Their punishments, as their crimes, should be military.—I am, &c.,

A FIELD OFFICER AND MILITARY PRISON VISITOR.

The Missions to Seamen Society has received £100 from Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., towards its chaplaincy for fishermen at Hastings. The Rev. C. R. Dawes, M.A., late of the Royal Navy, has been some months at work amongst the fishermen, and hopes are entertained that a church, formerly of little use to them, may yet be really helpful to the men and their families.

Of late the question of tattooing (not branding) has been revived, to act as a check against desertion, and prevent the re-enlistment of bad characters. Some time ago, when the desertions were at the rate of 5,000 a year (one artilleryman had enlisted and sold his kit eleven times in two years before he was detected), Sir James E. Alexander submitted to and left at the Horse Guards a small instrument, with a spring (it cost £5) to tattoo instantaneously, and with hardly any pain, a man above the left wrist. Needles effected this, and Indian ink rubbed on the punctures left the impression of a neat small Queen's crown, in blue, the size of a sixpence, and indelible. Sailors are in the habit of tattooing each other, and with strange devices, sometimes; a crown would be better for them, as well as for soldiers, but all ranks, commissioned and non-commissioned, rank and file, should be proud to exhibit this honourable badge.

REGIMENTAL COLOURS.

Brigdr.-Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., speaking at a banquet at Grocers' Hall on Thursday night, said he was aware that certain reforms were necessary in the Army. Against one, however, he must protest, and that was the abolition of regimental colours. It was said that valuable lives were sacrificed in endeavouring to save a mere rag; but that rag was the emblem of honour, around which all rallied in the hour of danger. It was the soldier's star and the consecrated emblem of his devotion. It was true that recently in Afghanistan many valuable lives were lost at Maiwand, and that in one regiment alone 273 fell round the colours. Col. Galbraith, when last seen on his bended knee, still grasped the colours of his corps, and beside him fell many whose names would live for ever in the hearts of all who served in the 66th. The colours were the standards around which fugitives would rally and brave men die, and it would be about as wise to take away the regimental colours as it would be to abolish the Union Jack in the Navy.

A correspondent, writing from Queenstown of a visit to the Queenstown Sailors' Home, says he was much struck by the order, the cleanliness, and the general comfortable appearance of the Institution. To the present steward, Mr. Arthur Warner, great credit is due for the unremitting care he has taken to render the Home attractive, and the registers show how well he has succeeded. In 1877, the year before he joined the Home, the number of seamen entered in the registers was 830, of whom 491 belonged to the Royal Navy. In 1879 the number registered was 2,946, of whom 2,482 were of the Royal Navy. Last year 464 merchant seamen were accommodated, 111 of these being shipwrecked seamen, and 49 of these latter were relieved by the Home, and forwarded to their destination at its expense. Next year, when the Repulse takes the place of the present guard-ship, the sphere of usefulness of this excellent institution will be enlarged. The sailors have a library, a reading-room well supplied with papers, and a billiard-table is shortly to be added to the other attractions. The dormitories are the very pink of neatness and comfort, and together with the cuisine speak well for the matron's zeal. I had only one fault to find with the entire arrangement, and that was the ridiculously small salary given to the matron. For superintending the domestic arrangements generally, she is only allowed £5 per year! Capt. Buckle, R.N., of the Revenge, has taken great interest in the institution, and his private purse has supplied many of its comforts, both transient and permanent. Admiral Hamilton, his flag-lieutenant, and secretary, have done wondrous good, and have earned the gratitude of all frequenting the Sailors' Home.

The development of the destructive capabilities of the Nordenfelt gun has led the Admiralty to recognise the necessity of increasing the thickness of plates intended as a protection to those torpedo and other boats which, in certain contingencies, would have to face the fire of these weapons. Plates that were rifle-proof have hitherto been considered sufficient, but now their thickness is to be determined by a consideration of the important fact that a 1-inch Nordenfelt gun can perforate a $\frac{3}{4}$-inch Bessemer steel plate at 200 yards, and a $\frac{5}{8}$-inch plate at 300 yards.—Standard.

A laudatory paragraph of one "Dr. Stradling, of H.M.S. Elbe," has gone the rounds of the Medical Press, and at last the Daily Telegraph has written one of its gushing leaders on this supposed naval officer, who is allowing himself to be generally bitten by snakes of all kinds. Can it be that some waggish medical students have concocted a hoax in drawing up a report of the effects of snake bites, and have chosen the name of one who is not to be found in the Navy List, and a ship which does not exist in her Majesty's Navy? It is perfectly certain that there is no naval Dr. Stradling, neither is there an Elbe in the Royal Navy. It would appear that the paper with the largest circulation in the world does not possess a Navy List.

The subjoined Fleet Circulars have been issued :—"My Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty are pleased to direct that in future the captains and commanding officers of her Majesty's ships and vessels are to be held responsible for ascertaining that the continuity of the lightning-conductors on board the ships and vessels under their command is complete, and also for maintaining such lightning-conductors in a state of efficiency. In ships which have galvanometers on board the conductors are to be tested periodically, and in ships which are not supplied with such instruments the commanding officer is to apply for the conductors to be tested, when an opportunity offers, at a dockyard." "My Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty are pleased to direct that, from the date of this Circular, captains appointed as commodores of the 2nd class, when on passage in mail packets or hired vessels, to or from their commands, shall have similar reserved accommodation to that provided for flag-officers, but shall be liable only to the rate of messing contribution prescribed for captains in Art. 87 of the Addenda to Queen's Regulations, 1880, viz., 2s. per diem. They will also, on these occasions, and if on passage while holding the above-mentioned appointments, be allowed conveyance for the authorised number of servants in their staff, instead of for only the two specified in Article 1,417 of the Queen's Regulations. My Lords are also pleased to direct that warrant officers provided with messing at the public expense in her Majesty's ships, or troopships, contract packets, or hired vessels, &c., shall be relieved from paying any messing contribution for themselves. When, however, granted passage for their wives and families, they will be liable to contribution on their account at the rates prescribed for commissioned officers in Article 87 of the Addenda (1880) to the Queen's Regulations."

The Civil and Military Gazette understands that Col. C. M. MacGregor, C.B., C.S.I., C.I.E., Bengal S.C., will succeed Major-Gen. C. C. Johnson, Bengal S.C., as Q.M.G. Gen. Johnson has proceeded on leave for two years, and is not likely to return to India, as he comes into colonel's allowances before his leave expires.

* Southern Afghanistan.

The opening meeting of the new Dublin Soldiers' Institute was held in the lecture-hall of the building on Wednesday afternoon. This institute is the first which has been erected for soldiers in Ireland upon a broad and generous basis. It is erected upon the southern side of Parkgate Street, close to the entrance of the Phœnix Park, the rear extending down to the river Liffey, and it thus occupies a central position between the three principal metropolitan brrracks—the Royal, the Richmond, and Island Bridge. The chair was taken at half-past 3 o'clock by Lord James Butler. Amongst those present were—Lord Plunket, Bishop of Meath; Major-Gen. Glyn, commanding the Dublin District; Col. Speedy, Major-Gen. Stoney, Rev. G. C. Williams, D.D., Senior Chaplain to the Forces in Dublin; Rev. T. B. Speedy, B.A., Chaplain to the Forces, &c.

The rumour circulated in the Pall Mall Gazette of Gen. Warre's immediate retirement from the command of the Bombay Army was, says a Bombay paper, probably due to the fact that, according to the average rate of casualties, Gen. Warre should become a full general either in November or December. Bombay is not a full general's command, and if Gen. Warre really becomes a full general by promotion, he will have to retire from the Presidency, either before or upon the expiry of the present official year. But the very reason that would prompt his retirement would necessarily prevent the appointment of Sir Charles Staveley, and it is impossible to trace any sort of foundation for that rumour.

At each of the last three meetings of the Committee of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, being those held since the recent most disastrous gales, the number of applications on behalf of shipwrecked seafaring men and distressed widows and orphans, and the amount of relief necessarily granted in aid thereof, was reported to be wholly without parallel in the society's annals during all the forty years of its existence. These urgent claims upon the charity, indeed, were in their total extent so unforeseen, as well as so unprecedented, that it has been found imperative to make adequate provision for the pressing need by specially realising a portion of the society's invested funds, to the detriment of its other operations. The sum of nearly £700 has lately been received as a gift, in trust, from M. Emile Robin, of Paris, the funded annual value of which is to be expressly awarded to the captain and chief officers of the British vessel which may, in each year, be adjudged to have incurred the greatest risk in saving from imminent peril the crew of any other vessel, British or foreign. It is worthy of note that the donor of this reward for English seamen has founded a precisely similar reward for the seamen of France, Italy, and Holland, in their respective countries.

The first meeting of the supporters of the Portsmouth Royal Sailors' Home since the administration of the affairs of the institution were severely criticised was held on Wednesday afternoon, when there was an unusually large attendance, including Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and many Naval and Military officers, and a large number of petty officers, seamen, and marines. The directors reported, in reference to the temperance branch, that they had received but little assistance from those interested in the temperance movement, and that £1,600 remained to be collected towards the purchase of premises. As far as the seamen themselves were concerned, the branch was a success. The general position of the institution was reported to be flourishing. On the important subject of seamen's allotments, which gave rise to so much discussion a short time since, the directors reported that Mr. Thorne, the superintendent, had handed over the whole of the accounts to them, and that they were now responsible to the men for the safety of the money allotted to them to take care of. In making this announcement, they paid a high compliment to Mr. Thorne for the highly satisfactory manner in which he had carried on this branch of the work. Various speakers, including Prince Edward, the Mayor, and the vicars of Portsmouth and Portsea, bore testimony to the excellent manner in which the Home was conducted. The report was adopted, and the customary votes of thanks were passed, after which the seamen and marines present were entertained at dinner.

The Army.

1st Life Guards. The Times states that Gen. Lord Lucan, G.C.B., returns to Ireland to spend the winter at Castlebar, County Mayo.

6th Dragoon Guards. Capt. Fife is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst. Lieut. Douglas-Hamilton and 2nd Lieut. Owen have been granted leave from India to England, on private affairs.

7th Dragoon Guards. Capt. Banks is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst., en route to join on promotion from the 12th Lancers.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). Lieut. Bolton has been granted an extension of his leave of absence to May 12 next, on the recommendation of a medical board.

8th Hussars. Lieut.-Col. Chaplin, V.C., has been appointed president of a committee which has assembled at Rawul Pindee, for the purpose of reporting on signalling equipment for field service in India. Capt. Rawlinson and Lieut. Fell are passengers to England in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst.

10th Hussars. A Cavalry Brigade, 3rd Division, Southern Afghanistan Field Force order, dated Sept. 17, appoints Lieut. R. B. W. Fisher, 10th Hussars, to be provost-marshal to the brigade, in addition to his other duties, and during such period as the cavalry brigade may be detached.

12th Lancers. Lieut. Mack has been granted leave from India to England, on urgent private affairs.

13th Hussars. The Times of India says:—"The regiment (13th Hussars) at Lucknow received orders to start for Candahar on Nov. 1. Previous orders had appointed the 21st inst. for the departure, and it is difficult to understand what necessity can have justified the military authorities in inflicting, on all concerned, the great inconvenience attending so sudden a change of plans." Capt. Christie has passed the examination in Persian, in India, under Clause 8. Vet.-Surg. Garratt has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

15th Hussars. The regiment left Sibi on Oct. 15, 16, and 17, en route to Meean Meer. Capt. White, Lieuts. the Hon. R. Legh and Browne, and 2nd Lieut. Holland have been granted leave from India to England, on private affairs, and precede head-quarters.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The freedom of the City of London and a sword of honour will, it is stated, be presented to Gen. Sir Frederick Roberts, in recognition of his recent services in Afghanistan. The General has consented to receive the freedom of the Grocers' Company, which the court of assistants propose to confer on him. He has accepted the invitation of the stewards of the 216th anniversary festival of the Scottish Corporation to attend the banquet on St. Andrew's Day, when the Earl of Fife will preside, and he has also accepted a special invitation to dine with his brother officers of the regiment at the Royal Artillery mess-room, Woolwich, and there is a general disposition to honour one who has brought so much distinction upon his corps. On Wednesday, Sir Frederick and Lady Roberts dined with Mr. and Mrs. Childers, in Princess Gardens, to meet H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge. On Thursday Gen. Roberts, accompanied by Major-Gen. Hills, V.C., proceeded to Windsor, and dined with her Majesty on Thursday evening, remaining at the Castle for the night, returning to London yesterday. To-day the General goes with the Duke of Sutherland, Lord Lytton, Sir Bartle Frere, Sir Richard Temple, and Canon Duckworth to Sandringham, on a visit to the Prince and Princess of Wales. The day fixed for the Dublin banquet is the 16th prox., and his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant has signified his intention of being present.

The following changes have been ordered to be carried out among the batteries stationed in the Bombay Presidency:—"Royal Horse Artillery: E Baty. B Brig., from Candahar to Kirkee. Field Artillery: I Baty. 1st Brig., from Kirkee to Ahmedabad and Baroda; A Baty. 2nd Brig., from Ahmedabad and Baroda to Kirkee; C Baty. 2nd Brig., from Candahar to Ahmednager. Garrison Artillery: 9th Baty. 8th Brig., from Aden to England; 10th Baty. 8th Brig., from Fort William to Bombay; 11th Baty. 8th Brig., from Rangoon to Aden; 13th Baty. 8th Brig., from Bombay to Aden; 14th Baty. 8th Brig., from Aden to England; 16th Baty. 8th Brig., from Lucknow to Aden; 17th Baty. 8th Brig., from Mhow to Bombay; 2nd Baty. 9th Brig., from Aden to England; 5th Baty. 11th Brig., from Candahar to Mhow; 8th Baty. 11th Brig., from Bombay to Fort William." I Baty. 1st Brig., R.A., was to have marched from Kirkee on the 5th inst., en route to Ahmedabad and Baroda. On relief by the above battery, A Baty. 2nd Brig. will march from those stations on Jan. 1, 1881, and arrive at Kirkee about Feb. 18.

Gen. Sir W. Fenwick Williams, Bart., G.C.B., has arrived at Cannes, with the intention of spending the winter there.

The Bolarum correspondent of the Bombay Gazette, writing on Oct. 23, says:—"Bolarum was very much shocked this afternoon by a report that a young artillery officer had destroyed himself. It was difficult at first to realise the possibility of such an event among the few military officers here, the station being so quiet and uneventful that a death from ordinary causes creates much commotion; but the report was true. A young lieutenant, Mr. Bampfield, who only came into the station from Secunderabad last evening to join the Hyderabad Contingent Battery, shot himself through the head with a pistol by placing the muzzle over one of his eyes. The gentleman with whom Lieut. Bampfield was residing, observing that he looked tired and unwell, had recommended his going to bed. He did so, but while Capt. Cambier proceeded to inspect certain repairs which were being executed on the terrace-roof of his bungalow, the unfortunate young gentleman got out of bed and committed the deed. He was an excellent man, of quiet demeanour and steady habits, a regular attendant at church, and a reverent communicant. With his increased means, he had hoped to have helped his mother. It is reported that he suffered from ill-health (dyspepsia), and was somewhat gloomy and nervous. He left his mother's address in tremulous writing on a piece of paper. The rash deed was, no doubt, committed in a fit of temporary insanity."

In his despatch, giving details of the operations of the force which he took out of Candahar to assist Gen. Burrows after the Maiwand disaster, the late Gen. Brooke writes:—"The well-directed fire of the two guns of C-2 Royal Artillery proved most useful. They were excellently commanded throughout the day by Capt. W. Law, whom I desire to bring to special notice as an officer of much professional knowledge, zeal, and forwardness."

As was anticipated, Capt. S. G. F. Selfe, R.A., officiating-commandant, No. 2 Field Battery, H.C., Ellichpore, has been appointed to the permanent command of No. 4 Field Battery, H.C., at Aurangabad, vice Major H. C. Seton, R.A., who died on his voyage to Europe on the 11th ult. Within three months the H.C. has last two officers, Major Seton and Capt. Mainguy, R.A.

A serious accident has befallen Capt. W. O. C. Shippard, 7th Brig., while undergoing a course of equitation in the Riding School at Woolwich, while preparing to pass a firemaster's examination. His condition was at first so critical that all military music was suspended in the garrison, but some improvement is now reported, and a classical concert arranged to be given in the soldiers' theatre by the Royal Artillery band was allowed to take place.

Lieuts. N. D. Findlay, 5th Brig., and G. V. Kemball, 3rd Brig., have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Major J. C. Studdy, 8th Brig., Capts. F. L. Graves, 11th Brig., and A. J. Dunnage, 6th Brig., Lieut. A. H. Gordon, 9th Brig., and Vet.-Surg. M. C. Mitchell are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst.

Capt. E. Wighton has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Lieut. J. MacDonnell, C Brig., R.H.A., and Vet.-Surg. R. Rowe arrived home from India on Thursday, in H.M.S. Orontes.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Pioneer says that the appointment of Gen. Sir Alexander Taylor, K.C.B., to be president of the Royal Indian Engineering College at Cooper's Hill, is one upon which the India Office may justly be congratulated. When Sir Alexander Taylor not long ago retired from the Service it was commonly felt by his brother officers and those who had served with him in the Mutiny that neither his services nor his abilities had been sufficiently recognised, and Gen. Taylor's contemporaries will probably be agreed in thinking that he should long ago have held some one or other of the highest military posts in the country. It is something to find, however, that, in a different capacity, his claims to employment even at this late hour have not been disregarded. On other grounds, too, the appointment commends itself. The Engineering College has recently reached a stage when its success may depend in some measure at least upon the support of the outside public—and, therefore, if it is not to go the way of other Indian colleges, any reputation which it may have attained, both professionally and otherwise, as a desirable place of education needs to be maintained; and no better means could have been taken for ensuring this than the selection of so distinguished and able an officer as Sir Alexander Taylor to be its president.

Major G. L. C. Merewether (late Bombay), the newly-appointed Chairman of the Bombay Port Trust, had taken up his appointment when the mail left India.

The Times says:—"Major-Gen. L. Nicholson, C.B., R.E., Lieutenant-Governor of the Island of Jersey, where he has been stationed for the last two years, is on the point of leaving, having received the colonial appointment of Governor of Tasmania."

Lieut. C. B. Mayne is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst.

1st, or Royal Scots. The following officers are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay with the head-quarters and service companies of the 2nd Batn. on the 5th inst., viz.:—Lieut.-Col. Stuart, Majors Manners and Stewart, Capts. Morison, Booth, Smith, O'Connor, Shaw, and Money; Lieuts. Lindesay, Tippinge, Stisted (adjt.), Broadley, Boyd, Goold-Adams, Williams, Login, Da Costa, and Acheson; 2nd Lieuts. Trench and Robinson; Capt. and Pymr. Kennedy, and Qrmr. Lonsdale. 2nd Lieut. Trench has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

2nd Queen's. Lieut.-Col. Phillips, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for fifteen months, on private affairs. Lieuts. Robson, 2nd Batn., and Allen, 1st Batn., are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst. Lieut. Pain has been recommended for the adjutancy of the 2nd Batn., vice Collis.

3rd Buffs. See 80th Regiment.

4th King's Own. The 2nd Batn. has taken the place of the 61st, which left Bombay in the Government steamer Tenasserim, on the 28th ult., en route to Southern Afghanistan, to take the place of the 15th Regt., ordered to return to India. The head-quarters and five companies, under command of Lieut.-Col. Stokes, arrived at the Sassoon Dock, Bombay, on the 27th ult., in two special trains, from Poona, and proceeded at once to the barracks at Colaba.

5th Fusiliers. Capt. Kilgour, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for 15 months, on private affairs. Lieut. Pennington has been allowed to resign his probationary appointment for the Indian S.C.

7th Fusiliers. The death is announced as having taken place suddenly at Candahar, from small-pox, of Lieut.-Col. Daubeny, commanding the 2nd Batn. The deceased, who had lately distinguished himself at the head of a brigade in the field, entered the Army Nov. 23, 1852; became lieut., Sept. 8, 1854; capt., Nov. 23, 1855; major, June 23, 1869; brevet lieut.-col., Oct. 1, 1877; and lieut.-col., Sept. 25, 1878. He served with the 90th Regt. in the Crimea from Dec. 5, 1854, including the capture of the quarries, siege and fall of Sebastopol, attack of the Redan on June 18, and formed one of the storming party on Sept. 8 (medal with clasp, and Turkish medal). The command of the 2nd Batn. will most probably pass to Major Sparks, Capt. Paddon becoming major, Lieut. Thunder capt., and 2nd Lieut. Moss, lieut. In his despatch, furnishing particulars of the operations of the force which he took out of Candahar after the Maiwand disaster, the late Gen. Brooke writes:—"I would ask the Lieut.-General's (Primrose's) special consideration and approval for my Staff officers, Capt. F. W. V. Leckie, 8th Bombay N.I.; Brig.-Major and Capt. F. C. Keyser, Royal Fusiliers, orderly officer,—both of whom are officers of superior attainments and qualifications. The zealous assistance they afforded me throughout the whole day (July 28) was invaluable." And again, "Lieut. R. P. B. Rodick, Royal Fusiliers, commanded his detachment (3 officers and 70 rank and file) to my satisfaction, leading it in a very forward manner against positions of exceptional difficulty." Major Beauchamp, 2nd Batn., arrived home from India on Thursday in H.M.S. Orontes.

8th King's. Capt. Jervis, 2nd Batn., arrived home from India on Thursday in H.M.S. Orontes.

9th Regiment. As some exaggerated reports concerning the cholera in the 2nd Batn. appear to have prevailed since the return of the corps from Afghanistan, the Civil and Military Gazette of Lahore is glad to publish an authentic account of the facts, with which it has been favoured. From Sept. 8, the date of arrival at Peshawur, sixteen Europeans were attacked, of whom ten died; of native followers five were attacked, and two died. After Sept. 20, no cases occurred till the regiment reached camp Mundra on Oct. 25, when two Europeans were attacked and died. The batn. was to have left Jhelum on the 3rd inst. for Meean Meer, en route to Subathu and Jutogh, where it is to be stationed.

10th Regiment. See 80th Regiment. The 2nd Batn., from Fort Grange, Gosport, takes over the quarters at Portsmouth vacated by the 2nd Batn. 12th, proceeded to the Channel Islands.

11th Regiment. Capt. Kinder, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate, and arrived home on Thursday in H.M.S. Orontes. Lieut. Stanley, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which left Bombay on the 6th inst.

12th Regiment. H.M.S. Assistance embarked the 2nd Batn. at Portsmouth, on Wednesday, for conveyance to Jersey, but had to still lie alongside the railway jetty at Portsmouth for some time, waiting for the wind to moderate. The regiment has supplied so many drafts for foreign service, and has lost so many men by expiration of time of service, that it does not number at the present time more than 290 men. 2nd Lieut. Poulton, 1st Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst.

13th Light Infantry. Lieut. Templer, 1st Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed officiating wing-subaltern of the Corps of Guides, on probation.

14th Regiment. Major Burton and 2nd Lieuts. Murray and Roberts, 2nd Batn., have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

15th Regiment. Brevet Major Burnett, assist.-adjt.-gen., and Lieut. Wood, transport officer, left Candahar on the 15th ult., en route to India, with the returning Bombay troops. 2nd Lieut. Maunsell, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst., having been granted leave to England for 12 months, on medical certificate.

17th Regiment. Lieut. Younghusband, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed officiating wing-officer of the 2nd Punjab Cavalry, on probation. 2nd Lieuts. Kerr and Semini, 2nd Batn., have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee. Lieut. Stacpole, 2nd Batn., is a passenger to England in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst.

18th Royal Irish. The Times of India says:—"Under instructions from the Horse Guards, Brevet Col. T. D. Baker, C.B., 18th Foot, A.D.C. to the Queen, is directed to proceed to England, travelling at the public expense. Col. Baker, who, it will be remembered, came out to India as military secretary to the late Viceroy, and was afterwards appointed to a brigade command in Afghanistan, goes home in the Peshawur with Gen. Roberts." Col. Baker, it will be remembered, arrived in England with Gen. Roberts. The death is announced from Afghanistan of an old and very meritorious officer, Qrmr. R. Barrett, 1st Batn., as having occurred at Ali Musjid on the 17th ult. The deceased, after a long service in the ranks, was promoted qrmr., July 24, 1872, having previously held for many years the appointment of serjt.-major. He was greatly respected by all ranks, and had done duty with the battalion throughout its service in Afghanistan, being most assiduous in the discharge of his duties. 2nd Lieut. Doran, 1st Batn., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

19th Regiment. A telegram from Halifax, N.S., announces the arrival there of H.M.S. Crocodile from Bermuda, with the 1st Batn. on board.

20th Regiment. Major Bowlby has resigned his appointment as the head of the Police Force in Cyprus. Capt. Randolph, 2nd Batn., is to be seconded from the 21st prox., on appointment as adjt. of the 7th Royal Lancashire Militia.

22nd Regiment. Capt. Sealy and Lieut. Gordon-Cumming, 2nd Batn., are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst. Lieut. Rattray, 2nd Batn., a probationer for the Indian S.C., has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

24th Regiment. Brevet Major Much, 1st Batn., is about to be seconded from the 4th prox., on appointment as adjt. of the Royal South Wales Borderers Militia. Lieut. Birch. 2nd Batn., was to have been granted passage from India to England in H.M.S. Orontes, due at Portsmouth to-morrow. Capt. and Pymr. Griffith, 2nd Batn., sailed from Bombay in H.M.S. Malabar on the 6th inst., en route to Portsmouth. The 1st Batn. left Gosport yesterday, for Colchester, to make room for the 59th Regiment, just arrived home from India.

25th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. was to have embarked at Devonport yesterday in H.M.S. Himalaya, for conveyance to Queenstown, en route to Fermoy. Brevet Major Coke completes his term of service as adjt. of the 2nd West York Militia on the 10th prox.

28th Regiment will leave Fermoy on Monday or Tuesday next for Templemore, to relieve the 64th. Capt. Marshman is to be seconded from the 30th inst., on appointment as adjt. of the Royal North Gloucestershire Militia, Lieut. M'Crea obtaining the company.

30th Regiment. Capt. Lindesay completes his period of service as adjt. of the 5th Royal Lancashire Militia on the 4th prox. Capt. Cooke is en route to England in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst.

33rd Regiment. Lieut. Jenkins has passed in India the examination in Persian, under Clause 8.

34th Regiment. Capt. Gage completes his term of service as adjt. of the Royal Westmoreland Militia on the 23rd prox. 2nd Lieut. Hogge has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee. Capt. Richmond arrived home from India on Thursday in H.M.S. Orontes.

39th Regiment. Lieut. Kentish has completed his period of service with the depôt, and been ordered to embark on Dec. 30 to join the service companies in India.

47th Regiment. Capt. Cooper has rejoined head-quarters at Dublin from temporary employment in the Intelligence Branch of the Quartermaster-General's Department, Horse Guards. Lieut. Fraser has been appointed to the depôt at Preston for two years.

48th Regiment. Brevet Major Bally arrived home from India on Thursday in H.M.S. Orontes.

ROYAL MARINES.

Col. G. B. Heastey, commandant R.M.L.I., having proceeded on leave of absence, the command at Stonehouse Barracks has devolved on Lieut.-Col. and 2nd Comdt. R. W. B. Hunt, A.D.C.

Capt. J. F. Luxmoore, R.M.L.I., has been detailed for duty at the Royal Marine depôt at Deal.

The Admiralty have refused to grant any remuneration to Major Albert H. Ozzard, R.M.L.I., for conducting the prosecution of Serjt. Marshman, who was arraigned before a court-martial, and charged with improper marking at Wimbledon.

On Wednesday evening the annual festival of the Soldiers' Home, in connection with the Royal Marine Artillery at Eastney, was held in the lecture hall of the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth. There was a very large attendance of Marines. Addresses on temperance and kindred subjects were delivered, and an attractive musical programme was gone through, the band of the Royal Marine Artillery being present.

54th Regiment. Capt. Dury has passed the higher-proficiency examination in the Urdu language.

55th Regiment. An Allahabad divisional order, dated Oct. 7, 1880, appointing Capt. E. H. C. Braddon, 55th Foot, aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. R. Hume, C.B., to act as aide-de-camp to Brigdr.-Gen. A. H. Cobbe, C.B., during his temporary command of the Allahabad Division.

59th Regiment. H.M.S. Orontes, with the head-quarters and service companies on board, arrived at Portsmouth on Thursday afternoon from India. The regiment landed yesterday, and went to head-quarters at Gosport. The officers who came home in the Orontes were Lieut.-Col. Lacy; Major Frampton; Capts. Griffiths, Elias, Gordon, Lawlor, Stoyte, and Buchanan; Lieuts. Lucas, Irvine, Apthorp, Worgan, Battye, Lake, Leonard, and Watson (adjt.); 2nd Lieuts. White, Troynam, MacAdam, Goff, and Pile; Qrmr. Rowland; 41 sergeants, 15 trumpeters and drummers, 665 rank and file, 40 women and 101 children. The 59th served throughout the campaign in Afghanistan, having formed part of the Quetta division. After marching to Candahar, it proceeded to Cabul; and on the troops being ordered back, it proceeded to Umballa, and then to Deolalee and Bombay. Capt. Burge, paymaster of the 76th Regt., has been ordered to Gosport to take up the duties of paymaster to the regiment, in which he served for many years prior to accepting an unattached company in 1870.

60th Rifles. The 2nd Batn. was to have left Sibi on the 4th or 5th inst. for Meean Meer, en route to England. The Lahore paper says:—"Lieut. Campbell, 60th Rifles, aide-de-camp to Lieut.-Gen. Hughes, C.B., commanding the Sirhind Division, and formerly to Gen. Sir Sam Browne, leaves Umballa to take up the appointment of aide-de-camp to Sir Ashley Eden. He will be succeeded by Lieut. Hughes, of the Guides, who returns from the front to take up the appointment on his father's staff." Lieut. Hon. C. S. G. Canning, 4th Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst.

61st Regiment. The Bombay Gazette says:—"When the 61st Regt. left England it was thought that it would, on arrival in India, proceed on service to Afghanistan; consequently the families did not accompany it. When, however, the authorities at home found that the 61st was to be quartered in the Presidency, the families were embarked in the Serapis on the 3rd inst., and they will arrive in Bombay on or about the 1st proximo only to find that the regiment has, after all, proceeded on service. We can imagine the bitter disappointment that will be felt by the wives and children when they reach Bombay. The 61st Regt. goes direct to Quettah to relieve the 78th Highlanders, and the latter regiment moves to Candahar to take the place of the 2nd Batn. 15th Regt., under orders to return to India in consequence of sickness." The depôt has been established at Mhow, and not at Poona, as was at one time proposed.

63rd Regiment. Capt. Forsyth completes his five years as adjt. of the Royal Wilts Militia on the 11th prox.

64th Regiment will embark at Queenstown on Tuesday next in H.M.S. Himalaya, for conveyance to Dover.

65th Regiment. Capt. Jobling has passed the higher-proficiency examination in the Urdu language. A correspondent in Cyprus, whose letter is dated Nov. 9, writes to the Daily News:—"I am informed that Major Bowlby, of the local police, has resigned; and that the post of Commandant-General of Police, which he held, has been abolished. I further learn that the old police force (called the Zaptiehs) and the new one erroneously bearing the name of 'Pioneers,' are going to be amalgamated, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Gordon; also that part of the old police force are to be dismissed and a new one created."

66th Regiment. The regiment, or what remains of it, was to have reached Kurrachee about November 5, where it is to remain until it embarks for England, about Jan. 20. The following has been published in the Gazette of India:—"The Viceroy and Governor-General in Council has much satisfaction in directing the publication, for general information, in continuation of G. G. O. No. 551 of 1880, of the subjoined correspondence regarding the gallant and devoted conduct of the 66th (the Berkshire) Regt. of Foot at the affair of Maiwand, on July 27 last:—From Major-Gen. G. R. Greaves, C.B., Adjutant-General in India, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department.—(No. 5,994 A.,—'Kabul,'—dated Simla, Oct. 25, 1880.)—I am directed by the Commander-in-Chief to forward, for the information of Government, the accompanying letter from Lieutenant-General Primrose, C.S.I., reporting on the gallant and determined stand made by the 66th Regiment at Maiwand. The events mentioned have already been referred to in my letter No. 5,351-A., dated Sept. 25, 1880; but the details now given show the gallantry and devotion to duty of the officers and men who fell on that occasion. The 'accompanying documents' mentioned in paragragh 1 of Lieut.-Gen. Primrose's letter, are Brigdr.-Gen. Daubeny's report and accompaniments of the proceedings of the force under his command in connection with the burial of the dead on the field of Maiwand, which have been forwarded to Government with this office No. 5,948-A., dated the 22nd inst. From Lieut.-Gen. J. M. Primrose, C.S.I., commanding the 1st Division, Southern Afghanistan Field Force, to the Adjutant-General in India, Simla.—(No. 1,050-K., dated Candahar, Oct. 1, 1880.) In forwarding the accompanying documents, I would most respectfully wish to bring to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief's notice the gallant and determined stand made by the officers and men of the 66th Regiment at Maiwand. The disposition of the regiment was as follows:—Fighting line: 15 officers, 364 men (all ranks). Baggage-guard in rear: 4 officers, 63 men (all ranks). With smooth-bore battery: 1 officer, 42 men (all ranks). Sick: 32 men. And of this number, 10 officers and 275 non-commissioned officers and men were killed, and 2 officers and 30 non-commissioned officers and men wounded. These officers and men nearly all fell fighting desperately for the honour of their Queen and country. I have it on the authority of a colonel of artillery of Ayoub Khan's Army, who was present at the time, that a party of the 66th Regt., which he estimated at 100, officers and men, made a most determined stand in the garden marked 'A' in the accompanying plan. They were surrounded by the whole Afghan Army, and fought on until only 11 men were left, inflicting enormous loss upon the enemy. These 11 charged out of the garden, and died with their faces to the foe, fighting to the death. Such was the nature of their charge and the grandeur of their bearing, that although the whole of the Ghazis were assembled around them, not one dared approach to cut them down. Thus, standing in the open, back to back, firing steadily and truly, every shot telling, surrounded by thousands, these eleven officers and men died; and it was not until the last man had been shot down that the Ghazis dared advance upon them. He further adds that the conduct of these men was the admiration of all who witnessed it. This is the testimony of a man who witnessed the scene, and who gave the information before Brigdr.-Gen. Daubeny proceeded to Maiwand. From an examination of the ground, from corroborative evidence, and from the position in which the bodies were found, I have not the least hesitation in stating that this account is true; and I think his Excellency will agree with me when I say that history does not afford any grander or finer instance of gallantry and devotion to Queen and country than that displayed by the 66th Regiment on July 27, 1880. A nominal roll of the officers and men who fought and died thus nobly has been already forwarded to you, and inquiries from survivors elicit the following facts:—Lieut.-Col. James Galbraith was last seen on the nullah-bank, kneeling on one knee, with a colour in his hand, officers and men rallying round him; and on this spot his body was found. Here, too, fell Capt. W. H. M'Math, a gallant soldier, and one who would, had his life been spared, have risen to distinction in her Majesty's Service. Close by, 2nd Lieut. H. J. O. Barr was shot dead, over one of the colours. Capts. E. S. Garratt and F. J. Cullen were both killed on the field in front of the nullah, up to the last moment commanding their companies and giving their orders with as much coolness as if on an ordinary regimental parade. Capt. W. Roberts was mortally wounded in the garden, where the last stand was made; and here also fell Lieut. M. E. Rayner, Lieut. R. T. Chute, 2nd Lieut. W. R. Olivey, and 2nd Lieut. A. Honywood. The two latter officers were seen holding up the colours, the pole of one of which was shattered to pieces, as rallying-points; and Lieut. Honywood was shot down whilst holding a colour high above his head, shouting, 'Men, what shall we do to save this?' Serjt.-Major A. Cuppage was shot dead outside the garden whilst carrying a colour, and many other non-commissioned officers and men laid down their lives in the attempt to save the colours of their regiment on that day. With the gallant band who made this last grand effort fought and died Major G. F. Blackwood, R.H.A., Lieut. T. R. Henn, R.E., and Lieut. C. W. Hinde, 1st Bombay Grenadiers, Native Infantry, with some of his men. The men of the 66th on baggage guard, under the command of Capt. J. Quarry, did excellent service during the retreat. The party told off to man the smooth-bore battery, under Lieut. G. De la M. Faunce, worked their guns steadily and well during the fight."

67th Regiment. The regiment left Jhelum on Oct. 19, en route to Bangalore, to be stationed. Capt. Jervis passed the lower-standard examination in Persian at Quetta, on Oct. 9. Major Mosse arrived in England on Thursday from India, in H.M.S. Orontes, on retirement upon pension.

70th Regiment marched on Oct. 16, 17, and 18, from Umballa cantonment, en route to Dinapore.

72nd Highlanders. The regiment left Sibi on Oct. 13 and 14 for Meean Meer, en route to Lucknow, where it is to be stationed. We learn from Allahabad, on Oct. 23, that "Lieut. and Adjt. Monro, 72nd, who was severely wounded at Candahar, was brought in by train under Dr. Williamson's charge. The bullet was extracted from Lieut. Munro's thigh at Quetta, on Oct. 10. He is now rapidly recovering." Lieut. Sunderland has been appointed acting adjt., vice Lieut. Monro, invalided. A short letter from Gen. Roberts, published in the Gazette of India, says that he had inadvertently omitted from his former despatch the names of Lieut.-Col. G. N. Money, commanding the 3rd Sikh Infantry, and Qrmr. J. Walsh, 72nd Highlanders, provost-marshal of the Cabul-Candahar Field Force, as having rendered specially good services during the march from Cabul to Candahar, and in the action of Sept. 1. The Civil and Military Gazette says:—"The friendship between the British soldier and his native brother-in-arms has never been so strongly shown as in the case of the 5th Goorkhas and the 72nd Highlanders. Throughout the late march, and before it, the most cordial relations have existed between the two regiments, and the Goorkhas have nicknamed themselves the 2nd Battalion of the 72nd Highlanders. When, the other day,—so the story reaches us,—the time came to say good-bye, and the Goorkhas realised that in all human probability they would not again see their old friends, the Highlanders, with whom they had marched, and alongside whom they had fought, so long and nobly, they wished to mark their friendship and their adieu by some grand entertainment. This, however, was an impossibility in Candahar, where single bottles of beer had sold for 16 rupees each; so the idea of a dinner had to be given up, and the Goorkhas, so we hear, have each given half a month's pay, to purchase a silver challenge shield, and presented it to the 72nd Highlanders to be shot for yearly by men of the latter regiment. It will bear an inscription setting forth that it was given by the men of the 5th Goorkhas to the men of the 72nd Highlanders, as a token of the friendship that existed between the two regiments in the Afghan War."

76th Regiment. Capt. May, Lieut. Hume, and a detachment of 50 men have left the Curragh and proceeded to Headford. Capt. Burge, pymr., has been ordered to Portsmouth, to assume the pay duties of the 59th Foot.

78th Highlanders. Capt. Graham is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst. Brevet-Major Smith and Lieut. McDougall were to have embarked for England on the 7th inst., in H.M.S. Jumna.

80th Regiment. The Standard says:—"The medal which it was sometime since decided to grant, in recognition of the services of the Perak Expedition of 1875-76, under Gen. the Hon. Sir F. Colborne, K.C.B., has now been struck at the Royal Mint, and its issue will shortly be proceeded with. The troops to receive the decoration are the 1st Batn. 3rd Buffs, 1st Batn. 10th Regiment, 80th Regiment, and Goorkhas—the Buffs, 10th, and 80th all being now on home service. A large number of officers and men of the 80th will be further decorated with the medal for the South African campaign."

83rd Regiment. When we heard from India, Capt. Cooke-Collis, Assist.-Adjut.-Gen. of the Candahar Division, had left for India, the hard work entailed upon Gen. Phayre's staff by the march from Quetta and the arrangements for wintering the force having proved too much for him

85TH REGIMENT. Capt. the Hon. E. A. H. A'Court has been offered, and has accepted, the adjutancy of the 2nd Oxford Rifle Volunteers. The order directing Lieuts. Smythe and Bulman to proceed home from India to join the regimental depôt, and that issued subsequently, by which 2nd Lieut. Doyle's name was substituted for that of Lieut. Bulman, has been cancelled. 2nd Lieuts. Fowler and Mardell have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

88TH REGIMENT. 2nd Lieut. Hatch has pased the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

89TH REGIMENT. The regiment is to be moved from Rangoon to Belgaum. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Robinson is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst.

92ND HIGHLANDERS marched from Sibi on Oct. 18 and 19 for Meean Meer, en route to England. The St. James's Gazette says:—"Gen. Roberts has strongly recommended Major White, Private J. Dennis, and Drummer J. Roddick, 92nd Highlanders, and Lieut. Wheatley, 2nd Goorkhas, to the notice of the military authorities to receive the Victoria Cross, in recognition of their gallantry whilst employed against Ayoub Khan's forces at Candahar." Writing from Allahabad on Oct. 23, a correspondent says:—"The left wing of the 92nd Highlanders, with sick and wounded, reached Meean Meer from Pirchowkee yesterday. The whole regiment is under canvas near the railway-station. Col. Parker, with head-quarters and right wing, had a curious adventure on the 18th inst. As the train was nearing a station twenty miles east of Sibi, some men appeared with torches on the line, waving them, and shouting to attract attention. The train was stopped, and then it appeared the men were a party of coolies employed on the line. They said the Marris had come down and attacked them. One man had cuts on his head and arm. The coolies asked to be taken on, but this was impossible. As they said the Marris were close at hand, Col. Parker ordered one company of Highlanders out of the train. They examined the spot pointed out, but saw no one. The company finally returned to the train, and at the first convenient station word was sent to Sibi of the occurrence." A 1st Brig. 3rd Division Cabul-Candahar Field Force order, dated Sept. 14, 1880, appoints "2nd Lieut. H. A. MacDonald, 92nd Highlanders, to be provost-marshal to the brigade (detached from divisional head-quarters), in addition to his other duties."

95TH REGIMENT. Relative to an act of gallant conduct by one of his men, Lieut.-Col. Crealock, C.B., commanding the regiment at Aldershot, in a regimental order says that he has much pleasure in publishing a letter from the captain of the City Fire Brigade, Limerick, respecting the gallant conduct of Lance-Corpl. Clarke, now on furlough at Limerick. The order concludes with an assurance on the part of Col. Crealock that he will submit the particulars of the case for the consideration of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. The act of gallantry referred to, and testified to by the captain of the Fire Brigade, is the saving of the lives of two children at a fire that occurred on the 10th inst., and was mainly instrumental in saving the building, which was not insured. Clarke, who was a volunteer on the occasion, sustained some slight injuries.

97TH REGIMENT. The head-quarters and service companies were to have left Halifax, N.S., on Thursday in H.M.S. Crocodile for Gibraltar.

100TH REGIMENT. The Canada Gazette announces the appointment of Henry James Grassett, Esq., late of the Regiment, to be lieut.-col. of the 16th Royals of Toronto, the regiment which has lately been rather too prominently before the Dominion public, and which seemed at one time about on the point of collapse. Lieut. Clery arrived home from India on Thursday in H.M.S. Orontes.

108TH REGIMENT. Brevet Major Shaw completes his term of service as adjt. of the Fermanagh Militia on the 10th prox. The Irish Times says:—"It has been notified from the War Office that Capt. Apthorp's transfer to his regiment from the adjutancy of the Londonderry Militia, in succession to Brevet Major and Adjt. Shaw, who is about to be promoted, will take effect from Dec. 9."

RIFLE BRIGADE. The 1st Batn. has been ordered to send two companies from Poona to Satara, and one from Poona to Kirkee. Field-Marshal Sir Charles Yorke, a colonel commandant, and Constable of the Tower of London, died on Saturday night at his residence in South Street, Park Lane, at the advanced age of 90. Owing to his great age and consequent infirmities, he had been in delicate health for some months, but his mental powers were unimpaired until shortly before his dissolution. The late Sir Charles Yorke was son of the late Col. Young, one time Lieutenant of the Tower of London, by his wife, a daughter of Mr. John Dodd, of Swallowfield, Berks. He entered the Army in Jan. 1807, and had scarcely reached man's estate when he took part in the momentous battles of Fuentes d'Onoro in May, 1811. Marshal Massena had crossed the Agueda on the 2nd of that month with 40,000 infantry, 5,000 horse, and about 30 pieces of artillery, in order to relieve Almeida, expecting every day to be superseded in his command, and wishing to make a last effort for his own military character. According to Napier's History of the Peninsula War, Wellington could muster no more than 32,000 men, of whom only 1,200 were cavalry. He, however, determined to fight rather than give up the blockade of Almeida, and after a severe struggle on the night of May 3 stopped the conflict. Next day Massena was joined by Bessières with a body of the Imperial Guard, and on May 5 made his grand attack. In all the war there was not a more dangerous hour for England. The fight lasted until evening, when the lower part of the town was abandoned by both parties,—the British maintaining the chapel and crags and the French retiring a cannon-shot from the stream. On the 11th Almeida was retaken by the Duke, and Massena retired from Portugal. In Jan. 1812, the deceased was present at and took part in the storming of Ciudad Rodrigo by the British under Wellington; was wounded at the siege of Badajoz in the months of March and April following; and on July 22 of the same year was engaged at the battle of Salamanca, when the British and allies, still under Lord Wellington, totally defeated the French Army under Marshal Marmont, and so led to the capture of Madrid. At Vittoria, on June 21, 1813, when the French Army, commanded by Joseph Bonaparte, King of Spain, and Marshal Jourdan, was again defeated by Wellington, he was also present, and at the Pyrenees on July 28. It will be remembered that Napoleon, after the battle of Vittoria, sent Soult to supersede Jourdan, with instructions to drive the allies across the Ebro; but in the result Soult retreated into France, with a loss of 20,000 men, having been defeated by Wellington in a series of engagements from July 25 to Aug. 2, including the one at the Pyrenees on July 28. Advanced to the rank of capt. on Dec. 24, 1813, Sir Charles also took part in the battle of Nivelle, where he was again wounded; in that of Nive, and at Orthez, in the south of France, on Feb. 27, 1814, when the British and Spanish armies, commanded by Wellington, defeated the French, and in the latter engagement he was again wounded, this time severely. In the campaign of 1815 he served as a captain on the staff at the battle of Waterloo, and on Feb. 25 following was placed on half-pay. Sir Charles was subsequently engaged on the Staff. He was aide-de-camp to the Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief in Canada from Sept., 1828, to Oct., 1830; he was appointed A.Q.M.G. at Cork in Feb., 1842, and remained at that post till Nov., 1845. In Dec., 1845, he was selected by the Commander-in-Chief to fill the office of A.Q.M.G. of the Northern District, which he held till Jan., 1852. In April that year he was appointed major-gen. in the command at the Cape of Good Hope, which, however, he did not hold long, as he was relieved in Aug., 1853. His next appointment on the Staff was in April 1854, when he appointed military secretary to H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge at head-quarters, the duties of which high post he discharged up to June 30, 1860. In 1855 he was appointed colonel of the 53rd Foot, and was transferred from that regiment to be colonel-commandant of the Rifle Brigade in April, 1863. The late venerable Field-Marshal's commissions bear date as follows:—Ensign (35th Foot), Jan. 22, 1807; lieut., Feb. 18, 1808; capt. (52nd Foot), Dec. 24, 1813; major, Jan. 9, 1825; lieut.-col., Nov. 30, 1826; col., Nov. 23, 1841; major-gen., Nov. 11, 1851; lieut.-gen., Feb. 3, 1857; gen., Sept. 3, 1865; and field-marshal, June 2, 1877. The remains of the deceased Field-Marshal were taken from his house in South Street, Park Lane, on Wednesday to Kensal Green Cemetery for interment. The funeral was, in accordance with the deceased's express request, conducted as simply as possible, and the mournful cortége consisted of the hearse and three mourning carriages, the occupants including relatives and a few intimate personal friends,—namely, Gen. and Mrs. Parke, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Sherston, Mr. C. Sherston, Mr. Dallas Yorke, Mr. W. Yorke, the Rev. Evan York Nepean, and Mr. Sibley. The private carriage of the Duke of Cambridge followed in the rear. Notwithstanding the very unfavourable weather, a large number of friends met at the chapel to pay the last tribute of respect to their departed friend. H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge was represented by his aide-de-camp, Col. Stephens, and H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught by Capt. A. Egerton; and among the throng of military and other friends assembled were Gens. Lord Airey, Sir Patrick Grant, Sir A. Horsford, Dillon, Fyers, Howley, Newdigate, Maitland, C.B., and Milman, C.B., Major of the Tower of London; Cols. Davies, Barnard, and Grant; Major Lane, and Mr. Fitzroy Talbot. The service for the burial of the dead, both in the chapel and at the grave, was read by the Rev. E. J. Rogers, M.A., chaplain of the Tower of London. The body was enclosed in a lead shell, the outer coffin being of plain polished oak, relieved by brass mountings, and the plate on the lid bore the following inscription:—"Charles Yorke, Field-Marshal, G.C.B., Constable of the Tower of London; born Dec. 7, 1790; died Nov. 20, 1880." Capt. Mansel, 4th Batn., arrived home from India on Thursday in H.M.S. Orontes. Lieut. Hervey, 1st Batn., is ordered home from India for duty at the depôt; and Lieut. Russell to join the 2nd Batn., into which he has been promoted.

ORDNANCE STORE DEPARTMENT. "Bis dat qui cito dat" writes:—"The effort to reorganise the Ordnance Store Department appears to have been almost too much for the War-Office Authorities, and unless some one speedily comes to the rescue, it is to be feared that the motive-power will altogether come to a full stop. The senior appointments require a deal of deliberation to fill up, and many fond inquiries are being made as to the existence of a foreign-service roster. A recent promotion has filled the breasts of many gallant officers with misgivings as to the future, and much anxiety is expressed as to the mode in which promotion will in future be regulated, the good old rule of seniority having been set aside. A little more energy at head-quarters might doubtless be beneficial, and make the officers feel more satisfied that their interests were being attended to."

ARMY SERVICE CORPS. A shocking case of stabbing occurred at Aldershot on Tuesday. It appears that for a breach of disciple, Serjt. Stilton ordered Private Solomon to be confined in the guard-room, whereupon the latter, a butcher, working at his trade in the corps, stabbed the serjeant in the neck with a butcher's knife, and inflicted a wound which it is feared will prove fatal. The serjeant was immediately conveyed to the Cambridge Hospital, South Camp. Solomon, who is in custody of the county police, has been brought before the magistrates.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT. The Court of Inquiry appointed to inquire into the robbery of medical stores met again on Monday at the Cambridge Hospital, South Camp, Aldershot. Surg.-Major Clarke, from Head-quarters, Whitehall-yard, has been appointed a member of the Court of Inquiry, of which Col. Vibart, R.A., is president, instead of Surg.-Major Don. "We (British Medical Journal) are glad to be able to congratulate the medical officers of the Brigade of Guards on the forthcoming promulgation of their Warrant, which has now passed the Treasury, and only awaits its final approval at Mr. Childers' hands. It will be satisfactory to them to be placed, in all particulars of pay and allowances, on a precisely equal footing with their brethren of the Line; and most especially will the certainty of fulfilment be welcomed by three of their number, who have been left ungazetted (one for two years) in anticipation of the formal publication of the Warrant. We understand that a principal medical officer of the brigade, in the shape of a deputy-surgeon-general, will be granted; and thus, that the regiments will not only have their invaliding and other official business conducted by themselves, but that at least one step of promotion will, in future, be a legitimate object of ambition. We may remind our readers that in exchange for exemption from foreign service, the Guards' surgeons virtually abandon all expectation of elevation to the higher ranks, and that at the same time they have been deprived of the exclusive possession, which they formerly enjoyed, of the title of surgeon-major, with the higher emoluments formerly attached to the position. Their duties are much more laborious and varied than those of the Line, and their changes of quarters unusually frequent and inconvenient, so that, agreeable as the Service is, and greatly coveted as one of the prizes of the Department, it has its drawbacks, which it is the object of this Warrant partially to remove." The following officers are en route to England in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 6th inst., viz.:—Surgs.-Major J. Bonnyman, T. G. Bolster, and T. Wood; Surgs. E. H. Fenn and W. H. Allen. The following were to have left Bombay on the 8th inst. in H.M.S. Jumna, viz.:—Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. O'Nial, Surgs.-Major T. Oughton and B. T. Giraud, and Surg. E. A. H. Roe. Surgs.-Major G. J. Evatt and W. Sly, and Surg. N. M'Creery arrived home from India on Thursday in H.M.S. Orontes.

VETERINARY DEPARTMENT. Vet.-Surg. M. C. Mitchell, R.A., has been granted leave from India to England for nine months, on medical certificate. Vet.-Surg. R. Rowe, R.A., arrived home from India on Thursday in H.M.S. Orontes. Vet.-Surg. J. J. Philips, R.H.A., has been granted an extension of leave to remain in England from Feb. 24 to March 31 next.

MILITIA.

ROYAL LONDON. The annual regimental dinner took place at Finsbury Barracks on Saturday, and amongst the past and present officers attending were Cols. Dundas and Allan, Lieut.-Col. Britten, Majors Savory and Smith, Surg.-Major Childs; Capts. Sewell, Burton, Latham, Naish, Mortimer, Torry, and Hale; Lieuts. Teniswood, Thomson, Adams, Cleribew, and Taylor; Messrs. Montefiore, Boucicault, and Nelson, and Qrmr. Clarke. During the evening a kindly mention was made of Lieut. Griesbach, the senior subaltern, but now serving in Afghanistan on the geological survey of India, and who was attached to the 66th Regt. during their recent engagement at Maiwand, and honourably mentioned in despatches. Lieut. Griesbach has, during the past few months, performed the following service:—On July 14 last he acted as galloper to Brigdr.-Gen. Nuttall, commanding the Cavalry Brigade at the affair on the Helmund, when he was thanked by the brigadier-general for service rendered on that day. He also acted as orderly-officer to Brigdr.-Gen. Nuttall at the action near Maiwand on July 27. He served with the 66th Regiment throughout the siege of Candahar, and was favourably mentioned in despatches by Lieut.-Gen. Primrose; and was present at the action of Sept. 1, where he acted as orderly-officer to Brigdr.-Gen. Daubney.

3RD WEST YORK. Lieut.-Col. MacAdam, who lately retired from the majority, obtained his commission in 1846, and had been major for a quarter of a century,—slow promotion this. Capt. Shearburn, who has lately retired from the 9th Lancers, with which he served in Afghanistan, was the first of the subalterns of the regiment who obtained transfer to the Line, nearly the whole of the young officers who have joined the Army from the regiment have seen service, and several of them have distinguished themselves sufficiently to obtain a mention in despatches. The regiment is now full up as regards the subaltern ranks; it has not been so for years.

2ND SOUTH DEVON. The Western Daily Mercury says:—"A rumour has been current in the neighbourhood of the Three Towns for some days past that the Government intend to remove the head-quarters of the South Devon Militia—which have been at Mutley Barracks, Plymouth, for many years, or rather, we believe, ever since the battalion was formed—to Exeter.

ROYAL JERSEY. The hon. colonelcy is vacant by the death of Col. F. Le Breton, which occurred at 21 Sussex Place, Regent's Park, on the 19th inst., at the age of 86 years. The deceased, who was last surviving son of the late Sir T. Le Breton, of Bagatelle, Jersey, was appointed April 8, 1840.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

It is stated on good authority (says the Standard) that the Council of the National Rifle Association have resolved upon calling a special general meeting of the members at an early date, at which opportunity will be afforded for discussion of the much vexed question of the reorganisation of the squadding and marking departments at Wimbledon, with a view to prevent any fraudulent collusion.

LONDON RIFLE BRIGADE. The Lord Mayor, accompanied by Sheriff Waterlow and other representatives of the City of London, attended in state at the Crystal Palace on Saturday last, to take part in the annual presentation of prizes to the regiment. The ceremony was held in front of the large theatre in the central transept. Among those present on the dais were Lieut.-Col. Heywood, in command (Lieut.-Col. Sir A. D. Hayter, M.P., being absent abroad), Lady Waldegrave, &c. The regiment, headed by the band, marched from the terrace, where it had been formed into a battalion of six companies, and lined both sides of the central transept. Col. Heywood, in the course of his address, expressed his regret that Sir A. D. Hayter had found it necessary, after the prolonged Session of Parliament, to continue abroad, and then proceeded to give statistics showing the regiment's position at the close of the year. On Nov. 1 the total strength was 740, of whom there were efficients, 650, and proficients, 63. There had been 105 recruits during the year. The amount of capitation grant earned in the year was £1,165. The prizes were then presented, the "best shot" being Private Fleet, who received the three-starred badge.

8th Middlesex. At a public banquet at the Star and Garter Hotel, Richmond, on Wednesday, Lieut.-Col. Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., High Sheriff of Surrey, commanding the regiment, and late of the 17th Lancers, was presented with a valuable piece of plate, subscribed for by the inhabitants of Richmond, in recognition of his succession to the family title, and as a token of regard and respect. The Vicar of Richmond presided, and was supported by the county members, Sir Henry Peek and Sir Trevor Lawrence. The proposal emanated from the Richmond Select Vestry, of which body Sir Francis Burdett has been chairman for some years.

Inverness-shire Highland Rifles. The annual returns of the regiment have been made up. The total number of efficients is 965, and proficients, 85; and the amount of the capitation grant earned is £1,700, as compared with £1,614 10s. last year. The following statement of the capitation grant drawn will give an idea of the progress of the battalion since 1874:—1874, £1,430; 1875, £1,570; 1876, £1,545; 1877, £1,610 10s.; 1878, £1,610; 1879, £1,614 10s. The roll of the battalion shows that there are no less than 98 in it of the name of Macdonald, while the Frasers stand next with 75, and the Macintoshs third with 40.

Honourable Artillery Company. A big gazette will shortly appear. Capt. M. H. Jacobs, the senior captain, died recently, and the commissions of ten other officers expired on the 6th inst. Some will be renewed, but there will also be a number of new appointments.

The Indian Army.

1st Bengal Cavalry. Major T. M. B. Glascock, squadron command, has been appointed officiating commandant, and Major C. W. Campbell, attached, officiating second-in-command.

3rd Bengal Cavalry marched from Sibi on Oct. 12, en route to Meean Meer, where it has taken over quarters. Lieut. H. N. Webb, squadron officer, has been granted leave to England for one year, on medical certificate.

4th Bengal Cavalry. Capt. C. E. Harenc, and Lieut. A. de V. Alexander, squadron-officers, have been appointed officiating squadron-commanders, and Lieut. E. H. H. Montresor, squadron-officer, officiating adjt. Major D. Adamson, squadron-commander, has been granted leave to England for fifteen months on medical certificate; Lieut. A. de V. Alexander, squadron-officer, for two years, on private affairs; and Lieut. H. C. Lamb, squadron-officer and adjt., for one year 182 days, on medical certificate.

6th Bengal Cavalry. Major H. A. Fletcher, squadron-commander, has been granted leave to England for one year, on private affairs.

14th Bengal Cavalry. Capt. C. G. Morrison died at Eskbank Lodge, Eastbourne, on the 16th inst., aged 36 years.

16th Bengal Cavalry. The appointment of the late Capt. C. A. Carthew to be deputy. assist.-qmr.-gen. to the Khyber Brigade, was notified in General Orders of Oct. 11. Capt. Carthew died the next day of Peshawur fever at Lundi Kotal.

19th Bengal Cavalry. Capt. E. Bruce has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

6th Bengal N.I. Major W. Atkins, wing-commander, has been granted leave to England for two years, on private affairs.

15th Bengal N.I. marched, on Oct. 12, from Sibi, en route to Delhi, there to be stationed.

16th Bengal N.I. Capt. A. B. Clare, wing-commander, has been granted leave to England for one year, on medical certificate. Lieut. W. Hastings, 2nd West India Regt., a probationer for the Indian S.C., has been transferred to the 10th Bengal N.I., as officiating wing-officer, on probation.

19th Bengal N.I. The conduct of the troops of the Indian Army during the Afghan operations continues to be a fruitful source of controversy among military authorities. "One who Knows the Bombay Army" recently stated in the columns of an Indian contemporary that the guns in the action of Ahmed Kheyl, near Ghuznee, were saved by the steadiness of the 3rd Goorkhas. "Punjabee" now writes from Sealkote that the batteries referred to—A Baty. B Brig., R.H.A., and G Baty. 4th Brig., R.A.—were on the right of the line. When the Ghazi rush took place, both batteries had to retire, but only for a short distance, and not towards the extreme left of the line where the Goorkhas were. "As A-B," continues this correspondent, "was retiring, four companies 19th P.N.I.—until then in reserve—were ordered up, and these having soon checked the Ghazi rush, that battery again advanced and came into action through gaps made for them in the 19th P.N.I. line. These companies never retired at any time during the action. H Company 19th P.N.I. escorted G-4 throughout the action. When G-4 retired, the company held its ground until the battery was in position in rear, then doubling back they fronted beside the battery, and again opening fire along with the guns checked the enemy. The officer commanding the battery voluntarily wrote a letter highly praising their conduct. It was in the teeth of the Ghazi storm, as it was at its height and turning both flanks of our line, that these four companies moving up covered the right, whilst the three remaining companies did the same on the extreme left. These positions the 19th P.N.I. retained throughout the remainder of the action. The 2nd Sikhs were nearer the guns than the Goorkhas, had the latter been seeking a steady regiment to take shelter behind."

22nd Bengal N.I. The regiment marched on Sept. 9 from Jhelum to Meean Meer, to be stationed.

23rd Bengal N.I. The regiment marched on Oct. 1 from Sibi, en route to Meean Meer, to take over quarters. Lieut. D. Chesney has applied for leave to England, on medical certificate.

25th Bengal N.I. Lieuts. C. H. H. Beley and W. G. Yate have passed the lower-standard examination in Persian.

26th Bengal N.I. Capt. S. H. P. Graves, wing-officer, is allowed to retain his appointment as adjt. on promotion. Lieut. H. A. Ravenshaw, wing-officer and qrmr., has been appointed adjt., vice Graves, vacated on promotion.

27th Bengal N.I. Surg. F. A. Smyth has been appointed to the permanent medical charge of the regiment, vice Surg.-Major W. S. Caldwell, resigned.

28th Bengal N.I. Capt. F. A. de St. Laurent, wing-officer, has been granted leave to England for one year 182 days, on medical certificate.

32nd Bengal N.I. (Pioneers). Capt. T. Nicholls, wing-officer, has been appointed officiating second-in-command; and Capt. H. C. Halkett, wing-officer and qrmr., officiating wing-commander. Capt. J. M. Trotter, Bengal S.C., has been appointed officiating second-in-command vice Bates, on furlough.

36th Bengal N.I. Major J. W. A. Michell, wing-commandant, second-in-command, has been granted leave to England for two years, on private affairs.

42nd Bengal N.I. The Government of India has sanctioned the issue of horn buttons and colour badges of the pattern worn by the British Rifle corps, to the Goorkha regiments, and the 42nd, 43rd, and 44th N.I., in place of the buttons and badges at present supplied them, with the exception of the 1st and 2nd Goorkha regiments, which will retain their white and red facings respectively; the latter regiment will also wear chevrons similar to those worn by the 60th Rifles, and the 43rd N.I., who will retain their present colour badge.

Goorkhas. Vide 42nd Bengal N.I.

5th Goorkhas. At Streat, in Sussex, there were rejoicings on Tuesday, in celebration of the return of Lieut.-Col. A. Fitzhugh from the seat of war in Afghanistan. Col. Fitzhugh is youngest son of the Rev. W. A. Fitzhugh, who has for 60 years been rector of Streat.

3rd Punjab Cavalry. Lieut. F. Mardall, adjutant, died at Kelchikor, near Dehra Ghazi Khan, on the 11th inst., aged 29 years. The deceased, who was eldest son of Col. H. Mardall, Madras S.C., entered the Army, June 8, 1872, and was appointed to the Bengal S.C. from the 21st Foot, when he joined the 3rd Punjaub Cavalry, with which he has since done duty. He has lately been with his regiment in Afghanistan, and was on his way from Candahar when his death occurred.

5th Punjab Cavalry. Lieut. C. F. Gambier has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

3rd Sikh Infantry. It is notified in Indian General Orders that "The name of the under-mentioned officer was inadvertently omitted from the list of those enumerated in the despatch of Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. S. Roberts, G.C.B., V.C., C.I.E., No. 88, dated Sept. 26, 1880, as having rendered specially good service during the march from Cabul to Candahar, and in the action near the latter place on Sept. 1, 1880:—Lieut.-Col. G. N. Money, Bengal S.C., commanding the 3rd Sikh Infantry." Capt. W. C. Ramsden, wing-officer, has been granted leave to England for 15 months, on medical certificate.

1st Hyderabad Infantry. Major A. C. Havelock, second-in-command, has been appointed permanent commandant of the regiment, at Lingasoogar, vice Col. A. C. Lilly.

1st Madras Light Cavalry. Capt. H. R. Hope has applied for leave to England, on medical certificate.

3rd Madras Light Cavalry. Lieut.-Col. W. Thomson has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

4th Madras N.I. We learn from Bangalore, dated Oct. 19, "the 4th N.I., under command of Col. Hodding, arrived by train from Afghanistan this morning. The men looked well, and were accorded a warm welcome."

13th Madras L.I. marched from Meean Meer on Oct. 12 for Jubbulpore.

27th Madras N.I. Major W. MacD. Robinson has applied for leave to England, on medical certificate.

1st Bombay Lancers. The regiment is to move from Poona to Neemuch, detaching a squadron to Nusseerabad. Lieut. F. W. S. Jackson has been confirmed in his appointment as adjt., vice Capt. Hay, vacated on promotion.

3rd Bombay Light Cavalry. On return to India from Afghanistan, the regiment is to take over quarters at Poona. The Times' correspondent at Candahar telegraphs, on the 15th inst.:—"The gradual transmutation of the garrison here from a purely Bombay force to one almost entirely of Bengal constituents is commencing, the 3rd Bengal Native Infantry having arrived, to be followed at an early date by several other regiments. The 3rd Sind Horse has gone, and the 3rd Bombay Cavalry, the last of the Maiwand regiments, is under orders to leave. Much sympathy is felt with this regiment, which is known to be a well-disciplined and gallant corps, worthy of its ancient fame. Fortune has been against it, and I am sure there is not an officer or man belonging to it who does not long to have an early opportunity of showing that they had not a fair chance at Maiwand." Capt. R. H. Daniel, 1st Sind Horse, writes to the Pioneer:—"As the 3rd Bombay Cavalry and 3rd Sind Horse have received scant mercy in your columns, with reference to their conduct at the battle of Maiwand, I hope you will do them the justice to insert the following statement of facts, which I have gathered from the staff and other officers present in action. The two corps in question went into action 460 sabres strong. Of these 150 were detached as escorts to baggage guns, leaving about 300 available for a charge; of these half were disabled by an artillery fire which is described as 'hellish' before being called on to move at all. This leaves 150 men available for the final charge. And now what were these 150 called on to do? To stop the victorious rush of 12,000 men—mostly fanatics—in hot pursuit of our routed infantry and guns. Is it to be supposed that any mercenaries in the world would have charged home under such circumstances? I trust you will let these facts speak for themselves, in order that the good name of regiments which can show such a record of honourable service as the 3rd Bombay Cavalry and Sind Horse may not be blasted for ever, especially as any slur thrown on these two regiments, whether merited or not, will be reflected more or less on all the Native cavalry of the Bombay Presidency." Capt. M. W. Stevens, third squadron commander, has been granted leave to England for 12 months, on medical certificate.

Poona Horse. It is probable that the regiment will remain in Afghanistan for the winter, being employed on the line of communications.

3rd Sind Horse. The regiment is to be stationed at Jacobabad on return to India from Candahar. It has been a matter of surprise (says the Bombay Gazette) that neither in the despatches nor in any of the independent accounts of the battle of Maiwand, published from time to time, has there been a statement of the circumstances which seemed to the Military Authorities to render the suspension of Col. J. H. P. Malcolmson, 3rd Sind Horse, and Major A. P. Currie, 3rd Bombay Light Cavalry, a necessary measure. The fact is that those officers have been placed under arrest, not for anything done or omitted during the battle, but for circumstances which took place afterwards. Col. Malcolmson was not, properly speaking, in the battle at all, he being in charge of the baggage in the rear. Major Currie was in command of his regiment while it was under fire, and though he is reproached with not exercising that commanding influence over his men which is looked for in a cavalry officer at decisive moments, he is not charged with any dereliction of duty during the fight. But on the retreat, when word was brought to Gen. Burrows that some fugitives were being hard-pressed in the rear, the cavalry were ordered back to observe what was passing, and check the enemy. They accordingly returned towards Maiwand, under Major Currie. They had not got very far, when it was pointed out that Gen. Burrows was thus left exposed without escort, and an order was given, we believe by Gen. Nuttall, to send a small body back to protect the General. Major Currie, it is said, thought proper to lead this escort Candahar-wards himself, and leave Lieut. Geoghegan to lead his men in the direction of the enemy. From letters received in Bombay, we learn that it is considered in Candahar probable that Major Currie will not be tried by a court-martial, but will be permitted to retire from the Service. We give this, of course, with all reserve. With respect to Col. Malcolmson, the facts appear to be these:—When leading the cavalry back towards Candahar during the night, and protecting the retreat of the wounded and worn-out infantry, he pressed somewhat briskly forward, in spite of the urgent orders of Gen. Nuttall to move slowly, as wounded men could not possibly get over the ground at four miles an hour. Col. Malcolmson lent but a very unwilling ear to these representations, and finally, it is said, returned an answer to Gen. Nuttall that his men were anxious to reach water, which they knew to be further on, and he could not go slowly. This, of course, amounted to disobedience of orders, and Col. Malcolmson is in trouble on that charge." Vide also 3rd Bombay Light Cavalry.

3rd Bombay N.I. is to move from Kurrachee and Hyderabad to Belgaum. Major M. D. V. T. Grant has applied for leave to England, on medical certificate.

4th Bombay N.I. The regiment has been selected to return to India from Southern Afghanistan, on relief by the Bengal troops. Lieut.-Col. G. B. Crispin, Bombay S.C., died at sea on the 24th ult., on his way home from Candahar. The deceased, who was a son of the late Gen. Crispin, Bombay Army, served with the Persian expedition of 1856-57, and was present at the landing at Hallelah Bay and surrender of Bushire (medal with clasp). He proceeded with his regiment last year to Afghanistan, and had lately been invalided to England. He joined the Army July 20, 1852; became lieut., Dec. 10, 1855; capt., July 20, 1864; major, July 20, 1872; and lieut.-col., July 20, 1878.

7th Bombay N.I. Capt. H. C. Morris, wing-officer (qrmr.), has returned to duty in India from leave in England.

8th Bombay N.I. The regiment returns to India from Southern Afghanistan, on relief by the Bengal troops. In his despatch on the operations of the force which he took out of Candahar to assist Gen. Burrows, after the Maiwand disaster, the late Gen. Brooke reports :—"I would ask the Lieutenant-General's (Primrose's) special consideration and approval for my staff officers,—Capt. F. W. V. Leckie, 8th Bombay N.I., brig.-major, and Capt. F. C. Keyser, Royal Fusiliers, orderly officer, both of whom are officers of superior attainments and qualifications. The zealous assistance they afforded me throughout the whole day (July 28) was invaluable." Capt. F. W. V. Leekie has returned to regular duty from Staff employ in Afghanistan, and has been appointed officiating wing-commander.

11th Bombay N.I. Capt. W. F. Hume, wing-officer, has been appointed brigade-major and instructor of the Bombay Railway Volunteer Corps, vice Capt. H. T. Bulkley, whose period of appointment has expired.

16th Bombay N.I. Some correspondence and a dispatch relative to the defence of the Kach post, in August last, by Colonel T. W. W. Pierce, commanding the regiment. have been published in the Gazette of India. Col. Pierce describes the precautions which he took for the safety of his camp. At daybreak, on the 16th, one of the piquets was driven in by a rush of about 600 Ghazis, whose attack was very determined. Attacks were made upon other sides of the post, but they were all repulsed, and the total number of the enemy engaged is supposed to have exceeded 2,000, and their loss in killed and wounded is estimated at 200. Col. Pierce speaks very highly of the men under him, who were very steady under the charges of the Ghazis. Gen. Phayre, in forwarding the report to the Commander-in-Chief, states that the affair will have a most beneficial effect, not only on the neighbouring tribes, but on the Marris also, and he speaks in high terms of Col. Pierce, who, he thinks, carried out the important duty entrusted to him admirably.

19th Bombay N.I. The regiment, after the Viceroy's departure from Sibi, is, it is said, to winter at Mach and posts in the Bolan Pass.

23rd Bombay N.I. Capt. F. P. Ebden, wing-commander, has been granted leave to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

28th Bombay N.I. The late Gen. Brooke, in his despatch giving details of the operations of the force which he took out of Candahar to assist Gen. Burrows, after the Maiwand disaster, writes :—"Major F. C. Singleton, 28th Bombay N.I., commanded his detachment (100 rank and file) to my entire satisfaction, leading it in a very forward manner against positions of exceptional difficulty." Lieut.-Col. T. R. Nimmo, commandant, has been granted leave to England for 12 months, on medical certificate.

29th Bombay N.I. On arrival in the Bombay Presidency from Candahar, the regiment goes to Kurrachee and Hyderabad.

MILITIA MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Surg.-Major W. Batley, Royal Sussex Militia, resigns his commission ; also is permitted to retain his rank, and to continue to wear his uniform on retirement.

INDIA.

The Lahore paper hears that the revised pension rules for the three Presidential Staff Corps have arrived from England, and will shortly be made public.

It is notified that donation batta is payable at the following rates to the members of the native drivers' establishment of heavy batteries of Royal Artillery :—Jemadar and sirdar drivers and jemadar mahouts, rs. 24 ; drivers, mahouts and elephant coolies, rs. 12.

It is officially notified that Dr. Beatty has been appointed surgeon-general, India Medical Service, with permanent rank, vice Dr. Hunter, retired.

The report written by the late Gen. Brooke on the operations of the detachment which he took out from Candahar to assist Gen. Burrows after the Maiwand disaster has been published in the official Gazette of India. The Governor-General in Council concurs in the Commander-in-Chief's appreciative remarks on the excellent service rendered by Gen. Brooke on the occasion. Sir F. Haines regrets the delay that has taken place in the submission of the report, which was obtained only on being called for. Gen. Brooke, in the report, speaks highly of the conduct of the troops, who met with considerable opposition to and from Kokeran.

According to the Candahar News, the body of the late Brigdr.-Gen. Brooke was to be exhumed on the 15th. As previously stated, it is to be sent home at the request of his relatives.

The Times of India says :—"A striking proof of the utter inadequacy of the supply of officers for the Bombay Army is afforded by the new Quarterly Army List. On turning over the pages of that publication, we observe that in one case an officer of the rank of captain only fills the important and responsible position of second-in-command, besides that of quartermaster, while a young gentleman of a few years' service, who has not yet even passed the higher-standard examination, is wing-commander. In another regiment a subaltern of five years' service is not only wing-commander and quartermaster, but also adjutant. He ought at this rate to be a general before he is 30 years of age. The only officers with a regiment—it is not necessary to mention the name—which was considered unfit for service are a major in command and one lieutenant, who, it is presumed, performs the rest of the duties. If we mentioned all the instances in point, we should require to refer to almost every infantry regiment of the Bombay Army ; but we think the facts we have already stated are sufficient to show the urgent need that exists for altering the present system of Army administration in this Presidency. To begin with, something should be done to prevent the constant chopping and changing of officers from one corps to another that now takes place ; and Marine officers coming out from England to join the Staff Corps should be posted at once, and not kept for weeks wasting time and whistling for want of thought in the hotels of Bombay."

The Times of India says :—"Brigdr.-Gen. H. T. Macpherson, V.C., C.B., Bengal S.C., gets the command of the Allahabad Division, in the place of Major-Gen. Hume, with the local rank of Major-General. Brigdr.-Gen. A. H. Cobbe, C.B. (half-pay), late 17th Foot, will continue in the command of the Allahabad Division until Gen. Macpherson's return from England, on three months' sick leave."

The following officers of the Madras S.C. have been permitted to retire from the Service upon pensions :—Col. R. S. Burge, on an ordinary pension of £456 5s., with an extra annuity of £371 13s. ; Col. W. T. F. Farewell on an ordinary pension of £456 5s., and an extra annuity of £668 12s. ; Col. De S. Barrow, on an ordinary pension of £456 5s., and an extra annuity of £668 12s. ; and Col. C. J. Richards, Madras Infantry, on an ordinary pension of £365, and an extra annuity of £410 5s.

It is announced by the St. James's Gazette that Major-Gens. Ross, Phayre, and Hills, and Brigdr.-Gens. Baker and MacGregor, will receive distinguished service awards for their Afghanistan services.

The announcement of the nomination of Gen. Hume to the command at Candahar has been received in India with some expressions of surprise that the nomination is made so late, especially as the new officer in command will have winter upon him before he can become familiar with the situation. The Bombay journals speak of the appointment of Gen. Hume, commanding the Allahabad Division, to supersede Gen. Phayre, as causing "intense astonishment" at Candahar, as it did in India. "There was apparently," says one journal, "no reason whatever for the supersession, but, on the other hand, every reason for keeping Gen. Phayre." The appointment of Gen. Hume, says another journal, "is attributed to the unfortunate affair which occurred in Gen. Phayre's command just after the Maiwand disaster, in connection with the withdrawal of clerks, coolies, stores, &c., from the Harnai section of the Candahar Railway. A lac and a half of treasure was lost, and an immense quantity of stores and railway material abandoned." The Times' correspondent at Candahar telegraphs on the 18th inst. :—"Gen. Hume is at Quetta, and is expected here by end of the month, when Gen. Phayre leaves, whether for India or line of communications is unknown."

The Bombay Gazette says :—"Since our forces crossed the frontier into Afghanistan, 74 commissioned officers have been killed in action or died of wounds received in the field. The list includes one General—Gen. Brooke—whose death in the unfortunate sortie of Aug. 16 is the only instance, we believe, of a British General being killed in battle for 23 years."

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs on the 21st inst. :—"A grand durbar and Chapter of the Bath were held on Monday. The object of the Chapter was the investiture of Gens. Stewart and Maude with the insignia of Grand Cross and Knight Commander respectively. A strange error seems to have crept into Gen. Stewart's patent, as it recited that her Majesty was pleased to confer on him the decoration of the Victoria Cross, while the rest of the document referred, as was intended, to the Order of the Bath. At the durbar the Nawab of Bhawulpore was invested with the insignia of Grand Commander of the Star of India ; while inferior degrees of that Order and of the Order of the Indian Empire was conferred on several native noblemen."

The Irish Times hears that "the Government of India, on the recommendation of Gen. Sir F. Roberts, has suggested that a Companionship of the Bath should be conferred upon all officers who commanded regiments in the march from Cabul to Candahar."

The St. James's Gazette hears that "should Sir Neville Chamberlain not accept the chief command in India, the appointment will be offered to Sir Garnet Wolseley or Sir Frederick Roberts."

Major Evelyn Baring, C.S.I., R.A., accompanied by Mrs. Baring, left London on Wednesday, on his way to India to take up his official duties as Finance Minister.

Another of the Cabul heroes has received a good appointment. The command of the Hyderabad Contingent has been given to Col. Charles Gough as a reward for good field-service. Sir Frederick Roberts, it is said, strongly supported this appointment.

The command of the Mooltan Brigade, in succession to Brigdr.-Gen. G. R. Hughes, who is invalided home, has been conferred on Lieut.-Col. Rideont, 21st Madras N.I. This is said to be the first case of a Madras officer getting the Mooltan command.

Major Sir Robert Sandeman, K.C.S.I., Bengal S.C., the Governor-General's agent for Beloochistan, proceeds home on furlough at once. He will be succeeded by Mr. Macnabb, Commissioner of Peshawur.

The Lahore paper hears that Major-Gen. Phayre raised some objections to receive supreme military command in Southern Afghanistan, unless political power at Candahar was also granted to him.

Gen. Hume has selected Col. H. A. Little, Bengal S.C., officiating D.Q.M.G. at head-quarters, to be his chief of the Staff at Candahar.

Lieut.-Col. W. S. A. Lockhart will be appointed D.Q.M.G. in the intelligence branch of the office, and Major T. E. L. Sandford, R.E., D.Q.M.G. in the general branch.

The following notifications appear in General Orders recently issued by the Commander-in-Chief at Simla :—"Major-Gen. J. Ross, C.B., her Majesty's service, who vacated his appointment on the Brigade Staff in this Presidency on June 25 last, on the expiration of his tenure of command, and who has since been employed on field-service in Afghanistan, is now permitted to proceed to England, travelling at the public expense, under Transport Regulations, Part I., para. 189, clause 2, para. 3.—Major-Gen. J. Hills, C.B., V.C., Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, is, on promotion to that rank (G. O. C. C., Sept. 4, 1879), directed to proceed to England, travelling at the public expense, under Transport Regulations, Part II., para. 160, clause 4, and Part I., para. 189, clause 7.—Major.-Gen. Hills has, with the sanction of the Government, been employed with the Army in Afghanistan since the date of his promotion.—Royal Artillery—Capt. (Brevet Major) G. T. Pretyman (Seconded List) has been granted leave to the port of embarkation for thirty days, from date of availing himself of it ; and thence to England, for nine months, on urgent private affairs."

It is stated that the vacant Bengal brigades will be given to Col. H. Rowlands, V.C., C.B., now in England ; to Col. R. Blair, commanding 3rd Bengal N.I., on service ; and Col. C. H. Palliser, commanding 10th Bengal Cavalry.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1880.

THERE is nothing to be said, for the present, against the appointment of a Committee of Naval and Military Officers and of eminent civilians to conduct experiments in cannon-making, but as the morning paper which celebrates the creation of the body as a sort of victory of the metallurgists over the War

Office and the national establishments, highly approves of the exclusion of the official advisers of the Government from the Committee, it must be supposed that these gentlemen are in some way or other thought to have become disqualified from sitting in council with the experimentists. It is said, of course, that there is no imputation upon their integrity. It would be very hard, indeed, to make one, inasmuch as it would be impossible to show that they had done more than draw their pay and allowances for their work. But it is said that their guns are on their trial, and that it would be improper to let them associate with the judges who are try, and, as it seems, condemn those guns. The fact is that the officers who have presided at Woolwich and at the War Office over gun-making, have been, for the most part, merely the agents for executing the designs of others, and for the developing of the plans recommended to them officially for adoption. One would think, from the article in question, that there had been an utter neglect of experiments at Woolwich, and a crass indifference to invention and suggestion at Pall Mall. A glance at the Estimates, and a perusal of the trials at Shoeburyness and at the Butts, would satisfy a taxpayer that a good deal of money had been spent on experiments, and the complaint has not been infrequent that this country was spending money for the benefit of the rest of the world in artillery experiments. Readers of this journal need not to be reminded that for years past we called public attention to the deplorable mistake, for which Sir John Adye was mainly responsible, in deliberately rejecting the breech-loading for the muzzle-loading system. We shall be very curious to learn if the Committee deal retrospectively with artillery controversies. It is not likely that they will. More curious still will it be to know who are the eminent civilians who are to serve with the naval and military men on the body which has such an immense field of research and outlay before it. It is true that civilians and such eminent mechanics and metallurgists as Armstrong, Whitworth, Bessemer, Krupp, and Werndl have done great things in the manufacture of iron and steel, and that some of them have made immense improvements in gun-making; whilst soldiers like Minić, Palliser, and Uchatius have distinguished themselves by their labours in improving projectiles, small-arms, cannon manufacture, and artillery generally; but it is equally true that they agree to differ, and that the odium cannonicum is about the hottest and fiercest that ever has been let loose on the world. If out of this fiery furnace there comes forth a system of ordnance which shall please sailors, artillerymen, and engineers, and which shall give to this country the certainty that in her ships, forts, batteries, and field artillery she has no reason to fear competition with any other nation, we shall be the first to express our gratification at the attainment of a result for which we have laboured so long; but we are quite sure that such an end will not be gained by subservience to theories or dalliance with quacks, and that there will be a large expenditure of time and money in solving the difficulties which have hitherto been encountered in meeting the wishes of the sailor, the soldier, and the engineer, and in giving them a gun of future which shall please them all, and last our time without cavil or rivalry.

The dinner to Sir F. Roberts at the United Service Club, honoured by the presence of Field-Marshal the Prince of Wales, who came up from Sandringham on purpose, and who was attended by Lieutenant-General Sir D. Probyn, V.C., was, we hear, in every way most gratifying and most successful, whether as regards the distinguished company, or the spirit of the reunion, or the character of the speeches. Sir F. Roberts proceeds to-day to Sandringham, on a visit to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

It deserves to be made known that, the attention of the Directors of the Crystal Palace Company having been called to the speech which the Duke of Cambridge recently made at the Mansion House, in reference to the treatment to which soldiers in uniform are subjected, have intimated to his Royal Highness that on December 7, 1877, a resolution was passed by them, "That soldiers in uniform be admitted on one-shilling days at sixpence each." In acknowledging a letter from Major Flood Page, the manager of the Company, on the subject of the resolution, General Sir Charles Ellice, the Adjutant-General, writing on the 16th inst, says:—"I am directed by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th inst., addressed to Lieutenant-General Whitmore, C.B., Military Secretary, calling attention to the resolution passed by your Directors in December, 1877, that soldiers in uniform be admitted to the Crystal Palace on shilling days at sixpence each; and, in reply, to convey to you the thanks of his Royal Highness for the interest taken by the Crystal Palace Company in the subject to which his Royal Highness referred in his recent speech at the Mansion House." We trust that this generous concession on the part of the Directors of the Crystal Palace Company may meet with its due reward, and that the managers of other places of entertainment may be induced to follow the excellent example which has been set them by those having charge of the Palace at Sydenham.

The "servile war" in Ireland is, it seems, not to be subjected to the operation of coercive measures. The Government will not take the field to protect the landlords by suspending the writ of "Habeas Corpus," and the tenants are suing out their own little writs of "Habeas Corpus" against the landlords with great cheerfulness and success.

Sir Evelyn Wood's protest against the abolition of regimental colours will be endorsed by most soldiers. The peculiar nature of the Rifle Brigade and the 60th Rifles exempts them, it seems, from any necessity for carrying their rallying-point and centre of devotion and honour, but the exemption is scarcely logical.

There can be no exception made to the appointment of Sir A. Horsford to the Rifle Brigade, except one. He passes over the head of a most gallant and distinguished soldier, who entered the Service eleven years before him, and who had a traditional and family connection with a corps in which he did win immortal honour—Sir W. Norcott, K.C.B. The name is identified with the work of the Brigade in many a hard-fought field, from Corunna downwards to the Crimea. No one will deny Sir A. Horsford's great services, but it will not be invidious if we express the feeling that Sir W. Norcott had an earlier title, and one as good, to the coveted distinction of being Colonel of the Brigade.

The British Medical Journal announces that a warrant for the improvement of the status of the Medical Officers of the Guards has passed the Treasury, and awaits the approval of the Secretary of State. We are glad to hear it. There is to be a Deputy-Surgeon-General for the Brigade, and pay and allowances will be equalised with those of the Line.

Those unfortunate Turks, to kill and be killed by their coreligionists, who were fighting for their own land! It was very hard. And yet it was said, and will be said, that the Porte encouraged the Albanians to resist.

The Pioneer corps and the Police corps in Cyprus are in course of being amalgamated, though what there can be in common between the two, we fail to discover. The officers of the Pioneer corps suffered so much from sickness during the summer, that at one time there was only one officer fit for duty.

According to the latest intelligence from Cape Town, Brigadier-General Clarke is on the eastern frontier organising additional forces, and marching to the front. Lieutenant-Colonel Carrington meanwhile commands the relief column in Basutoland, Colonel Brabant the camp at Mafeteng, and Colonel Bayly the force at Maseru. Major Bell reports that the rebels attacked Leribe on the 9th, and swept off some police and loyal natives' cattle. Captain Stanton, occupying the police barracks, drove the enemy out, with a loss of 17 killed and 30 horses captured. Our casualties were M'Mullen and Jolly and one of the Basuto police wounded. Dr. Taylor's and Mr. Jervis's houses were looted. The rebels afterwards attacked and took the mountain which Chief Jonathan tried to hold, his people, excepting about 80, deserting him. He lost cattle and other property. Colonel Carrington, with 1,400 men and three guns, patrolling from Mafeteng on the 13th inst., engaged the rebel force near Colo. The enemy, 5,000 strong, made three furious charges simultaneously on the right, left flank, and front of column. The Yeomanry, the Cape Mounted Rifles, and their supports, with the assistance of shells and fire from the reserve, turned the rebel charge. The rebels retired, galloping to the rocky ledges of Colo, where they kept up a musketry fire; but nothing would again draw them out. Some charged to within 25 yards of the guns, 12 bodies being found within that distance. They suffered heavily, leaving the horses and saddles of the killed. A large commando was observed going home. Casualties:—Yeomanry: D. R. Cockin and Arthur Colling, killed; Gideon Vankyl and R. Cox, missing; Solomon, Yeomanry, and Reetmuller, Duke of Edinburgh's Own Volunteer Rifles, wounded. There has been fighting with rebel Tambookies near the Fingo border. Commandant Van Linsingen, C.M.G., his son, and three of Handrey's Horse were killed, as also was W. Blakeway, of the Fingo Militia. Commandant Van Linsingen was conspicuous for his bravery. In the last war he had another son killed. The rebel chief Stockwe, it is reported, has died of his wounds. Gangelizwe and the Tambookies have determined to assist the Government against the rebels. A force from Umtata has engaged the Pondomise, killing 50 men. Umhlonhlo is hard pressed on the Pondo side. There is a general desire to suppress the rebellion without asking for the assistance of a single Imperial soldier. The total number of European and native forces in the field and being raised is over 12,000.

We have several letters from South Africa respecting the operations against the Basutos and their allies, which do not give hopeful views of the struggle, though the writers are confident of ultimate success. It is scarcely justifiable to describe Clarke or Carrington as being "besieged," but it is plain that the colonists have all they can do to keep the field till their forces are strengthened.

The regimental colonelcy, left vacant by the death of Field-Marshal Sir Charles Yorke, is to be given to Lieutenant-General A. T. Heyland, C.B.

The object of subjecting Militia candidates for Army commissions to qualifying literary examinations is, presumably, simply to ascertain that they possess the average education of English gentlemen. Hence the examination is only qualifying, and competition is reserved for the examination in military subjects. To judge, however, from the papers on English literature set before the candidates at the last examination, the above-mentioned original idea is not being carried out. With cramming, any person of common intelligence could have given a fair proportion of correct answers; without cramming, few well-educated men of thirty would have escaped being plucked. We give a few samples of the questions, which would be suitably put to a candidate for a schoolmastership, but not to a lad of twenty anxious to obtain a commission:—"What is Spenser's own account of the aim and plan of his Faerie Queen? How far did he realise them? Give some account of the metrical form and diction of this poem." "Give the dates of Hamlet and Henry V. What internal evidence of date do you find in these plays, and what are their special excellencies as dramas?" "State the substance of Dryden's views regarding the nature and laws of tragedy." Surely this is adopting the Chinese system of examination with a vengeance!

The post of Constable of the Tower is one which is usually conferred on one of the most distinguished of the senior Generals. Speculation is rife as to who will succeed Sir Charles Yorke. Among the possible candidates may be mentioned Lord Strathnairn, Sir William Codrington, Lord Napier of Magdala, Lord Lucan, and Lord Airey. The Duke of Wellington was the last Constable who received any substantial emolument in connection with the appointment, and the pay is now merely nominal. Still the post is one of antiquity and honour, and consequently coveted.

We hear that Colonel P. J. Campbell's appointment to the Royal Horse Artillery has caused a vacancy in India which few of the regimental colonels of Artillery seem willing to fill. Colonel R. Curtis, who was to be ordered thither, obtains one of the long-vacant pensions; and his example, it is believed, will be followed by others. The wise and equitable rule of the present Deputy-Adjutant-General seems likely to bring about more promotion than the reports of many commissions.

Orders have been issued for seventeen non-commissioned officers of the Royal Artillery to report themselves on the 6th prox. to Mr. W. A. Browne, in the Department of the Director of Artillery, Winchester House, St. James's Square, for the purpose of undergoing a course of instruction and an examination prior to appointment as Master-Gunners. These courses of instruction, followed by examination, were instituted in March, 1879, under Artillery Regimental Order No. 102, with the view of rendering non-commissioned officers who may be appointed Master-Gunners more efficient. By the same Horse Guards Order, the appointment to vacancies is made to depend upon the degree of credit with which candidates pass through the courses of study and the examination.

Amongst the officers who have arrived home in H.M.S. Euphrates from Madeira were Captain R. Pole-Carew, Coldstream Guards, formerly on the personal staff of Lord Lytton, and Lieutenant W. A. Plant, R.A., one of Sir Richard Temple's A.D.C.'s. Both of them threw up their Staff appointments to go on active service in Afghanistan.

The Indian papers have with almost one accord announced that "Captain H. P. M. Wylie, 60th Rifles, a brother of Mrs. Adam, will be appointed Military Secretary to Mr. Adam, the new Governor of Madras." "Captain Wylie," they say, "is a son of General Sir W. Wylie, G.C.B., and a brother of the late Mr. F. R. S. Wylie, Bombay C.S., and Mr. J. W. S. Wylie. Bombay C.S." Captain Wylie, the adjutant of the 5th Cheshire Rifle Volunteers, will doubtless be as surprised to learn that he has obtained this very desirable appointment, as he must be to find that he is a brother-in-law of Mrs. Adam and a son of General Sir William Wylie. The officer who has been selected by Mr. Adams to fill the appointment of Military Secretary on his Staff is Captain W. H. C. Wyllie, Bengal Staff Corps, now on leave in England.

ADMIRALTY, Nov. 19, 1880.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Orders in Council of Feb. 22, 1870, and Nov. 29, 1879, Lieut. Archibald Ewart Clark-Kennedy has this day been placed on the Retired List of his rank.

ADMIRALTY, Nov. 20, 1880.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of Aug. 9, 1872, Navigating Sub-Lieut. John Archer Cowan has been placed on the Retired List of his rank from the 5th inst.

APPOINTMENTS.

Captains—E. J. Church, to the Jumna; G. R. Hope, to the Champion.

Commanders—Walter W. Poynder, to the Woodlark; Richard Evans, to the Doterel.

Midshipman—H. D. Wilkin, to the Superb.

Staff Surgeon—J. S. Levis, to the Eagle.

Engineers—W. T. Pover, to the Pembroke, additional, for the Sappho; T. H. Hyde, to the Pembroke, additional, for Reserve office.

COASTGUARD.

Commissioned Boatmen—J. Trevett, Langton, to be chief boatman, Looe, vice Smith, promoted; Timothy Twohig, Kimmeridge, to be chief boatman, Yealm, vice Middleton, promoted; John Borlace, Portobello, to be chief boatman, Brook, I.W., vice Porter, invalided.

ACHILLES, Capt. E. Kelly. The refit of the Achilles at Devonport, in order to admit of her again being sent to sea for a short commission, amounted to more than £12,000, and yet it was not much more than three years ago that she was thoroughly overhauled and repaired at a cost of £60,000. Economists may well sigh for a return to more handy and less costly engines of war, and we may safely say that in the Achilles and Northumberland we have at least touched the limit of length. A mishap of a serious nature is reported to have happened on the passage of the Channel Squadron from Plymouth to Queenstown. During the slight fog which prevailed during the "wee sma' hours" of Thursday morning, the Achilles was observed to fall out of line, and it was feared her machinery had broken down. This opinion was strengthened when, at daybreak, she was nowhere in sight. Towards evening, however, she again joined company, and reported having collided with a barque. It appears that about 3 o'clock in the morning the look-out reported a light off the starboard bow. The boatswain on the fore-bridge replied, "all right." The light was reported in another direction, and again the boatswain answered "all right," but did not pass the word to the officer of the watch. The barque was endeavouring to pass between the lines of the Fleet, and when the officer of the watch became aware of its proximity it was too late to avoid a collision, but by promptly putting the helm a-port, instead of striking the barque amidships, it only carried away its steering gear. The master of the vessel sang out to the man-of-war to follow, but the barque was out of sight in the fog before the Achilles could be put about. Some hours were spent searching for it, but no trace of the merchantman could be found. The officer of the watch was placed under arrest, and a court of inquiry on the affair was held on board the Achilles in the harbour on Saturday morning. The result has not transpired, but it is thought the boatswain, who is not yet confirmed, must again don the blue shirt.—Hampshire Telegraph.

AJAX, which left Pembroke at the end of last week in charge of the Valorous, arrived at Chatham Dockyard on Monday afternoon, and was moored in the stream. The Ajax has been sent to Chatham for the purpose of being completed for sea, and will be at once taken in hand. The Ajax is sister-ship to the Agamemnon, recently launched at Chatham, and now preparing for sea.

ALERT, Capt. Maclear, was surveying between Fiji and Tonga by last accounts, and will be at Sydney early in January.

ALEXANDRA, Capt. Lord W. Kerr, arrived at Malta on the 10th inst. from Teodo Bay. On her leaving, the Monarch, Capt. Tryon, C.B., hoisted the flag of the Commander-in-Chief at Teodo Bay during the temporary absence of the Alexandra, which will return in the first week in December.

ANTELOPE, Lieut. and Com. the Hon. Walter Hylton Jolliffe, was at Constantinople on the 16th inst., in attendance on his Excellency, the Right Hon. G. J. Goschen.

BITTERN, Com. E. Pusey, is running mails between the Fleet and Brindisi. The Bittern would leave Teodo Bay on the 16th inst. for Malta, where she arrived on Tuesday, and after refitting would relieve the Torch.

BOADICEA, Commodore Richards, C.B., was at Simon's Bay up to the 1st inst., with the Pioneer.

CHAMPION is being rapidly brought forward for commission at Sheerness. A large number of extra mechanics and seamen from the Royal Naval Barracks are engaged in getting her out of hand.

COCKATRICE, Com. H. Grenfell, was at Galatz by last accounts.

CONFLICT, Lieut.-Com. Izat. The natives of the Solomon Group have been punished more than once for outrages committed upon British traders, and the visits of her Majesty's ships to those islands should be sufficient to impress the islanders with some idea of our power. Yet the latest news from the group is that of a concerted attack upon a British steamer and the murder of her master. It is stated that her Majesty's ship Conflict was fallen in with by the steamer, and a report of the outrage was made to her commander, "who by this time has probably taken steps for the punishment of the islanders." But Lieut. Izat has but a score of men and one small gun at his command, and it is plain that the Solomon Islanders want some stronger measures than he could enforce to bring them to a sense of their wrong-doing.

COQUETTE, Lieut.-Com. Burr, was at Smyrna by last accounts.

CROCODILE, Capt. Doughty, arrived at Bermuda from Portsmouth on the 15th inst., and left for Halifax on the 19th inst., arriving there on the 22nd inst.

CYGNET, Lieut.-Com. W. Wilson, will be ready for sea at Malta on the 25th inst., and will relieve the Rapid as senior officer off Cyprus and coast of Syria.

DASHER, Com. V. Anson, left Portsmouth for Jersey on the 22nd inst.

DOTEREL. Orders have been received at Chatham that the Doterel is to be prepared for commission forthwith; but in consequence of some slight additional fittings of gun-gear, it is not expected she will be ready for about a fortnight. It is said she is to go to the Pacific as the Penguin's relief. The Doterel is a six-gun composite screw sloop of 1,137 tons burthen, and 900 horse-power; she is a nice-looking vessel, and has excellent accommodation.

EUPHRATES, Capt. Henry Hand, passed Gibraltar, homeward bound, on the 20th inst., and arrived at Queenstown on Thursday.

EURYALUS, Capt. King, flagship of Rear-Admiral Jones, C.B., was at Bombay on the 23rd inst.

FAWN, Capt. W. L. Wharton, received telegraphic orders to proceed to Malta, and left Constantinople on the 16th inst., presumably to pay off and recommission at that port. Rumour, with its idle tongue, states Capt. Wharton will recommission the Fawn, provided that ship remains on the Mediterranean station; if not, Com. P. Aldrich, lately returned to England in the Sylvia, is expected to be offered the command. The Fawn arrived at Malta on Wednesday.

FLIRT, Com. Brackenbury, C.M.G., was at St. Helena on Oct. 21, and would proceed to Ascension and Bights Division, meeting the Commodore at Sierra Leone on Feb. 15.

GARNET, Capt. Loftus Jones. There is reason to believe that the rumour of considerable sickness on board the Garnet has been considerably exaggerated, and there is no cause for those having friends on board to feel alarmed. Quarantine is enforced at Monte Video in the case of any ship coming from a Brazilian port, and as stated before, this is the reason why the Detached Squadron will proceed direct to Monte Video, instead of calling at Bahia. The fact that the Garnet has satisfactorily performed the quarantine required of her, and was last reported in the harbour of Monte Video communicating freely with the shore, is sufficient to show that the fever cases she had have quite recovered.—Hampshire Telegraph.

INVINCIBLE, Capt. the Hon. E. R. Fremantle, C.B., was cruising off Sicily, and returns to Malta by the end of the month.

IRIS, Capt. E. H. Seymour, was at Corfu; the senior officer, Ionian Islands, and Patras by last accounts.

LILY, Com. Grove, arrived at Hong Kong from Shanghai on Oct. 5. She was to be ready for sea by the end of Oct., and remains on the South China Division.

LONDON, Capt. Brownrigg. The Commander-in-Chief at Devonport has informed the late crew of the London, who have arrived at that port, that their Lordships have authorised them to be granted an additional fourteen days' leave. This is to make some amends for their having been detained on the station longer than was originally intended, they having been drafted for two years' service at Zanzibar.

MINOTAUR, Capt. H. Rawson, flagship of Vice-Admiral Hood, C.B. A correspondent, writing from Queenstown, says:—"The Channel Squadron met off the Eddystone on Wednesday week, and proceeded to Queenstown, which they reached on Friday, after having experienced foggy and disagreeable weather in the Channel. The Achilles had a narrow escape of running into a merchant barque that tried to pass through the lines, and between her and the next ship, the Agincourt. By stopping and going full speed astern, the Achilles was just able to avoid a serious collision. The dancing-men of the fleet have had a good time of it during our stay at Queenstown, although the weather has been very unpropitious, and it was no joke for officers of the two junior ships to get ashore and return, as they were moored so far out. The two flagships, however, had very good berths, especially the Minotaur, which lay just under the windows of the club-house of the Cork Royal Yacht Club, of which, as well as of the Royal Western Yacht Club of Ireland, the officers of the squadron have been made honorary members. The Royal Cork is the oldest yacht club in the United Kingdom, having been established in 1720, and a list of the original members, as well as a copy of the somewhat quaint rules of the old Water Club, is hung up in the reading-room. A large number of the inhabitants of Cork and Queenstown have visited the different ships of the squadron, special trains and steamers having been run for their accommodation. The railway and steamer authorities have been very civil in allowing officers of the Fleet to travel free between Cork and Queenstown. The people here were very curious to know if the visit of the Fleet had any reference to the present state of Ireland, but were assured that we had merely come to enable the admirals and officers of the Squadron to patronise the ball given in aid of the funds of the Sailors' Home, which assurance, however, seems to have been taken cum grano salis. At any rate, the ball was largely attended, and the funds of a deserving society considerably helped. Two or three afternoon dances and a small party at Admiralty House have helped to make our stay pleasant, whilst lovers of rougher amusements were gratified with a football-match between the Cork Football Club and the Fleet. A hard-fought game was won by the Irishmen, who had more pace behind the scrimmages, although the Navy forwards strove hard to avert defeat. The weather has been wild and unsettled, the barometer rising and falling by leaps and bounds; in the space of twenty-four hours the mercury rose an inch, having previously fallen nearly as rapidly. The south cone is still flying, and if we go to sea to-morrow we shall have rather a rough time of it. Our programme is to arrive at Vigo on the 30th, where arrangements have been made for colliers to meet us to replenish our supply of coal. We leave Vigo on the 10th, and are due at Lisbon three or four days before Christmas." The Minotaur, with the rest of the Squadron, left Queenstown on Tuesday for Vigo.

MONARCH, Capt. Tryon, C.B., was at Teodo Bay up to the 16th inst. The Thunderer and Helicon were with the flag.

ORONTES, Capt. Kinahan, which reached Spithead on Thursday morning from Bombay, went into Portsmouth Harbour. She brought home over 900 troops, comprised of the 59th Regt., 700 strong, and details from a number of infantry and cavalry regiments, with Lieut.-Col. Lacy in command. She left Bombay on Oct. 31, and consequently has gained several days upon the Imperial troopship Euphrates, which preceded her by five days. Her passage was in favourable weather up to Malta, but afterwards she encountered head winds. On Wednesday afternoon, in a heavy fog, she ran within 100 yards of the Saints' Lighthouse, on the French coast, but the catastrophe which appeared imminent was prevented by the stopping of the ship's engines and the starboarding of the helm, favoured by the fact that she was under plain sail, and the wind was in an assisting quarter. The heavy weather she had met with a day or so previously necessitated her course being, in part, steered by "dead reckoning," and powerful cross-currents had led to the accidental deviation from her course. The 59th Regt., which left Kingstown in 1867, have served in Ceylon, Bombay, Bengal Presidency, and in Afghanistan, where several of her officers were wounded in minor engagements with the enemy, and 60 or 70 men succumbed to sickness or injury.

PENGUIN, Com. A. Paget, at Callao, would proceed shortly to Coquimbo, and join flag at Talcahuano Jan. 10.

RAPID, Com. W. F. Mann, was off Cyprus and the coast of Syria by last accounts, and will be relieved by the Cygnet; mails to Malta after the 20th inst.

SEAHORSE. This vessel is not only adapted for channel transport service and convoying, but is also a powerful ocean tug, and may be considered as the first of an entirely new class of vessel. The hull as well as the deck-house with which she is fitted for the accommodation of supernumeraries, are constructed entirely of Siemen's steel, manufactured at the Landore Steel Company's works. The piston-rods and some of the other engine forgings are also made of the same material, while the crank shafts are constructed of Whitworth's fluid compressed steel. The dimensions of the Seahorse are as follows:—Length, 160 ft.; beam, 26 ft.; depth in hold, 12 ft. 9 in.; and tonnage, 519 tons O.M. She is fitted with two sets of direct-acting inverted compound engines, containing all the latest improvements, each set driving a four-bladed iron propeller. The engines have each one high-pressure cylinder 26 in. in diameter, and one low-pressure cylinder 45 in. in diameter, with a stroke of 2 ft. 6 in. The total condensing surface is 2,240 square feet. The steam is supplied at 75 lb. pressure from a couple of cylindrical boilers fitted with brass tubes, the heating surface being 3,185 square feet, and the grate surface 127 square feet. The machinery was designed to indicate 1,000 horses, but, at the trial which took place in the Solent on Friday week it developed considerably over the contract power. The Seahorse is designed to accommodate, besides a crew of 25 men, about 100 supernumeraries, with officers and stores. The coal bunkers are capable of storing 120 tons of coal, which would enable her to steam from 10 to 12 days at an ordinary rate of speed. Should occasion require, however, 60 additional tons can be stowed in the forehold. The ship went out of harbour at 8 o'clock for a six hours' continuous full-power trial of her machinery, advantage being also taken during the day to run her six times on the measured mile at Stokes Bay. She was in the command of Com. Dowding, of the Asia, the contractors being represented by Mr. H. H. Laird and Mr. Bevis, the manager of the firm. The Admiralty were represented by Mr. Bannister, and the Navy and Dockyard by Chief Engineer Williams, R.N., and Mr. Morcom. The draught of the ship was 9 ft. 9 in. forward and 11 ft. 11 in. aft, which represents her designed deep load draught, and to bring her down to the necessary immersion, 180 tons of dead weight in the shape of coal and iron ballast were required. The mean results of the trial were:—Steam in boilers, 73 lb.; vacuum, 26 in. starboard and 27 in. port; revolutions, 106 starboard and 102 port per minute; mean pressures in cylinders, 33·625 lb. and 11·95 lb. starboard, and 34·91 lb. and 12·59 lb. port; horse-power, 287·89 and 285·34 starboard, and 281·72 and 309·98 port. The total mean indicated horse-power was 1,165·02, while the maximum was 1,307·13 horses during the last run; and the mean speed realised was 12·6 knots per hour. Satisfactory, however, as the speed was, the trial was not a mile trial, and when that takes place, considering that the draught of the ship will be less, and the time under weigh considerably shorter, still better results may be expected. The engines were stopped in 20 sec., started astern in 7 sec., and started from astern to ahead in 14 sec. The coal consumption per hour per unit of power developed was 2·25 lb. Everything passed off in a most satisfactory manner, the Seahorse proving herself one of the fastest and most handy, as well as the most powerful tug in the Navy.

SERAPIS, Capt. Guy O. Twiss, arrived at Aden from Bombay on the 20th inst., and left Aden the same day for England. She arrived at Suez on Thursday.

SHANNON, Capt. J. D'Arcy, was at Arica, up to Oct. 17, and would proceed shortly to Callao.

SHELDRAKE, Lieut.-Com. Bridges, was at Foochow by last accounts.

SUPERB, Capt. Le H. Ward, after having been launched nearly six years, left Spithead on Monday morning for the Mediterranean, on her first commission. While at the anchorage she had the defects in her electric lights rectified by dockyard shipwrights, and was supplied with new torpedo carriages. The fittings, however, to save time, will not be completed until she reaches Malta, where also her torpedo trials will be made.

SWINGER, Lieut.-Com. Tudor, was at Amoy by last accounts.

THETIS, Capt. Stephens, was at Callao on Oct. 17.

TORCH, Com. Selby, remains at Constantinople, doing duty as senior officer. She will be relieved early in December by H.M.S. Bittern. The boilers of the Torch are in a very bad state, requiring constant repairs.

TURQUOISE, Capt. Medlycott, was expected at Coquimbo from cruise among islands by end of November.

TYNE, Com. E. Stokes, is at Chatham making good defects. She is to have bilge keels fitted and extensive repairs to machinery caused by the damage to the crank shaft, and it is expected that she will not be ready for sea for about six or seven weeks. Her next voyage will be to Hong Kong.

VICTOR EMANUEL, Comdre. Smith, is to be paid off and recommissioned on Jan. 1, 1881, but as all the officers have been comparatively recently appointed this will be more a matter of convenience for the office than a change in the ship's officers or crew.

WOLVERENE, Comdre. Wilson, was at Melbourne up to Oct. 14, with the Emerald and Cormorant.

WYE, Staff Com. Henry D. Sarratt, arrived at St. Vincent, Cape De Verdes, on the 20th inst., and sailed on the 23rd inst.

Information has just been received of another attack upon a British steamer by natives of the Soloman Islands, South Pacific, the circumstances of which disclose great pertinacity on the part of the savages, who, however, are reported to have received a check which will probably have the effect of deterring them in future from molesting trading vessels. The encounter was of a sanguinary nature, no fewer than fifty-two persons having been killed, including Capt. Ferguson, master of the steamer which sustained the attack. The steamer in question, whose name is the Ripple, arrived in Brisbane Sept. 20, in charge of the mate. That officer reported that the steamer visited Bougainville Island, one of the Soloman Group, on the 8th of the previous month, in the course of a trading cruise. They bartered with the natives during the whole of the day, and remained at anchor over night. Early on the following morning the islanders flocked down in large numbers and went on board the ship, when trading was again engaged in. Suddenly the natives turned against the crew, and took possession of the deck of the vessel, the attack being so sudden and general, and the surprise being so complete, that it was evident it had been previously planned. Capt. Ferguson, who was in his cabin at the time, hearing the noise on deck, looked out of the cabin door, and being observed by the natives, was struck by a tomahawk in the neck and killed on the spot. The crew soon rallied from the surprise into which they had been thrown, and a desperate encounter took place. Most of the crew were well armed, and used their weapons vigorously, and, after a prolonged struggle, the natives were driven from the deck, leaving their dead and wounded behind. Fifty were found to have been killed in the conflict, whilst among the wounded were a woman and eight Kanakas, one of whom afterwards died. Of the crew of the steamer, the first mate (Mr. Davis), the chief engineer, the steward, and a passenger named Pense, received wounds, but the only one killed was the captain. Mr. Davis took charge of the vessel and navigated her for Duke of York's Island, where her Majesty's ship Conflict was fallen in with, and a report of the attack made to the commander, who has probably by this time taken steps for the punishment of the islanders.

The Australian Fresh Meat Importation Company has been formed, with a capital of £300,000, for the purpose of importing by direct steamers from the colonies of Australia and elsewhere fresh meat and provisions of the finest quality under the cold dry air system which experience has proved to be eminently successful. For details of the undertaking we must refer our readers to our advertising columns.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets, labelled—"JAMES EPPS AND CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London."—Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence, for afternoon use.

THE LIVADIA.

As the sudden decision to lay up the Livadia at Ferrol, instead of proceeding to the Crimea, as at first intended, has been the subject of much comment, we take from the Times the statement as to her injuries, as furnished by Sir Edward Reed, who says:—"It is important, however, to the whole shipbuilding world to know exactly the kind and extent of the injury which the Livadia sustained at sea, and for this reason I will state the principal facts plainly. The ship is divided by water-tight divisions into 106 compartments, and out of these six suffered. Of these, one only formed part of what may be called the ship proper—viz., the foremost starboard compartment of the double bottom. This had water in it, and it was from this circumstance alone that the existence of some injury was at first discovered. It has now been ascertained, however, that the ship's bottom under this compartment was really not itself injured, beyond a very slight leakage or 'weeping' past a couple of loosened rivets. The foremost bulkhead received part of the shock which burst in the compartment before it, and it was from that compartment that the adjacent compartment was gradually filled. So far as the hull proper is concerned, therefore, no injury worth mentioning was sustained. But around the hull proper is a cellular rim, so to speak, forming the outer sides of the turbot. This rim is lightly framed and plated, and is divided into a large number of small cells, which are treated as external to the ship herself, and have nothing whatever placed in them. Of these numerous small cells, five were more or less injured, two of them badly, and these have been temporarily stopped and strengthened by timber and shores. In one of them, where it was difficult, because of rivets, angle irons, &c., to stop the leakage, a temporary inner bottom of plank has been laid and caulked. Had it happened that these temporary repairs had been made in an English dockyard, the services of a dozen shipwrights for a couple of days would have amply sufficed for them. At Ferrol, they took a couple of weeks. The extra expenditure of time did not arise from any want of resources in the Royal Dockyard of Ferrol, nor from any want of willingness on the part of the Naval Authorities or Dockyard people. Indeed, the Spanish officers have in this case given a high example of Spanish courtesy, and have rendered the Russian officers every possible assistance in the readiest way. But Spain is not England, nor are Spanish workmen remarkable for vigour and speed in the pursuit of their avocations. This is not a country in which a very exalted conception of a hard day's work prevails. I should say that the shipwrights and caulkers of Ferrol are men of a calm, contemplative, and almost meditative disposition, who philosophically decline to burden to-day with labours that may just as well be performed, or rather deferred till, to-morrow. No act of theirs exposes them to accusations of heedless impetuosity. They seem to think, with Mr. Tennyson, that 'raw haste is half-sister to delay.' Therefore, they take things coolly, and avoid altogether the many evil consequences of hurry. Moreover, their tranquil life is characterised by a good deal of what I may call professional etiquette, which effectually preserves one man and one set of men from in any degree trenching upon the functions of another. For example, a few planks have to be fitted and laid in a ship's compartment. Shipwrights and caulkers in ample numbers undertake the task. They appear on board at an hour when it is certain that they have not unwisely wasted any part of their energies on the way. After due contemplation of the scene of their labours and the exchange of many thoughts, or, at least, of many words, they proceed with their measurements, and (if nothing that is wanted has been left on shore) with their work. Well-informed men as they are, they know well the dangers of over-exertion and of a high bodily temperature, and they avoid these extremes. If urged by an impatient and thoughtless Englishman to 'shove along,' they acquaint themselves with his desire, reflect upon it, discuss it among themselves, and eventually decide that it would not be wise or well to yield to anything so detrimental to their systems (in both senses of the word). At length, however, after the slow passage of hours or days, the planks do get fitted and laid, and then comes a new enterprise—that of nailing them down. But here the polite shipwright stops; not for him is the boring and driving which follow, but for his friend and colleague, the caulker. It is most reasonable that at this stage the two should confer, and confer they do. The result of the conference usually is that it is too late in the day to commence an enterprise of such moment, and, heedless of all persuasions, they retire, and spend the long evening probably in preparing themselves for the next day's efforts; or, if of a political turn, they not improbably do like the rest of the world, and discuss the likelihood of Dulcigno getting transferred before the grave closes over them. I need not pursue the example further. I have said enough, I think, to do justice to the Spanish workmen, and to show that no mean desire to compete with British workmen and drive them out of the field exists in the breasts of these special artisans."

On Thursday last a formal meeting of the Army and Navy Hotel Company, Limited, was held at Willis's Rooms, Major Mackenzie, of Findon, occupying the chair. The primary object of the meeting was to carry out the provisions of the Joint-Stock Companies Act, but the more important object appeared to be that of affording the committee of direction an opportunity of reporting to the shareholders the position and prospects of the company. In discharging the duties which devolved upon him as chairman, Major Mackenzie, rapidly surveyed the progress of this important undertaking, from its first conception, and pointed out in forcible terms the undoubted claims which it possessed to entitle it to the patronage of the public. Nothing could be more satisfactory than the facts laid before the meeting as regards those important points,—the economical working of the institution, and the exceptional advantages which, when completed, it will be in a position to offer.

STAFF APPOINTMENTS FOR MARINES.

We recently remarked upon the refusal by the Horse Guards to allow Capt. Seymour, of the Royal Marines, to accompany Gen. Smyth to the Cape as his aide-de-camp. How much this is felt by officers of the Royal Marines—past as well as present—may be gathered from some remarks of Col. Delacombe, chief of police at Derby, who, when called on at a municipal banquet to respond for "The Services," said it was now over 30 years since he gained a commission as 2nd lieutenant in the Royal Marines, bearing the Queen's own signature. No mere complimentary honour was that title of royal; it was gained and bestowed by the King for services rendered at a most critical period in the history of this country. He had frequently been called upon to respond to this toast, both at home and abroad, but never before had he risen with feelings of such regret, doubt, and uncertainty as to his position. He knew of no country during the present century with which this nation had been engaged in war, in which the Royal Marines had not been represented. They might easily conceive, then, what the feelings of those serving in that loyal old corps were at reading this decision of the Commander-in-Chief. It had been acknowledged over and over again, by officers of every branch of the Service, that in point of discipline, training, physique, and soldierlike bearing, they were second to none under the Crown. They had served in all parts of the world, as troops under the command of Generals of the Army, taking command of troops of the Line whenever an officer of Marines happened to be the senior present by date of commission. In Spain, 1835; in China, 1839-40, under Lord Gough; Kaffir war, 1850; in Burmah, 1851; in the Crimea, 1854-55, in Sir Colin Campbell's brigade; in the Indian Mutiny, 1857-58; New Zealand, Abyssinia, China again, 1858-59-60, under Sir Hope Grant and others; Ashantee and Zululand. In all these, and he believed many other engagements that could be mentioned, it would be found the Royal Marines were present. Under such circumstances, what must be the feelings of those serving, on hearing this last decision? For it must be remembered they were like prisoners in the dock, they could not petition, they could not write to the papers; it was against the rules of the Service. He, therefore, whilst giving place to no man in possessing feelings of the most ardent devotion and loyalty to his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, most fervently prayed that the ratepayers of England, through their representatives in Parliament (seeing that this most loyal and efficient old corps was also a most inexpensive one), would cause steps to be taken on their next assembly to have its relative position clearly defined, and thus for ever put a stop to heartburnings that must of neccessity exist under present circumstances, to the prejudice of the public service.

ADMIRALTY FURNITURE.

SIR,—In your paper of Nov. 20, you comment upon the value and convenience of the officers of the revised Admiralty Regulations for the supply of furniture. Will you permit me to point out a few of the disadvantages of that scheme?—1. It is not optional, except the house be empty, when you must saddle your successors with the articles, whether they require them, or not. 2. If a man has his own furniture, he must sell or store, which makes the transaction doubly expensive. 3. A man without a family may have to take a house from a man who is differently situated, or it may be the reverse; but in neither case do the regulations permit of any change or alteration in the articles. 4. The prices being charged at the highest possible West-end figure, though mostly bought at the eastward, make the per-centage fully equal to 10, instead of 7½,—which is certainly not "Griffith's valuation." 5. The articles are of mixed patterns and colours. It is not uncommon to see a walnut-wood cabinet, a rosewood card-table, crimson carpet, and green covers for chairs, some old, some of new pattern. 6. Articles of certain kinds do not decrease in value with age. "I know a bedstead" which in course of time will become a valuable property, for it is going up in price steadily with every change of tenants! 7. Articles in daily use naturally become worn out, but the system does not admit of replacement, except on change of tenancy; and officers who are bold enough to ask for such, are officially informed that "all repairs must be executed at the tenant's cost." I will not trouble you with more just now, though I have much to say on the subject, if occasion requires. The Admiralty Board intended the system to be a "boon" to officers, and with some alterations it may yet become so; but the first thing to be done is to show some consideration for those who do not require the boon, and for those who do, to let them be treated with at least forbearance and civility, and not subject them to as many obligations as if they were dealing with a professional gentleman from Wardour Street.—I am, &c., A. B. C.

It is noticeable, says a correspondent of the Hampshire Telegraph, that the editors of the Army List and those of the Navy List are not quite agreed as to the manner in which they treat a Lord. In the Navy List, Earls and Lords by courtesy are all dubbed "the Right Hon.," whether Privy Councillors or not, while in the Army List the Right Hon. is not used. In the same way the Navy List calls a Marquess "the Most Honourable,"—not Most Noble—while in the Army List the extra prefix is omitted. I notice also that though in the Navy List courtesy Lords are given the additional handle of Right Hon., a midshipman who is the son of a duke is simply "Lord." There is a want of uniformity about this arrangement which should be seen to, and I do not understand why a gallant commander should appear as a Right Hon. Lord while his brother in the Army is but a Lord.

Reviews.

Endymion. (Longmans and Co.)

The great event of the season, in a literary point of view, is, beyond question, the publication of a "novel by the author of Lothair." It was hardly to be expected that the veteran author, who achieved such a marked success by his earlier productions, would be able, in the wane of life, to exercise as powerful a spell as he was wont to do over the imaginations of his readers. That he has done so, however, will be felt by the readers of Endymion. It is perfectly true that the story is one of days long past; that the characters we meet with are creations that must fail to charm as they were wont to do in the days of Henrietta Temple, Vivian Grey, and even Lothair; but yet, withal, the old power asserts itself, and the ring of the sterling metal is to be found in the pages of the Earl of Beaconsfield's latest work. The interest of the story, it may be supposed by many, will be appreciated only by politicians; but this is a rash conclusion to arrive at, and readers who may shudder at any tale that is even tainted with politics, will recognise the existence of a charming love-story in the pages of Endymion. The hero and heroine of the tale are the children of Mr. Ferrars, one of those who supported with unflinching steadiness the fortunes of the Duke. Their names are Endymion and Myra, and thus they are introduced to the reader:—

> "With the dessert, not without some ceremony, were introduced the two most remarkable guests of the entertainment, and these were the twins; children of singular beauty, and dressed, if possible, more fancifully and brilliantly than their mamma. They resembled each other, and had the same brilliant complexions, rich chestnut hair, delicately-arched brows, and dark blue eyes. Though only eight years of age, a most unchildlike self-possession distinguished them. The expression of their countenances was haughty, disdainful, and supercilious. Their beautiful features seemed quite unimpassioned, and they moved as if they expected everything to yield to them. The girl, whose long ringlets were braided with pearls, was ushered to a seat next to her father, and, like her brother, who was placed by Mrs. Ferrars, was soon engaged in negligently tasting delicacies, while she seemed, apparently, unconscious of any one being present, except when she replied to those who addressed her with a stare and a haughty monosyllable. The boy, in a black velvet jacket, with large Spanish buttons of silver filigree, a shirt of lace, and a waistcoat of white satin, replied with reserve, but some condescension, to the good-natured but half-humorous inquiries of the husband of Zenobia."

The present and future of these twin children became clouded. Mr. Ferrars lost his hopes and his fortune, and retired, to live in a quaint old mansion in Berkshire. But time wrought a change. The Grey Ministry fails, and Mr. Ferrars' hopes and fortunes are once more in the ascendant. A great number of "miscellaneous" characters are introduced during the progress of the story, particularly Mr. Vigo, the aristocratic tailor, and the great "railway king." The fortunes of our hero start from a lowly position, that of a badly-paid clerk in Somerset House, whose greatest dissipation consisted in a chop and a pint of "half-and-half," at "Joe's," in Finch Lane. His sister Myra's fortunes are equally low, so much so that she is forced to become "a companion." (The reader should not pass by the description, life-like in every respect, of the Neuchatel family.) Matters now improve with both, and Endymion makes his way rapidly to one of the highest positions in the State. His first entry into Parliament is thus described:—

> "The greatest opportunity that can be offered to an Englishman was now his,—a seat in the House of Commons. It was his almost in the first bloom of youth, and yet after advantageous years of labour and political training, and it was combined with a material independence on which he never could have counted. A love of power, a passion for distinction, a noble pride, which had been native to his early disposition, but which had apparently been crushed by the enormous sorrows and misfortunes of his childhood, and which had vanished, as it were, before the sweetness of that domestic love which had been the solace of his adversity, now again stirred their dim and mighty forms, in his renovated and, as it were, inspired consciousness. 'If this has happened at twenty-two,' thought Endymion, 'what may not occur, if the average life of man be allotted to me? At any rate, I will never think of anything else. I have a purpose in life, and I will fulfil it. It is a charm, that its accomplishment would be the most grateful result to the two beings I most love in the world."

Nothing can be happier than the author's description of the feelings of his hero, on the occasion of his making his maiden speech within the precincts of St. Stephen's:—

> "The notice of this question was the first time Endymion opened his mouth in the House of Commons. It was an humble and not a very hazardous office, but when he got on his legs, his head swam, his heart beat so violently that it was like a convulsion preceding death, and though he was only on his legs for a few seconds, all the sorrows of his life seemed to pass before him. When he sate down, he was quite surprised that the business of the House proceeded as usual, and it was only after some time that he became convinced that no one but himself was conscious of his sufferings, or that he had performed a routine duty otherwise than in a routine manner."

From henceforth everything goes couleur de rose, and all ends well. It seems absurd to question the complete success that will most probably mark the progress of this wonderful literary effort. It may, as we have already observed, treat of persons and scenes which only belong to a previous generation, but still the same charm, the same life-like excellence in description, the same versatility in dealing with character, exist, and there can be little doubt that this new and extraordinary effort of Lord Beaconsfield's genius will be appreciated not only by his friends, but by his political adversaries.

London Opinion. (Dean and Son.)—The first number of a new periodical, under the above title, makes its début this week. It claims to prove itself to be a critical and literary journal for the expression of independent thought upon current topics and existing abuses, and is edited by Major W. Minto. The editor, in his introduction, dwells upon the great change which has for some time past been observable in the public mind with respect to the literature of the time, and considers the present to be a favourable time for introducing a species of literature more calculated to elevate the mind and quicken into action the power of thought than that which has of late years become familiar to the public. The first number contains a dozen papers on various subjects, contributed by writers some of whom have made a high reputation in the literary world. We wish a prosperous career to the new aspirant for public patronage.

The Theatre. (Charles Dickens and Evans.)—This is a capital number of a periodical that is steadily making progress in the literary world.

Universal Instructor. (Ward, Lock, and Co.)—The new number of the "Universal Instructor" abounds in interesting and instructive matter; the amount of useful information it contains is remarkable, while the price is almost nominal.

Messrs. Grant and Co. have published in a Christmas number one of Mr. Francillon's attractive stories, entitled "Under Slieve Ban: a Yarn, in Seven Knots." It is a real Irish story, racy of the soil, and quite worthy of the author's high reputation. The reader will observe, if he looks at the back of each full-page illustration, a novel mode of advertising.

The Russian cruisers are moving about rather freely on the Japanese station, but what they may be carrying, seeing that they are not absolutely ships of war, is a mystery. The new admiral has actually hoisted his flag in one of these converted merchant steamers, the Africa, and proceeded in that ship to Chefoo, from Nagasaki. The Asia left the same place just afterwards for the Russian station at Vladivostock, and another, the Zabiaka, for Yokohama. Meanwhile, another vessel, a British steamer, about whose cargo there was no doubt, she having come from Cronstadt with a large supply of arms and ammunition, left for Vladivostock to discharge. In the month of September there were three Russian admirals on the China Station, but one was under orders for home. The Russian fleet on the station consists of no fewer than twenty vessels of all kinds, two of which are large ironclads and six are fast cruisers. We have one ironclad, and are gradually reducing the number of small gunboats, and sending a smaller number of larger classes to replace them, the China squadron being in course of reconstruction. The idea is that the necessity for keeping a gunboat at each of the treaty ports has now passed away, and consequently it will be possible to put on the station a squadron of ships more fit for cruising and exercising in company. Of course, this will reduce the number of commands for senior lieutenants and commanders, a feature of the arrangement which is much to be regretted, as the opportunities for giving our officers that experience necessary to make them capable captains are becoming fewer and fewer.—Hampshire Telegraph.

The Times says:—"The following breech-loading guns are being prepared in the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich for experimental trial, under the direction of the War Office, viz.:—A 43-ton gun of 12-inch calibre, a total length of 353 in., which is intended to fire a charge of 285 lb. weight of P2. powder, and throw a battering projectile of 714 lb. weight; 2, a 26-ton gun of 10·4-inch calibre, a total length of 293·4 in., which is intended to fire 231 lb. of the same powder, and throw a battering projectile of 462 lb.; 3, an 18-ton gun of 9·2-inch calibre, and total length of 260 in., intended to fire 160 lb. of powder, with a battering projectile weighing 320 lb; 4, a 25-pounder, weighing 22½ C, of 4-inch calibre, and 106·75 in. length, designed to fire 12 lb. of R.L. G2. powder, with a common shell weighing 25 lb.; 5, a 25-pounder, weighing 13½ C, with a 4-inch bore, and firing 25-lb. common shell, with 6 lb. and 4 lb. of powder respectively. The whole of these guns are in an advanced state, and will shortly be ready for proof. They are being constructed upon the system of breech-loading which has been designated as that of the 'modified French,' which system has already been tried at Shoeburyness in two guns of 6-inch and 8-inch, and weights respectively of 4 tons and 11½ tons, which were placed at the disposal of the Government by Sir William Armstrong and Co., of Elswick. It is further understood that 14 of the former class of guns have been ordered to be made for the use of the Navy. The above-named firm are also making a 43-ton breech-loading gun for trial."

Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil.—Its Unequalled Efficacy in General Debility.—In cases of Debility and Defective Nutrition, the use of this celebrated Oil has been attended with remarkably beneficial results. Rowland Dalton, Esq., District Medical Officer, Bury St. Edmunds, writes:—"In giving my opinion of Dr. de Jongh's Light Brown Cod Liver Oil, I have no hesitation in saying that I have not the slightest confidence in any other kind. The effects of Dr de Jongh's Oil are sure and most remarkable, especially in that broken-down state of health and strength which usually precedes and favours tubercular deposit, and I never recommend any other sort. The Oil I have had from you was for my own use, and it has certainly been the only means of saving my life on two occasions, and even now, when I feel 'out of condition,' I take it, and like it unmixed with anything, as being the most agreeable way. I could wish that Dr. de Jongh's Oil would come into general use, and entirely supersede the Pale and other worthless preparations." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s; with his stamp and signature and the signature of his sole consignees on the capsule and the label under wrapper, by all chemists. Sole Consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77 Strand, London.

Amusements.

At Her Majesty's Theatre, repetitions of popular operas have taken place, and Madame Amadi, a mezzo-soprano with a voice of extensive compass, has successfully appeared in "Lucrezia Borgia," and as Azucena in "Il Trovatore." At the end of the week, Signor Tito Mattei's new opera, "Marie de Gand," which has been considerably altered and improved since first performed in private two years ago, has given fresh interest to the programme.

At the Princess's, Mr. Edwin Booth has appeared to great advantage in "Richelieu," and his fine performance has thoroughly merited the enthusiastic applause it has received. The impersonation of the wily cardinal has been universally admitted to be more strikingly impressive than his Hamlet; but justice has hardly been done in some instances to the finished art of his acting, the polish of his style, and above all, the perfection of his elocution. Despite some inadequate support, Mr. Booth not only secured the unwavering attention, but the warmest admiration of his auditory, and the last act startled the audience into a burst of applause no less hearty than spontaneous. Mr. Ryder gives his valuable assistance as Father Joseph, and Miss Gerard prettily plays Julie de Mortemar, though lacking the requisite force to give the character its due significance.

Under the whimsical appellation of "Where's the Cat?" a farce in three acts, freely translated from the German by Mr. James Albery, has been brought out at the Criterion, an establishment requiring the lightest kind of dramatic aliment, but where a piquant sauce must be supplied, to whet the appetites of the frequenters. The novelty meets all the demands made for this form of entertainment, and ought only to be judged from a local stand-point. Reason is set at defiance, and the spectator must accept every humorous situation as it is presented, without too curiously inquiring into the why or wherefore. The piece is acted with unflagging spirit by all the members of the company. Most amusingly expressed is the demonstrative regard for domestic virtue exhibited by Mrs. John Wood, as an excessively scrupulous landlady. Three coquettish damsels are charmingly embodied by Miss Mary Rorke, Miss Rose Saker, and Miss Eastlake. Miss Edith Bruce is a lively rustic soubrette, and Mr. Charles Wyndham is an eccentric baronet; Mr. Standing and Mr. Beerbohm Tree as an enthusiastic artist and an erratic poet, Mr. Giddens as a German waiter, and Mr. W. J. Hill as an oblivious landlord, act with a vivacity and spirit allowing no pause for serious reflection.

At the Folly Theatre, Mr. Toole has introduced to his large circle of friends an exceedingly funny personage, who is never likely to say the same droll things three nights or days together, but who will, nevertheless, be undoubtedly recognised as a general favourite with the London public for many weeks to come. His name is Mr. Samuel Slithery, a professor of deportment and dancing, and he is to be identified with the "Hall of Terpsichore," in the Old Kent Road. Through the lips of Mr. Toole he delivers a humorous lecture on the various branches of his profession, and makes more puns in five minutes than can be explained in an hour. This "new and utter absurdity," as Mr. Byron has properly described his farcical sketch, entitled "The Light Fantastic," gives Mr. Toole, in the course of an extravagantly droll impersonation, the opportunity of introducing a new dance, to be known as "The Charing-Cross Crawl."

The last nights of Offenbach's "La Fille du Tambour Major" are announced at the Royal Alhambra Theatre, in consequence of engagements entered into for the production of a new programme at Christmas next. The opera must be withdrawn early next month, notwithstanding its enormous success. The piece will have been performed at the Alhambra 200 consecutive nights on Monday, Dec. 6, and has already been witnessed by upwards of half-a-million of visitors.

We understand that arrangements have been made with Mr. John Hollingshead for a special morning performance of the popular comic opera of "Billee Taylor," now being played nightly at the Imperial Theatre, on Saturday, Dec. 4.

The following additional noblemen and gentlemen have joined the Committee of the Afghan War Relief Fund, viz.:—Viscount Cranbrook, Generals Sir Frederick Roberts, R. C. Lawrence, Sir Alexander Taylor, and Sir Peter Lumsden, and Col. Sir R. H. Davies. All communications for the Committee should be addressed to Capt. Gildea, 20 Stafford Terrace, Kensington, W.

Major Euan Smith, late political officer in Afghanistan, had arrived in Bombay, en route for England, whither he proceeds on sick certificate to enjoy a well-earned six months' rest. Major Euan Smith passed through this city from the Persian Gulf last January, to take political charge at Candahar, and he accompanied Gen. Sir Donald Stewart's force from Candahar to Cabul. After serving with Sir Donald Stewart's force, and earning the highest encomiums in that General's despatches, he was sent with Gen. Roberts's force from Cabul back to Candahar, in August. Major Euan Smith thus made both marches, and was present at the battles of Ahmed Kheyl and Mazra.

A Healthy Trim versus Superfluous Fat.—Eno's Fruit Salt acts as simply, yet just as powerfully, on the animal system, as sunshine does on the vegetable world. It has a natural action on the organs of digestion, absorption, circulation, respiration, secretion, and excretion, and thus removes and hinders (by natural means) the unnatural and dangerous accumulation of Fat. It keeps the body in healthy Trim, by preserving and restoring health. Instead of being lowering to the system, this preparation is in the highest degree invigorating. It supplies the want of ripe fruit, so essential to animal economy, and may be taken as an invigorating and cooling draught under any circumstances from infancy to old age, and may be continued for any length of time, and looked upon as being Pure Fruit Salt, the product of ripe fruit. It is impossible to overstate its value; on that account, no household ought to be without it, for by its use many disastrous results may be entirely prevented. In the nursery, it is beyond praise.—Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

GOOD-CONDUCT MEDAL.

"Observer" writes:—"The Royal Warrant, 1878, 'Pay and Non-Effective Pay,' Art. 1,074, states that a soldier who shall have served 18 years in our Army with an irreproachable character, and shall not have been convicted by court-martial during that period, shall be entitled to the medal for good-conduct. Now, supposing a young soldier was tried by court-martial in his first two years' service, and then served 20 years, during the last 18 years with faultless character, and the greater part of it as a non-commissioned officer, it certainly seems hard to deprive such a man of the good-conduct medal."

The Standard states, "The War Office has given its permission, with the approval of the Treasury, for £5,200 to be set apart from the public funds for the purpose of providing a canteen and recreation-room at Cork, the want of such accommodation having been most strongly urged by the military authorities."

THE RECENT CHANGES IN UNIFORM.

"Let Well Alone" writes:—"Having worn the new shoulder-straps three times under a cloak, they have become so damaged as to be hardly presentable. Such, of course, would be anticipated by any practical man. But surely it is rather hard to order us to get these ornaments, which very few can think improve the look of the uniform, and which none can hope will stand the test of the rough work in marches and camps to which officers are now so constantly exposed."

I MUST NOT MISS THIS OPPORTUNITY OF COMMENDING THE "PERFECTED" COD LIVER OIL, lately introduced by Messrs. Allen and Hanburys. It is so pure and tasteless that, when oil will agree at all, this is sure to do so.—"On Loss of Weight, Blood-Spitting, and Lung Disease" (New Edition),—by Horace Dobell, M.D., Consulting (late Senior) Physician to the Royal Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, &c. See also the opinions of the Lancet, British Medical Journal, Medical Times, Practitioner, &c. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' Perfected Oil. Sold only in imperial quarter-pints, 1s 4d; half-pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade-mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

ERRATUM.—On page 811, column 1, line 33, by a printer's error, the words, in an extract, "The fate of those who died was often enviable. And yet desertions were not numerous; some preferred suicide," were erroneously attributed to Mr. Kinglake.

USE MARGERISON'S REGISTERED WHITE WINDSOR SOAPS PRESTON.—The best and cheapest Soap in England for washing clothes, or any household purpose. In pounds, 4½d; squares, 2d. Ask for MARGERISON'S Soap, and see that the word MARGERISON is on every bar, as there are so many worthless imitations. Sold at Stores.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO is the purest and most fragrant Tooth Powder ever used, and contains no acid or mineral ingredients, which are so detrimental to the teeth and gums. All who have a good set of teeth, and wish to keep them, should use it; and they who, by early neglect or ill-health, suffer from discoloured or imperfect teeth, which are the forerunners of dyspepsia and indigestion, will find that ROWLAND'S ODONTO will keep them sound and white, and prevent and arrest decay. Its purity especially adapts it for the teeth of young children. Ask any chemist for Rowland's Odonto.

ZULU WAR BOOKS.

Compiled by J. P. MACKINNON (late 25th K.O.B.'s, formerly 72nd Highlanders), and S. H. SHADBOLT; and Dedicated, by permission, to Field-Marsha H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, Commanding-in-Chief. In one quarto volume, handsomely bound in cloth extra, price £2 10s.

Messrs. S. L., M., and Co. have just ready the above MEMORIAL WORK in one large volume. It contains Sixty Cabinet Portraits, finely reproduced by the Woodbury process of photography, of the Officers of the British Army who have lost their lives in the late war, together with Biographies, compiled from materials furnished by their relatives and surviving comrades.

By permission of the Empress Eugénie, the list is headed with a Photograph and brief Memoir of his late Imperial Highness Prince Louis Napoleon.

Introductory to the artistic portion of the work there is a Sketch of the War, embodying detailed accounts of the various Engagements.

Appended to the Introductory Sketch is a complete List of all the Officers of the British Army who were engaged in the Campaign, with an account of their services in the war.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to import by direct steamers from the Colonies of Australia and elsewhere Fresh Meat and Provisions of the finest quality under the cold dry air system, which experience has proved to be eminently successful.

After careful consideration of the various processes by which Fresh Meat can be preserved, it has been decided to adopt the Bell-Coleman Mechanical Refrigeration Company's Machine. Under this system, dead meat, averaging from 1,200 to 2,400 quarters per ship, has been imported weekly from the United States of America, and landed at the Ports of Liverpool, Glasgow, and London, during the last twelve months in the most perfect condition, and has met with a ready sale at remunerative prices.

A contract has therefore been entered into with the Bell-Coleman Mechanical Refrigeration Company for a monopoly of their system for the importation of Meat from Australia. A trial of this system has recently been made on board one of the Mail Steamers with complete success.

Proposals have already been made to the Peninsular and Oriental and other Steam Ship Companies for the fitting-up of an agreed amount of storage room, for the conveyance of dead meat in Steamers running direct from Australia to this Country, which, when carried into effect, will secure a weekly or fortnightly supply.

With the regularity of the shipments, and arrival of supplies at stated periods, it is proposed to have the accounts audited, and a division of the profits declared twice a year, which it is anticipated will be at the rate of not less than 20 per cent. per annum.

From information received from large breeders of stock in the Colonies, who are now in London, the supply is considered to be inexhaustible, and it is predicted by these gentlemen that in three years after the export of meat begins, the impetus given by the trade to the production of stock would be so great that the supply would be equal to any demand made upon it. Whilst, therefore, the breeder obtains a larger income from his increased raising of stock and consequent production of wool, it follows that the basis of twopence per pound, upon which the calculations of this Company are made, will rarely, if ever, be exceeded for the prime cost of the meat. The wholesale price of beef and mutton now ruling in New South Wales, where the increase in the number of stock during the past year has been 8,000,000 head, is 1d. to 1½d. per pound.

Provisional arrangements have been made with a Company for acting as agents in Australia.

The serious decrease of stock raised in the United Kingdom, amounting in 1879, according to statistics, to the total of 1,322,865 head, will convince the public that the time has come for the energetic development of a trade with our own Colonies, where Meat of the finest quality is to be had in abundance, and at such prices that ough materially to reduce the prices now ruling to the Consumer here.

Arrangements have been made with leading Meat Salesmen in London for the immediate sale of the Meat on arrival, and those gentlemen have assured the Directors that they can dispose of the largest quantity this Company is likely to import at prices ranging from 5½d to 6d per lb., whilst freight and all other expenses are not expected to exceed 2d per lb.

Powers are retained by this Company for the chartering of other Steamers or Sailing Vessels, and to fit the same up with refrigerating machinery, for the development of the Meat trade elsewhere, if found advisable in view of the dimensions the trade is likely to attain.

No promotion-money will be paid. The founders receive from the Company 100 Shares of £10 each, which are not entitled to any dividend, nor do the Directors receive any remuneration, until dividends at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum have been paid to the Shareholders. The founders' Shares then become entitled to one-fourth of the surplus profits over 7 per cent., the remaining three-fourths being apportioned between the Directors in England and the ordinary Shareholders in the proportion of one-fourth to the Directors and two-fourths to the ordinary Shareholders. The formation expenses are strictly confined to 1 per cent. on the nominal capital of the Company.

The attention of intending investors is called to the fact that the Directors do not receive any remuneration, nor are the founders' Shares entitled to any dividend until a substantial dividend has been paid to the Shareholders, thus proving their confidence in the success of the undertaking. The details of all arrangements are complete for the commencement of business immediately on the formation of the Company.

The only agreements entered into are (1), An Agreement, dated the 5th day of October, 1880, and made between Hugh Colville McDonald, of the one part, and Sir R. R. Torrens, as Agent for a Company therein described as intended to be formed, and being this Company, of the other part; and (2), An Agreement, dated the 27th day of October, 1880, and made between the Bell-Coleman Mechanical Refrigerating Company, of the one part, and the said Hugh Colville McDonald, as Agent for a Company therein described, and being this Company, of the other part.

In the event of no allotment of Shares being made, the deposits will be immediately returned in full.

The Memorandum and Articles of Association may be seen at the Offices of the Solicitors. Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained at the Head Offices of the Bankers and at their Branches, also at the Company's Offices.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

The MANOR HOUSE, LEE, S.E.

At the last Literary Examination for Militia Officers, held in October, the Seven Candidates from Professor WOLFFRAM'S Establishment were all successful, viz., Messrs. H. F. Holland, H. Swann, H. L. Barrow, Percy Lees, J. Cockerton, E. C. J. Williams, C. H. M. Walker Myln.

On this occasion, Mr. Barrow obtained first marks, out of all the candidates in English; Mr. Holland was first in Geometrical Drawing; and Mr. Lees was second in Geology and Geometrical Drawing.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—HEALTH OR WEALTH?—No sane person would hesitate an instant in the choice between these two conditions. Now is the season to secure the former, either by restoring or confirming it. These Pills expel all impurities from the system which fogs, foul vapours, and variable temperatures engender during winter; this medicine also acts most wholesomely upon the skin, by disgorging the liver of its accumulated bile, and by exciting the kidneys to more energetic action; it increases the appetite for food, and strengthens the digestive process. The stomach and liver, with which most disorders originate, are fully under the control of these regenerative Pills, which act very kindly, yet most efficiently, on the tenderest bowels.

ARUNDEL & CALEDONIAN HOTELS.

These two old-established Family Hotels, from their especially advantageous position, both overlooking the Thames Embankment, combine light, air, and perfect quiet, although in the centre of London. They are now under one management, AND AT EITHER ESTABLISHMENT VISITORS CAN ARRANGE FOR FULL BOARD AT A FIXED CHARGE OF SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE PER DAY, which includes a good Bedroom, Breakfast of hot and cold meats, Luncheon, Dinner of six courses, and Tea and Coffee in the evening; also the use of large, well-appointed Sitting-rooms, including an ELEGANTLY-APPOINTED DRAWING-ROOM.

These Hotels, containing upwards of 200 Rooms, have been for many years largely patronised by Members of Parliament, the Clergy, and by Military and Naval Officers and their Families, by reason of their central, but retired localities, affording all the comforts and luxuries of high-class Hotels.

WATCHES.—JEWELLERY.—
WATCHES.

The Rev. Robt. Cass, Settle, Yorkshire, writes February 19, 1880:—"The Ladies' Gold Lever Watch received from you for 70s in size, workmanship, and beautiful appearance, resembles a watch usually sold at £10. It gives entire satisfaction."

The Rev. James Arthur Kemp, Lew Down, North Devon, also writes, March 8, 1880:—"The watch I ordered of you at 25s, for my servant, arrived quite safely, and I am exceedingly well pleased with it in every way. It is an excellent timekeeper, very neat and handsome in appearance, and in my opinion worth far more than those that cost treble the money. I do not think anybody should be without a watch, when they can obtain from you such an excellent article at so reasonable a price."

"I am very much pleased with everything I have had from your Company. The watch (25s) has proved to be an excellent one, and is a marvel of cheapness. It is fully equal to, or indeed superior to, many I have seen purchased by regimental clubs for treble the money. I am positive your Company will prove itself a boon to Army men at home and abroad, particularly the latter, who are often compelled to pay enormous prices for very inferior articles indeed. Your Company is deserving of every success, and I deem it a duty, to you and the Army, to become an amateur agent, unpaid."

THE MIDLAND COUNTIES WATCH COMPANY supply their celebrated Watches direct to wearers, at very lowest wholesale cash prices. They guarantee watches supplied by them to be most perfect timekeepers, and honestly assert their price to be under one-half those charged by watchmakers; and as a guarantee of good-faith they undertake to return the full amount paid for any Watch if not to the satisfaction of the purchaser.

The Company's chief manufacture are their celebrated Crystal Glasses, which dispense with all risk of breakage. Their LADIES' and GENTLEMEN'S SILVER WATCHES, at 25s, and their LADIES' GOLD LEVERS, at 70s, are acknowledged to be the cheapest Watches in the world.

Catalogues, containing list of testimonials, and beautifully illustrated descriptions of more expensive watches, gold and silver jewellery, electroplate, &c. are sent gratis on application. We may safely assert that the prices in same will be a surprise to all who see them.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS

OF THE

GRESHAM LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY

TO THE

ORDINARY GENERAL MEETING OF SHAREHOLDERS,

HELD ON NOVEMBER 18, 1880.

Head Office, St. Mildred's House, London.

The Directors have now to present their Report on the operations of the 32nd financial year of the Society, ending June 30, 1880.

During the year 6,205 proposals were made to the Society for assuring the sum of £2,349,346. Of these proposals, 4,717 were accepted for the assurance of £1,760,326, and policies were issued for that amount. The immediate annuities granted during the year were for £12,370 4s. 10d.

The income received from premiums, after deducting the amount paid for re-assurance, was £446,992 10s. 4d., including £56,961 7s. 7d. in premiums for the first year of assurance.

The balance of the interest account amounted to £116,126 17s. 9d., which, together with the receipts from premiums, raised the income of the Society to £563,119 8s. 1d. for the year. The accrued interest which had not been received at the date of closing the accounts, is included in the item of "Outstanding Interest" among the assets.

The claims made upon the Society and admitted during the year under Life Assurance policies were for an amount of £216,897 10s., of which sum £3,000 was re-assured, whilst the claims under policies for Endowments, that had matured, amounted to £106,655 2s. 5d. The sum of £36,696 6s. 8d. was paid for the surrender of policies.

After providing for these amounts—for the annuities falling due within the year—for all necessary office expenses, and other charges on the income of the year, there remained a balance of £176,330 13s. 7d. on the receipts of the year, which augments the fund available for the existing policies of the Society. This fund at the end of the financial year was thus raised to £2,759,912 17s. 10d., and together with £65,014 5s. 9d. reserved for the settlement of claims outstanding, for the payment of annuities not applied for, and for other purposes specified in the Balance-sheet, make up a total of £2,824,927 3s. 7d. in realised assets, as shown in the 2nd Schedule appended to this Report.

The accounts have been duly audited by G. H. Ladbury, Esq., the Public Accountant (a Shareholder of the Society), on the part of the Shareholders; and by the Notary Public, W. W. Venn, Esq. (a Policyholder), on behalf of the Policyholders. The whole of the securities and documents representing the assets of the Society have been verified both by the Directors and by the Auditors.

The amount of funds available for investment during the year has been placed so as to yield an average rate of interest of 4¾ per cent. The dividends and interest received during the year, compared with the amount of funds at the end of the year, show an average rate of interest of £4 4s. 1d. per cent.

The Directors retiring on the present occasion are Messrs. Wm. Trego, A. H. Smee, and R. Crawley, who, being eligible and willing to serve again, are recommended by the Board to constitute the list for re-election.

Mr. Ladbury and Mr. Venn retire as Auditors, but being elegible they are candidates for election, the former on behalf of the Shareholders, and the latter on behalf of the Policyholders.

By order of the Board,
Nov. 18, 1880. F. ALLAN CURTIS, Actuary and Secretary.

THERE is some reason to believe that the present system with regard to the establishment and remuneration of General Officers will shortly undergo revision. That it is capable of improvement we are quite ready to admit, but we trust that Mr. Childers will not be induced, by a desire to conciliate doctrinaires like Mr. Trevelyan, to be guilty of even the appearance of injustice. Above all, it would be subject for regret were honorary colonelcies to be abolished. Mr. Trevelyan complains that we have far more Generals on the Active List than are needed. That assertion is undoubtedly true. Among those theoretically available for employment, there are many who do not wish for it, and more who are unfit for it, either from physical disability or want of capacity. Again, there are very few appointments in the ranks of General and Lieutenant-General. Nevertheless, out of consideration for the feelings of officers, and from a desire to aid the flow of promotion, a long list of active General Officers exists. We admit that it is not pleasant for a General officer to be placed on the Retired List. Even though he does not expect, perhaps does not wish, for an appointment, it costs him a pang to find himself definitely and formally placed on the shelf. Still, no man has a right to any promotion, and a step towards clearing the Active List of those who only nominally belong to it, has already been taken, by compulsorily retiring every General on attaining the age of seventy. Again, if the flow of promotion is to depend upon the number of colonels promoted to the rank of major-general, it will be very slow. The question of vested interest is one more difficult to deal with. Every officer now serving accepted his commission—and in many cases paid large sums of money—on the distinct, though tacit, understanding that if he reached the top of the Colonels' List, he would, on a vacancy occurring, become a major-general on the Active List. There is also an understanding that eventually he would, if he had performed an average amount of fairly good service in certain positions, whether in peace or war, obtain, sooner or later, the colonelcy of a regiment. To abolish the present system would, therefore, be to break faith with many thousands of officers. This is a weighty objection, but there is a valid answer to it. The old regulations regarding promotion, and those prospective advantages which compensated to a certain extent officers for smallness of pay, have been already greatly modified. The modifications which have been introduced have been justified, on the ground that they were needed for increasing the efficiency of the Army. Whether sufficient attempts were made to provide compensation for those whose vested interests had been sacrificed, need not here be discussed. It is sufficient to say that—setting the question of compensation aside—any change of system which is demanded in the interests of the public service is perfectly legitimate. This is an axiom which can scarcely be controverted, and once it is admitted, all objections to further military changes fall to the ground. At the same time, it is desirable to introduce such changes with as much consideration for vested interests as possible. With respect to a change in the regulations by which the Generals' List is fed and paid, we see no insuperable difficulties to an alteration in the existing system without producing extensive discontent. The following scheme is the one to which Mr. Childers' plan will, at all events, approximate, and it is one which could be carried out at once. Let us deal, first of all, with honorary colonelcies. These are undoubtedly sinecures, and as such are abhorrent to the pure mind of the zealous but ignorant Mr. Trevelyan. After all, however, if properly viewed, they are but pensions, given as a reward for long, good, and faithful service. They certainly are not excessive in amount, and if they were abolished, it would be necessary either to give them in another form, or to raise the pay of General Officers who are not colonels of regiments. Mr. Trevelyan's argument is that if honorary colonelcies are to be regarded as sinecures, they stand self-condemned; whereas, if they are to be viewed as pensions, they should only be awarded on retirement. As we have said, they are certainly open to the charge of being sinecures, but is it indispensable that they should be such? Even as it is, many colonels devote much time and thought to the welfare of their regiments, and the latter benefit in a hundred ways by the connection. For instance, in any question of dress, special privileges, asking some favour, righting some wrong, who so fit to act as the semi-official intermediary with the Horse Guards as the honorary colonel? We should like to see the functions of the latter extended, and believe it would be a good thing if no candidate for a commission were allowed to present himself for examination unprovided with a certificate of moral and social fitness from the honorary colonel. He might also with advantage be allowed to inspect his regiment periodically, and to give his opinion as regarded promotion. Assuming, however, that the appointment is a sinecure, it is one which enables the Authorities to reward in a manner most acceptable to the feelings of all concerned, General Officers who desire some recompense for a lifetime of ill-paid devotion to the military service of the country. How much value is attached to the connection with particular regiments, is shown by the fact that a General is always anxious to be appointed or transferred to a regiment in which he has served. We would not, therefore, abolish the appointment, but we would reduce the emolument to a nominal sum, say, £100 or £150 a year, which would enable the colonel to defray the cost of uniform and subscriptions. It would, however, be only just that Generals should be compensated for the practical abolition of regimental colonelcies. We are glad, therefore, to learn that the Government propose to revise the pay of all ranks on the Generals' list, and to give a General £850, a Lieutenant-General £750, and a Major-General £650. If, however, some slight remuneration be not attached to the appointment of Colonel of a regiment, those officers who are at the top of the list of candidates for the latter will be seriously wronged. We trust that this fact will be brought prominently to the notice of Parliament when Mr. Childers' scheme comes under discussion, for it is only right that whenever a change of system takes place the State should pay for the luxury of the change. To make individuals suffer would be seriously to add to the discontent already felt in the Army at the constant alterations affecting their pockets to which during the last ten years they have been subjected.

THE Admiralty received the following telegram, dated Adelaide, on Tuesday, forwarded by Commodore Wilson:—"Sandfly arrived at Sydney yesterday. Reports Lieutenant Bower, and Venton, Carn, O'Neil, Paterson, Buckle, seamen, murdered while detached two days surveying east coast Florida, Solomon Islands. Sub-Lieutenant Bradford landed, recovered bodies, destroyed village. One seaman killed, one wounded. No quarrel or cause given. Boat's crew divided, some bathing. One saved by swimming; rescued five days after. Will despatch Emerald." The slaughter of Lieutenant J. St. C. Bower, R.N., and six of the crew of the Sandfly, is but a repetition of similar massacres which have occurred from the days of Captain Cook at Owhyhee to that which has now taken place at the Solomon Islands. These islands, which lie just below the Equator, and to the eastward of New Guinea, are inhabited by a fine race of semi-savages, who, it appears, possess the usual subtlety of the savage, taking the opportunity for attack when their intended victims are in fancied security. In this case so little idea of assault seems to have existed, that the small crew were scattered, and some even bathing when the savages came upon them. It is to be hoped, however, that these repeated mishaps will be a caution to our Naval Service when on duty among savages or those only partly civilised, not to be thrown off their guard by appearances of friendship, but always to have a certain number of those who land armed and kept on the alert. But while we have to deplore this melancholy disaster, none can have failed to learn with satisfaction the manner in which the second-in-command, Sub-Lieutenant Edward Bradford, avenged the death of his commanding officer, and rescued from dishonourable treatment the bodies of his murdered shipmates. His readiness and pluck in gathering together the handful of men left on board the little schooner after the loss sustained, were evidently well supported by his men, and, without waiting for lengthy details of the manner in which this small party behaved, the Admiralty have rightly acknowledged that the action is one which calls for immediate recognition, and this young officer has consequently been specially promoted over the heads of about one hundred who stood senior to him, and not one of whom will begrudge him the step he has won. In alluding to this officer's conduct, Mr. Brassey, speaking at a dinner of the Shipwrights' Company on Thursday, remarked that "he need not remind those he addressed that as the police of the seas, the Navy of England were occasionally called upon to discharge duties of a very onerous and trying character. Within the last few days, for instance, a melancholy disaster had occurred on the coast of one of the Pacific islands, when the commander of one of our schooners and some of his men were murdered by savages. That melancholy disaster afforded an opportunity to a very young officer to distinguish himself, and he did so in a manner highly creditable to her Majesty's Navy. The officer he referred to was Sub-Lieutenant Bradford, who was the only man left in charge of the vessel, and who might, without any discredit, have retreated from the shocking scene. Instead of doing so, Sub-Lieutenant Bradford gallantly landed with a small party of men, encountered a large body of savages, and succeeded in surprising them, and recovering the bodies of the Commander of the Sandfly, and of the seamen who had been slaughtered, so saving them from the disgraceful treatment they would have received at the hands of the savages. He was glad to be in a position to say that no time had been lost in rewarding such an act of gallantry as this, and that the Admiralty had that day promoted the young officer whose name he had mentioned to a commission of lieutenant in her Majesty's Navy. This announcement was received with great cheering by those present, and Lieutenant Bradford is to be congratulated on having acted so promptly and decisively.

At the request of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, the Admiralty has approved of the despatch of the Britomart, tender to the Hector, to Guernsey, where she will remain for about three months, for the purpose of drilling and enrolling men of the Channel Islands in the Royal Naval Reserve.

Accidents to our troopships are rare, and the sister Service has reason to feel quite satisfied with the safe manner in which her Majesty's troop service is conducted. But within the last fortnight there have been two unpleasantnesses, the Himalaya having gone aground at Queenstown, and the Orontes having got far too near the French coast in thick weather. No harm was done in either case, which is a subject for congratulation.

An application made to the Admiralty, that the time served in a Coastguard ship while on the annual cruise might be allowed to count as time in a ship-of-war at sea, has been refused.

The telephone is becoming an established fact in Government offices, and the whole of the departments scattered throughout the large dockyard at Chatham have now been connected by means of this invention.

At a meeting held at Plymouth on Friday, under the presidency of the Mayor, it was decided to erect a group of statues of Drake, Howard, Frobisher, and others, in commemoration of the tercentenary of Sir Francis Drake's return to Plymouth, after circumnavigating the globe.

Rear-Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam, C.B., was at St. Vincent, Cape de Verdes, on November 18, and proposed to leave with the Detached Squadron under his orders for Monte Video on November 20.

We spoke recently of the number of ships on foreign stations which had completed their term of commission, and for which no reliefs had yet been designated. Steps have now been taken to provide substitutes for some of the ships named, and new crews will be sent out to others. The Champion will be commissioned on Tuesday by Captain G. R. Hope, to relieve the Modeste, recommissioned at Hong Kong in May, 1877. The Doterel will also hoist the pendant on Tuesday, under the command of Commander Richard Evans, and will relieve the Penguin, which was commissioned at Devonport in August, 1877. The Arab will shortly be commissioned at Devonport, to relieve the Wild Swan, which was commissioned at Devonport in August, 1877. The Dwarf has been ordered to be transferred from the West Coast of Africa to the South-east coast of America, to relieve the Swallow, which was commissioned at Portsmouth in April, 1877. Directions have also been given for the following ships to be paid off abroad, new crews being sent out to Hong Kong in the Tyne for the Magpie, Foxhound, Fly, and Vigilant; and to Malta in the Orontes for the Fawn and Téméraire. The Torch and Cockatrice are also to be paid off at Malta.

Lieutenant Alfred Carpenter, lately in command of the Sparrowhawk, has been recalled to England, and will proceed to China, to relieve Captain Napier of the command of the Magpie on her recommission.

The re-establishment of a squadron on the West coast of Ireland appears to be deemed advisable by the Government, the Valorous being again detailed for this service, and the Bruiser having been commissioned to accompany her.

Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, C.B., has paid a visit to Devonport Yard to inspect the Swiftsure, appropriated for service as his flagship in the China station, and which is being fitted with a poop, so as to provide sufficient accommodation for the Admiral and suite.

Lieutenant de Hoghton, of the Beagle, has received from the Colonial Office a letter of thanks for his report on the Torres Straits pearl fisheries.

The Committee of the Dreadnought Seamen's Hospital are circulating several letters and articles, which have appeared in the leading papers, for the generous consideration of the Court of Common Council. Mr. Alderman Breffit will move for a grant to the hospital funds at the next meeting of the Court, and should any desire further information upon any point, we are assured that the Committee will gladly supply it.

One year has elapsed since their Lordships abolished the office of Superintendent of Charts, and Commander Hull and the title he had made so well-known disappeared together from the Civil Service of the Navy. But what officialism then killed in the west, private enterprise is now reviving in the east. We are pleased to hear that Commander Hull has placed his long experience at the disposal of the Merchant Service, and that the managers of several well-known steamship companies have availed themselves of his offer to examine and correct the Admiralty charts in use on board their vessels. Commander Hull is, therefore, once more de facto, if not de jure, Superintendent of Charts, the public having the advantage of his services in the Mercantile Marine, instead of in the Royal Navy.

The Report of the Atalanta inquiry will be in the hands of the Admiralty very shortly. Admiral Ryder, Vice-Admiral Randolph, C.B., Staff Captain Batt, and Messrs. Rothery and Waymouth, met this week to consider the Report, before its submission to their Lordships.

We hear that a court-martial on the grounding of the Iron Duke has been ordered to be held. We are glad that this is so, for there are circumstances connected with this costly accident that certainly call for searching investigation, and it would have been looked upon as unfair to order courts-martial upon the commanders of smaller ships for slight groundings, and to excuse the flagship.

According to present arrangements, Mr. Goschen will leave Constantinople on Wednesday next, on six weeks' leave of absence. The Government was anxious that he should not quit his post for the present; but urgent private affairs are bringing him home. It is probable that when Mr. Goschen returns to Constantinople, he will be definitely appointed British Ambassador to Turkey.

It is doubtless to the anxiety of friends to meet those who have been long away from home, that disquieting rumours as to the safety of the Raleigh are to be attributed. A long time ago, before she was due in the Channel, a steamer was sent out to search for a vessel in distress, which was wrongly reported to be the Raleigh. And now there have been more fears because she had not arrived at the earliest moment she might have been expected. She left St. Vincent, Cape de Verdes, on November 9, and has been making the best of her way home under sail. That the few days' delay in her arrival at Plymouth was not a cause for anxiety, is best proved by her safe arrival yesterday afternoon.

The following sad intelligence has been received at the Admiralty by telegraph from the Vice-Admiral commanding the Channel Squadron:—"Regret to report the death of Lieutenant W. P. Heyland, of H.M.S. Minotaur, drowned whilst gallantly assisting to save the life of a man who fell overboard. Man saved." The Service will fully enter into the feeling of deep regret felt in the ships of the Channel Squadron at the loss of so promising and gallant an officer as Lieutenant Heyland. How it was that he, so expert a swimmer, and one who had already saved lives at sea, should have been lost while the man he went to save was rescued, has yet to be explained. He already wore the bronze and the silver medallion of the Royal Humane Society, the first being won in 1869, when he was a midshipman, on board the Barracouta, off Halifax. An ordinary seaman fell overboard, when a strong ebb tide was running, and Mr. Heyland saved him. The silver medal was obtained for jumping overboard from the Achilles, on July 15, 1877, and saving the life of John J. Burke, boy, 1st class. There was a heavy sea running at the time, and the Achilles was going ten knots.

The following officers' deaths have been reported to the Admiralty since October 20, 1880:—Henry B. C. Wynward, lieutenant; George Park, engineer; Edwin Efford, carpenter. The following officers' names have been removed from the Active List since October 20, 1880:—Sub-Lieutenant James Grey Duberley (resigned); Acting Sub-Lieutenant Charles McCrea (discharged as physically unfit), Midshipman Edwin C. Greenaway (resigned to avoid court-martial), Surgeon William C. Williamson (resigned), Temporary Service Engineer Allen J. Harms (resigned). The following Warrant officers have been pensioned:—Gunner William E. Douthwaite, Chief Boatswains William Chambers and James Nicholls, Boatswains Thomas C. Lakeman and Thomas Slocomb.

The following is a list of the successful candidates for Naval cadetships (in order of merit) at the recent examination:—S. R. Fremantle, M. C. Seymour, A. C. Leverson, B. F. H. Bartlett, C. P. Buckle, A. H. W. Walsh, P. H. Colomb, C. J. Fiennes, S. G. Douglas and W. H. D'Oyley (equal), G. E. S. Petch, T. H. Foster, D. E. R. Brownrigg, N. B. Pelly, E. V. Underhill, H. Christian, W. B. Cowper Coles, H. Blackett, G. E. Cave, J. D'Arcy, G. C. H. Wintle, C. F. Corbett, and F. O. C. Osborne.

Vice-Admiral Hood, C.B., with the Channel Squadron—consisting of the Minotaur, Agincourt, Achilles, and Northumberland—arrived at Vigo on Wednesday from Queenstown.

A change has taken place in the personnel of the Admiralty, Mr. George J. Shaw Lefevre, M.P., having accepted the office of First Commissioner of Works, in the place of the Right Hon. W. P. Adam. He will be succeeded as Secretary to the Admiralty by Mr. G. O. Trevelyan, M.P.

The Charybdis, which is being fitted at Devonport for the Canadian Government, will have a crew of 140 Naval Reserve men, under the command of Captain Peter Scott, R.N., who holds an office in connection with the Mercantile Marine of Canada, and who will navigate the ship across the Atlantic.

Captain Norcock's company of the Royal Marine Battalion, now stationed at Camden Fort, at the western entrance to Cork Harbour, is under orders to proceed to Killarney; and strong detachments are being sent over from Portsmouth and Plymouth to relieve an equal strength of men, who will return to England in the troopship Assistance, as their turn will shortly come for embarkation.

The announcement of the death of Sir J. Milton, C.B., late Accountant-General of the Army, which occurred on Monday last, will be read with much regret throughout the Service, Sir John Milton having been widely known and greatly respected. He was for many years a prominent official at the War Office, where he was ever ready to perform any friendly act for those who sought his assistance. He retired about two years ago, after 38 years' service, on a pension of £1,200; but he has not lived long to enjoy the ease which he had so fairly earned, after a life of great activity. He was only sixty years of age.

Major-General Sir Frederick Roberts speaks in high terms of the services performed by Veterinary-Surgeon J. A. Woods, who has held veterinary charge of the 9th Lancers throughout the campaign in Afghanistan, and who is referred to by a Staff officer of the Cabul-Candahar Field Force as having "shown a devotion to duty which has reflected credit not only on himself, but upon the whole department of which he is a member, he having been always at his post, always getatable, and ever ready to do a friendly act for anybody." As usual, however, the Veterinary Department has been entirely overlooked in despatches, although every other branch of the Service has been recognised. Veterinary-Surgeon C. Clayton, Royal Artillery, has also been brought strongly to the notice of the head of his Department by the Principal Veterinary-Surgeon in India, on account of the zeal and ability he has displayed. These two officers will, no doubt, be recommended for a step of rank; but there is no disguising the fact that the members of the department feel most keenly the slight that has again been thrust upon them, in having been omitted from all mention in General Roberts's despatches. The Staff officer before alluded to, one who has held a high position in the Adjutant-General's Department, says, in a private letter:—"I have had every opportunity of judging of the merits of the veterinary surgeons attached to the Field Force, and I am glad to be able to speak in high terms of all those who have come under my observation. They have all used their utmost endeavours to carry out their important duties to the satisfaction of the Generals under whom they have served, and I hope, for once, they will receive the credit which is undoubtedly due to them. Sir Frederick Roberts will certainly not allow them to go unrewarded, if he can help it; but the Government of India has yet to appreciate their worth, which is recognised by every cavalry officer who has ever been on service. You are at liberty to make any use you like of this letter. I say unhesitatingly that the veterinary officers are a very valuable and hard-working body of officers, and deserve better treatment than they have hitherto received; their only fault is that they have few friends. I am pleased to see that you have lately espoused their cause; and I, for one, fully endorse all you have written in their favour, for those of them who have served in this campaign have won the esteem and kindly regard of all those with whom they have come in contact." This expression of opinion, coming, as it does, from a disinterested critic, cannot fail to be appreciated by the officers of the Veterinary Department generally.

There is a feeling in the Brigade of Guards that the officers who represented the three regiments in Zululand were slightingly treated, in not having had a single reward reserved for them when the honours were distributed at the close of the campaign, notwithstanding that the Brigade sent out a strong detachment of special-service men, several of whom did good work before the enemy. It will be some consolation to Guardsmen to find that the only officer who was present with General Roberts in Afghanistan, Captain R. Pole-Carew, has been mentioned in despatches; and satisfaction will be expressed, we believe, when the Afghan gazette appears, for Captain Pole-Carew's claims have been brought to the notice of the Authorities, and it is probable that he will receive a brevet majority.

A fitting token of respect was paid to the memory of the late Brigadier-General Brooke, on the occasion of the trans-shipment of the gallant soldier's remains from the Indian Government steamer Dalhousie, which brought them from Kurrachee, to H.M.S. Serapis, which sailed with them on the 13th ult. for England. General Brooke was one of the most popular as well as one of the best officers of the Army, and there was a large gathering to do honour to his memory. A procession of boats was formed between the Dalhousie and the Serapis, and minute-guns were fired, the first being discharged on the remains leaving the former steamer. The ceremony was a very solemn and impressive one.

The Army.

1st Life Guards. Col. Keith Fraser and the officers gave a ball at the Cavalry Barracks, Windsor, on Tuesday night. Most of the principal residents of the neighbourhood were present.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). Capt. the Hon. W. C. Wentworth-Fitzwilliam, extra A.D.C., has been appointed aide-de-camp on the personal staff of Lord Ripon, Viceroy of India, in the place of Lieut. Muir, who becomes extra A.D.C. 2nd Lieut. Short, who has been promoted to a commission from corporal-major, succeeds Capt. M'Alpine as adjt.

2nd Dragoon Guards. Capt. Lee obtains the majority, vice Major Battine, retired, Lieut. Lambert becoming capt. Lieut. Clerk is named for the second troop, vacant by the retirement of Capt. Ottley.

7th Dragoon Guards. Capt. Moses has sent in his papers to retire.

6th Dragoons. Capt. M'Kean is en route to England from India in H.M.S. Serapis, due at Portsmouth on Friday next, on vacating his appointment as A.D.C. to Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. F. Maude, V.C., K.C.B.

14th Hussars. Lieut. Ricardo is en route to England from India in H.M.S. Jumna, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

15th Hussars. The Irish Times hears that the regiment will return from India in two divisions, the first coming in the Euphrates, leaving Bombay on Jan. 11, and the second in the Crocodile, on Jan. 16.

16th Lancers. The Standard says :—"It is the wish of the Authorities that, for the sake of mutual instruction, there shall always be a cavalry regiment, or part of one, included with the Royal Artillery and other corps in the Woolwich command, but the stabling is hardly more than requisite for the Artillery horses, and the consequence is that the horses of the 16th Lancers have now to be scattered about the camp and barracks wherever they can find shelter, to the great sacrifice of labour and convenience, and the detriment of good order and discipline. A suitable cavalry barracks at Woolwich has been long desired, and its provision would supply a great need." Capt. Aylmer obtains the troop vacant by the retirement of Capt. Blair. The eldest daughter of Sir James Fergusson, Governor of Bombay, was married on the 10th ult., at Mahableshwar, Bombay, to Lieut. Baird, of Adamston and Muirkirk, Ayrshire. Mr. and Mrs. Baird were staying at Government House, Gunnesh Khind, Poona, when the mail left. They leave India shortly for England.

19th Hussars. The squadron, under Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Twentyman, returned to Lough Mask at midnight on Saturday last, after a trying three-weeks' exposure of gales of wind, deluges of rain, hail, and sleet, showers of snow and hard frost. For three weeks officers and men lived in their wet clothes. On Monday the principal veterinary-surgeon inspected the horses, and found not a single sore back, saddle gall, or greasy heel. He said the horses had evidently been well cared for. The Commander of the Forces in Ireland also inspected the squadron, and desired Col. Twentyman to convey to the men his satisfaction at the cheerful and willing way they had conducted themselves under such exceptionable circumstances.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut.-Gen. T. B. F. Marriott, a colonel-commandant, died suddenly at Avonbank, Worcestershire, on the 25th ult. Gen. Marriott entered the Army, Dec. 20, 1832; became 1st lieut., Nov. 21, 1834; capt., March 30, 1844; lieut.-col., Jan. 6, 1855; brevet col., Jan. 6, 1858; col., June 27, 1863; major-gen., March 6, 1868; and lieut.-gen., Oct. 1, 1877. He was appointed col.-commandant Aug. 7, 1879.

Brevet Col. J. H. Peile, 5th Brig., died suddenly of heart-disease, at 8 York Street, Portman Square, on the 27th ult. Col. Peile joined the Army, Dec. 19, 1849; became lieut., Nov. 11, 1851; capt., Feb. 23, 1856; major, July 5, 1872; lieut.-col., Jan. 16, 1875; and brevet col., Jan. 16, 1880. He served in the New Zealand war of 1864-65, in command of a field battery (medal).

Major-Gen. Sir Frederick Roberts was entertained at a banquet by the members of the United Service Club on Friday last, the 26th ult. There was a large and brilliant assembly, including the Prince of Wales, Duke of Connaught, and Prince Christian. The Duke of Cambridge presided. Responding for "The Royal Family," the Prince of Wales alluded to the great interest her Majesty and himself had taken in the progress of events in Afghanistan, and spoke of their sorrow at the sacrifice of life during the war. His Royal Highness concluded by paying high tribute to the military skill and bravery of Gen. Roberts in Afghanistan. The company separated shortly before 11 o'clock. Gen. Roberts proceeded to Sandringham on Saturday on a visit to the Prince and Princess of Wales. The freedom of the Merchant Taylors' Company will be presented to the General on the 14th inst. Sir F. Roberts met, as might have been expected, a hearty reception from his comrades of the Royal Artillery at Woolwich on Wednesday. He was recognised and heartily cheered at a concert in the Garrison Theatre in the afternoon, and at night was the guest of the Royal regiment to whose renown his gallant exploits have given fresh lustre. A splendid banquet was spread in the mess-room, which has been the scene of so many memorable gatherings, and so greatly esteemed was the privilege of being present that only officers of the regiment on full pay could be admitted. The Commandant of the Woolwich District, Lieut.-Gen. Turner, C.B., presided, and amongst the many distinguished officers present were Gens. Sir John Adye, Radcliffe, Sir F. Campbell, Sir E. Warde, Sir D. Wood, Sir J. Brind, Gosling, Gardiner, Alexander, Thuillier, Sladen, Gordon, and Browne. The special guest was accompanied by the following officers recently in Afghanistan :—Gen. Hills, Col. Chapman, Major Prettyman, Capts. Pipon, Eustace, and Downing. Gen. Turner, in proposing the toast of the evening, said he had been authorised to express the regret of the Duke of Cambridge, colonel-in-chief of the Royal Artillery, that his engagements at Sandringham prevented his taking the chair and joining in the welcome offered to their gallant and distinguished comrade, Gen. Sir Frederick Roberts, who, in coming among them, had, like a brave soldier, not fergotten those who served with him so well on the field, some of whom were with him now. The welcome of to-night was attended by the hope that he might long continue to render services so valuable, and that if he returned to the country in which he had gained so much honour, he would add yet more glory to the regiment whose motto is "Ubique." Gen. Roberts, who was for some time silenced by applause, said it was with hearty pride that he found himself the honoured guest at the head-quarters of the regiment in which he began his soldier's career 29 years ago. In that old mess-house, so long associated with the history of the regiment, surrounded by so many of his brother-officers, he felt at home, and he might say a few words, without reserve, respecting their especial branch of the Service. The campaign in Afghanistan was remarkable for the fact that he, an Artilleryman, held a high and responsible Army command, but he was glad to say that he was not the only Artillery officer in that position. He congratulated the regiment on so many of its representatives being employed on duties beyond the regiment, and of the verdict of the Army and the country in favour of their conduct. He hoped an opportunity would be found in the future for their successors to aspire to qualify themselves for high and responsible commands. In enumerating the officers of the corps who had distinguished themselves, he referred to Sir Michael Biddulph as one of the first to reach Candahar and the Helmund, and Major-Gen. Hills, who, after performing delicate and troublesome duties as Governor of Cabul, was selected to command a division in Afghanistan. Col. Arbuthnot, whose appointment as Deputy-Adjutant-General of the Royal Artillery, had afforded much satisfaction, held an onerous and difficult position on the line of communication, and proved an able and efficient commander. Lieut.-Col. Chapman was senior officer of the Army Staff under Sir Donald Stewart during the march from Candahar to Cabul, and accompanied him (Gen. Roberts) in the same capacity from Cabul to Candahar, and in Major Prettyman, as aide-de-camp, he had a valued friend, upon whose tact and judgment he could always rely. Amongst those who had achieved honour, more especially in connection with the regiment, he enumerated Major-Gen. Alexander Lindsay, Col. Johnson, Col. William Stirling, Capt. Pipon, Lieut.-Col. Sydney Parry, Major Sir John Campbell, Capt. Slade, and others, with a special tribute to the merits of each; and in speaking of those whom they mourned as dead, he said that Major Blackwood, and the whole of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of his battery, in the hour of defeat and under the most trying circumstances, bravely upheld the credit of the regiment. He testified not only to the bravery, but to the irreproachable behaviour of all ranks throughout the campaign. Amongst those they mourned were Capt. Kelso and Lieut. Maclaine, so cruelly cut off in his promising career; Capt. Shafto, and he added Qrmr.-Serjt. Mansfield, of the Horse Artillery, who performed the duty of provost of Cabul, and was one of the steady, reliable non-commissioned officers who were the pride of the Army. Altogether, the regiment had well maintained the character which the gunners had earned in years past while fighting for their Sovereign and their country. He had spoken too long, for a soldier's speech should be short, and he would conclude by expressing his regard for the regiment, and in thanking Gen. Turner and his brother officers for the gratifying welcome they had given him to Woolwich.

The following officers arrived home from India on Saturday last in H.M.S. Euphrates, viz. :—Lieut.-Col. S. Parry, A Brig. R.H.A.; Major J. Haughton, 9th Brig.; Capts. W. B. Hoggan, 11th Brig.; F. J. W. Eustace, 7th Brig.; and H. Pipon, A Brig.; and Lieuts. F. M. Goold-Adams, B Brig. R.H.A.; R. Oakes, C Brig. R.H.A.; W. A. Plant, B Brig. R.H.A.; J. D. Kirwan, B Brig. R.H.A.; and S. K. Mackenzie, A Brig. R.H.A.; and Vet.-Surg. W. B. Spooner.

It is semi-officially announced by the daily papers that the Right Hon. W. P. Adam, the new Governor of Madras, has appointed as his private secretary Major G. Bertie B. Hobart, R.A., at present military secretary to the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, Governor of Madras.

Major B. de B. Tupper, 11th Brig., has embarked for Gibraltar on the expiration of his leave of absence.

It is stated by the St. James's Gazette that the Secretary of State for the Colonies has decided to allow Major-Gen. Sir Robert Biddulph, K.C.M.G., C.B., to retain the High Commissionership of Cyprus, on the transfer of that island to the Colonial Office administration; but it is probable that a change may take place in its government before long, when Sir Robert Biddulph will be otherwise provided for, his place being taken by a financier.

We learn from Singapore that Major G. G. Hannen, 7th Brig., commanding the Royal Artillery at that station, has been seriously ill, in consequence of which orders had been issued for the temporary suspension of firing of the time-gun from Fort Canning.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Lefroy, K.C.M.G., C.B., the Acting-Governor of Tasmania, arrived at Hobart Town at the end of October, and has been cordially received.

The serjeants who are going out with the drafts to India this month were given a farewell dinner by their comrades of the same rank at the mess-room of the 1st Brig. on Wednesday evening.

Brevet Col. W. French, 2nd Brigade, commanding the artillery of the 1st Division, Candahar Field Force, has been appointed to the command of the Sind district.

Lieut.-Col W. Denis-de Vitré, B Brigade, of the Meerut Division, has been selected for the command of the artillery in Southern Afghanistan.

The following officers are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next, viz. :—Capt. W. C. W. Arbuthnot, 9th Brig., and Lieuts. H. N. Bunbury and N. Maxwell, 2nd Brig. The following are passengers in the Serapis, due at Portsmouth on Friday next, viz. :—Major T. B. Roberts, 8th Brig.; Capts. H Sheil, C Brig. R.H.A.; J. P. Freeth, 1st Brig.; P. K. L. Beaver, 9th Brig.; and W. T. G. Denny, 8th Brig.; Lieuts. C. E. Jervois, 9th Brig.; E. Nash, 8th Brig.; E. Vaughan-Hughes, A Brig. R.H.A.; H. M. Sanbach, J. W. M. Newton, and A. P. Penton.

Major W. Smith, having completed his period of Staff service, has handed over his duties as garrison instructor in India to Capt. G. T. Morris, Bengal S.C.

Lieut. A. H. Gordon, 9th Brig., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

We regret to learn that Capt. W. O. C. Shippard, 7th Brig., who was thrown from his horse at Woolwich last week, still lies in a very precarious state, and very little hope is entertained of his recovery.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Major A. K. Haslett died at Gibraltar on the 19th ult. of enteric fever. Major Haslett joined the Army, Dec. 21, 1858; became capt., Aug. 3, 1872; and major, Oct. 29, 1879. He was for some time adjt. of the Royal Engineer Train at Aldershot, and afterwards adjt. of the corps at Chatham.

The London Gazette announces the following appointment :—Lieut.-Col. Beresford Lovett, C.S.I., R.E., to be British Consul at Astrabad, for provinces south of Caspian Sea and north-east of Persia.

Brevet Lieut.-Col. J. Browne, C.S.I. (late Bengal), late political officer in Southern Afghanistan, will shortly give a lecture on "The Retention of Candahar and the Defence of the North-West Frontier," at a meeting to be convened by the East India Association.

Grenadier Guards. The 2nd Batn. is under orders to proceed to London on Monday next, from Shorncliffe, to take the place of the 1st Batn. Coldstream Guards.

Coldstream Guards. Orders for the despatch of the 1st Batn. to Ireland were issued on Saturday last. The batn. will leave London on Monday evening next, proceeding viâ Holyhead. On arrival in Dublin, it will be quartered in Richmond Barracks. Col. Wigram assumes command of the 2nd Batn., on promotion. Lieut.-Col. Manningham-Buller, now with the 2nd Batn., becomes a mounted officer with the 1st Batn., Lieut.-Col. the Hon. E. T. Boscawen joining the 2nd Batn.

Scots Guards. Capt. Viscount Coke becomes captain and lieutenant-colonel by the retirement of Lieut.-Col. Drummond-Moray.

1st, or Royal Scots. H.M.S. Malabar, with the 2nd Batn. on board, was due at Queenstown yesterday from India.

2nd Queen's. Capt. Collis, 1st Batn., and Lieut. Elverson, 2nd Batn., have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates. Capt. Lawson, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Serapis, due at Portsmouth on Friday next.

3rd Buffs. Capt. Moody is transferred from the 2nd to the 1st Batn., on promotion; Lieuts. Tylden-Pattenson and Bunbury both remain with the 2nd Batn.

5th Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. is due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next in H.M.S. Jumna, from India. The following officers are on passage home with head-quarters in the Jumna, viz. :—Col. Rowland; Brevet Lieut.-Cols. Harkness and Oldfield; Brevet Majors Creagh, Newbolt, and Taylor; Capts. Williams, Ormond, Beamish, Dyke, and Kilgour (2nd Batn.); Lieuts. Boxwell (adjt.), Chancellor, Lambart. Buchanan, Pennington, Kays, Malet, Frend, and Harding; 2nd Lieuts. Whitaker, Cowley, Southey, Neville, Sitwell, and Henry; and Qrmr. Drake.

6th Regiment. The 1st Batn. is due at Portmouth on Friday next in H.M.S. Serapis, from Aden. Capt. Corse-Scott remains with the 1st Batn., on promotion. Lieut. Cockburn is posted to the 2nd Batn., and Lieut. Hay to the 1st Batn. The following officers are en route to England from Aden with the battalion in the Serapis, viz. :—Lieut.-Col. Colthurst; Majors Hole and Cockburn; Capts. Fitz-Gerald, Collis, Meredith, O'Beirne, and Corse-Scott; Lieuts. Harward, Lumsden, Jones (adjt.), Clayton, and Mansel; 2nd Lieuts. Landon, Twigg, and Chambers; and Qrmr. Beedle. The following embarked on board the Serapis at Bombay, viz. :—Brevet Major Morton and Lieuts. Rathbone and Etheridge. Capt. Brady, 2nd Batn., is a passenger to England in H.M.S. Jumna, which left Bombay on the 8th ult.

7th Fusiliers. Capts. Groube and Manning and Lieut. Thunder, 2nd Batn., have arrived home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

9th Regiment. Lieut. Govan, 1st Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

11th Regiment. The Standard correspondent at Candahar reports that of the 720 men of the 2nd Batn. who crossed the frontier in July, only 305 are now fit for duty. This is the result of the hardships of their march to the Bolan. Capt. Skill is posted to the 1st Batn., on vacating his appointment as adjt. of the 1st Devon Militia. Lieut. Noon, 2nd Batn., is doing duty as transport officer in Southern Afghanistan. Qrmr. Evans, 2nd Batn., arrived home from India on Saturday last in H.M.S. Euphrates.

12th Regiment. The weather having moderated, H.M.S. Assistance, which had been lying with the 2nd Batn., on board alongside Portsmouth Dockyard from the previous Wednesday, proceeded to Jersey on Saturday afternoon, where the regiment has taken over quarters in relief of the 32nd. Capt. Williams, 1st Batn., is en route to England from India in H.M.S. Jumna, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

13th Light Infantry. Brevet Major Cox becomes major, Lieut. Hughes, capt., and 2nd Lieut. Stisted, lieut., in succession to Major Gillett, retired.

14th Regiment. Capt. Ogden, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Serapis, due at Portsmouth on Friday next. Qrmr. Bayley is a passenger in the Jumna, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next. Lieut. Heigham remains with the 1st Batn., on promotion.

15th Regiment. The 1st Batn. has proceeded from Tipperary to Londonderry and Enniskillen, on relief by the 48th Regiment, which has arrived in Ireland from India. Lieut. Wood, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

16th Regiment. Capt. Riddell, 2nd Batn., arrived home from India on Saturday last, in H.M.S. Euphrates. Capt. Barry remained with the 1st Batn. on promotion. Capt. Becher, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

17th Regiment. Capt. Clarke is transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn., on promotion. Capt. Vulliamy, 1st Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

21st Fusiliers. We are glad to learn from Pretoria that Lieut. Lindsell, 2nd Batn., about whose safety there was some anxiety, has returned to head-quarters. Our readers may remember that this officer, accompanied by a small party of men, had gone out to try and secure deserters, and nothing having been heard of them for some time, it was feared they had lost their lives. 2nd Lieut. Thorneycroft was recovering from the fever by which he had been attacked. Lieut. Tuckey, 1st Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.

22nd Regiment. Lieut. Gardner, 2nd Batn., arrived home from India on Saturday last in H.M.S. Euphrates.

23rd Fusiliers. Capt. Williamson has been posted to the 1st Batn., on rejoining from the adjutancy of the Royal Denbigh and Merioneth Militia. Capt. Mayhew, 1st Batn., has been granted leave from India to England from Nov. 6 to May 6 next, on urgent private affairs.

24th Regiment. The Colchester correspondent of the Morning Post writes:—"The 1st Batn. 24th Regt., which suffered so severely in the recent Zulu campaign, arrived at Colchester on Saturday afternoon by special train from Gosport. The strength of the regiment is 440 rank and file, including 16 officers, the commandant being Col. Wilsone Black, C.B. The regiment was met at the station by the bands of the 2nd Queen's and the 50th Regt., and a large concourse of people assembled at different points along the route to witness its arrival. On entering the camp, it was received with enthusiastic cheering by the other regiments." Lieut. Williams remains with the 1st Batn., on promotion.

25th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. left Devonport for Ireland on Saturday. The men, who numbered about 425 rank and file, turned out on parade about 8 o'clock, and, headed by the bands of the different regiments in garrison, proceeded to the dockyard by way of Fore Street. They embarked on board the Himalaya, which was lying alongside the dockyard, at 8.30, and at noon they were en route for Queenstown. A local paper says:—"The batn. has been stationed at Devonport Garrison for about three years. Originally its head-quarters were at the Plymouth Citadel, but were afterwards transferred to the Raglan Barracks, Devonport, where the batn. has been located for the past two years. The conduct of the regiment upon its first coming into the neighbourhood was not by any means satisfactory, owing to the large number of young soldiers in its ranks; but recently the behaviour of the men has been such as to reflect credit upon them, and the civil authorities have had but little trouble. On their leaving the barracks on Saturday morning, the 13th Regiment cheered them, and a large crowd accompanied them to the dockyard gates, and bade them a hearty farewell." Lieut. Hutchinson, 2nd Batn., arrived home from India on Saturday last in H.M.S. Euphrates. Capt. Dixon and Lieut. Mayne, 1st Batn., are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next. Lieut. Retallick, 1st Batn., a probationer for the Indian S.C., has leave to Calcutta to May 3 next, to study the native languages.

27th Inniskillings. A military scandal has (says the Hong Kong correspondent of the Western Daily Mercury) been fastened upon the 27th Regiment by the burglarious proclivities of a corporal and three privates who, while on sentry, conspired to rob the Treasury. The door of the outer office was first broken open, and the large granite flags with which the office was paved were then removed. Several feet of earth and a brick arch were then broken through to reach the safe-room. The safe, however, defied their skill, and, foiled in their object, they retraced their steps, replacing the earth and granite flagging in so irregular a manner that the whole affair was discovered immediately the office was opened on the following morning. The prisoners are under arrest for trial by court-martial. The matter has created some stir, as, irrespective of the disgrace brought upon the regiment, the safe contained documents and cash belonging to the colony, and valued at half-a-million sterling.

28th Regiment moved on Tuesday from Fermoy to Birr. Capt. Dempster is a candidate for the Pay Department, and has proceeded to Castlebar and taken over the duties of paymaster of the 76th Regt., on probation.

29th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Haughton becomes lieutenant, in consequence of the promotion of Lieut. Cubitt to a company in the 105th. 2nd Lieut. Ffrench, a candidate for the Indian S.C., has leave to Bombay until April 14 next, to study the native languages.

32nd Light Infantry. This regiment, comprising 13 officers, 424 men, 48 soldiers' wives, 95 soldiers' children, and 5 horses, has arrived at Aldershot from Jersey, and is quartered in L, P, Q, and S Lines, South Camp, and attached to the 1st or Major-Gen. Spurgin's Brigade. During the sojourn of the regiment at Jersey it has rendered itself exceedingly popular by its general good behaviour, and by the fact that the splendid band made a practice of giving instrumental and vocal concerts under the superintendence of their bandmaster, Mr. Gould, all of which have been highly eulogised by the local press. The farewell concert was given in the Theatre Royal on the 15th ult., when the house was crowded, amongst those who patronised it being Colonel Bland, R.E., Acting Governor, and Admiral Seymour, C.B. The entertainment comprised the "British Army Quadrille," musical selections from the best composers, solos (vocal and instrumental), &c. The British Press and Jersey Times, speaking of the concert, says:—"The 'British Army Quadrille' was of course the pièce de résistance, and the triumphant success it obtained was simply giving to Mr. Gould his due for the bold stroke he made in performing it with one band."

35th Regiment. Brevet Major Grant has succeeded Brevet Major Browne as adjt. of the Royal Sussex Militia. Lieut. Trevor is a candidate for appointment to the Indian S.C.

40th Regiment. Capt. Turnbull arrived home from India on Saturday in H.M.S. Euphrates.

41st Regiment. Lieut. and Adjt. Quirk obtains his company by the retirement of Capt. Webb. Capt. and Pymr. Kaye, from the 80th Regt., has been appointed paymaster.

42nd Highlanders. Capt. W. Guthrie, of Guthrie, on the Half-Pay List, late of the regiment, died at Rosaire, Dundee, on the 25th ult. Capt. Guthrie entered the Army, April 22, 1826; became lieut., March 20, 1827; capt., Feb. 24, 1837; and retired upon half-pay, Aug. 13, 1847.

44th Regiment. Major Rennie has been granted an extension of leave to remain in England for six months from Oct. 8, on urgent private affairs.

45th Regiment moved on Monday from its quarters, G, H, and M Lines, South Camp, Aldershot, into the West Infantry Barracks, and has been posted to the 2nd Brigade. The regiment has been quartered in the South Camp since its arrival at the station from Shorncliffe on March 28, 1879. Capt. M'Cleverty has been appointed adjt. of the Nottingham Militia, vice Capt. Hooke, who has reverted to his regiment on the completion of his five years.

48th Regiment. H.M.S. Euphrates arrived at Queenstown on Friday, the 26th ult., with the head-quarters and service companies on board, which were disembarked and sent by rail to Tipperary, in relief of the 1st Batn. 15th, ordered to Londonderry and Enniskillen. The strength of the regiment was 19 officers, 687 men, 45 women, and 95 children. The names of the officers who took passage in the Euphrates have already been published by us. Major Feneran is on passage home from India, in H.M.S. Serapis, due at Portsmouth on Friday next.

Major Bridgford, R.M.A., the representative of the firm of Sir William Armstrong and Co., has arrived at Shanghai, his mission being to give any information the Chinese may require in fixing and working the Armstrong guns which have lately been purchased by the authorities at Peking. He visited Canton on his way, and, the North China Herald understands, he goes to the Kiangnan Arsenal, at the invitation of the Mandarins. After a short stay at Shanghai, it is said that he proceeds to Tientsin and Peking.

51st Light Infantry. Major Burnaby has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on private affairs. Capt. Nugent arrived home from India on Saturday last, in H.M.S. Euphrates.

55th Regiment. Capt. Braddon passed through Sukkur on the 6th ult., en route to Candahar, with Major-Gen. Hume, C.B.

58th Regiment. Lieut. Jopp and Qrmr. Wallace have left England for the Cape, in the steamer Anglian, en route to join head-quarters in the Transvaal.

59th Regiment. As announced by us last week, H.M.S. Orontes arrived at Portsmouth on the 25th ult. from Bombay, which place she left on Oct. 31, bringing home the 59th, the first of the troops from Afghanistan. In addition to officers, 41 serjeants, 15 trumpeters and drummers, 665 rank and file, 40 women, and 101 children arrived with the head-quarters. The Portsmouth Times says:—"Favourable weather was experienced by the Orontes up to Malta, but afterwards she met with head winds, and was in a gale on the night of the 24th in the Channel. In the afternoon she narrowly escaped a serious mishap. Thick weather, necessitating her course being, in part, steered on that day by dead reckoning, and powerful cross currents, had led to a deviation from her course, and in a heavy fog on that afternoon she ran, it is stated, within a couple of hundred yards of the Saints' Lighthouse, on the French coast, but the danger was avoided by stopping her engines and the starboarding of the helm, coupled with the fact that, with plain sails set, the wind was in a favourable quarter. The lighthouse off Ushant had been sighted, but in the thick weather it had been mistaken for the other one, and by a derangement of the sounding-line the sounding erroneously reported before the Saints' Lighthouse came in view was 65 fathoms. The 59th Regiment left the Curragh Camp in September, 1867, and sailed in three separate ships from Queenstown to Ceylon, where they remained till March, 1869, when they proceeded to Bombay. Since then the regiment has been quartered at Poonah, Mhow, Nusseerabad, Agra, and arrived in Delhi in 1876, so that they were present at the Imperial Assemblage, when the Queen was proclaimed Empress of India. In the following year they went to Dagshai, and in 1878 were ordered to the frontier, and Jan. 9, 1879, found them in Candahar. On the last day in that month they set out for Khelat-i-Ghilzai, but when they arrived they discovered that the enemy had decamped, so that the only duty which remained for them was to take possession of a vacated fort and all its matériel. There they remained for a month, when Candahar was revisited. In June, 1879, cholera broke out with virulence in the ranks, and two of the companies proceeded out of Fort Candahar, where the regiment was stationed, to the 'Gardens,' of which there are 17 in Candahar, and after staying there a week, removed to the racecourse, on the Candahar Common. One-half the regiment was next left behind, as the cholera had not abated so rapidly as was hoped, and the other subsequently moved up to Khelat-i-Ghilzai. The men were recovering from the cholera, and had proceeded on a four days' march to India, when the news of the massacre of Major Cavagnari startled both Europe and Asia, and the troops were ordered at once to return. The half of the regiment unaffected with cholera remained in the Pishin Valley, and afterwards the two battalions met at Candahar. There they were stationed last Christmas Day, when the Ghazis attacked the bazaar at Candahar, and effected such a slaughter that 'revenge' was the only word heard in England, India, and Afghanistan. A few of the men of the 59th were at the time in the bazaar, and one Ghazi was killed by the weapon of one of the number; but most of the regiment were in barracks, and remained under arms for the rest of the day, ready for a sortie at a moment's notice. But they did not stir, and a month or two later they left for Ghuznee, which they were timed to reach by March 31 of the present year, but on the 29th they fell in with a horde of Ghazis and tribesmen, and an engagement ensued, the natives being opposed by the 59th Regt., 3rd Goorkhas, 2nd Sikhs, 2nd Punjab Cavalry, A Baty. B Brigade R.H.A., the G Baty. 4th Brig., R.A., and a company of the 14th Punjab N.I. As all the world knows, the enemy was repulsed, but the 59th lost one killed, one died from wounds, and 10 wounded. The regiment was not engaged in Gen. Roberts's celebrated march, but the day after the engagement at Ghuznee they marched on Cabul, and then left for India, the regiment being formed into two battalions, which joined at Umballa, and returned from Bombay in the Orontes. When the regiment left Ireland, Col. Bush was in command. He was eventually succeeded by Col. De Montmorency, and Col. Lacy superseded him last year, and comes home with the regiment. The regiment, which is in a good state of health, no deaths occurring on the voyage, landed yesterday (Friday) morning, and proceeded at once to Gosport, where they were met by the bands of the 10th Regt. and the Royal Marines Light Infantry, which, joined to the band of the regiment, preceded the troops to the new barracks, that had only just been vacated by, the 24th Regt., who have gone to Colchester." Capt. Gunter is a passenger from Bombay to Portsmouth in H.M.S. Jumna, due on Tuesday next.

60th Rifles. Major Trotman, 1st Batn., Lieut. Kitson, 4th Batn., and 2nd Lieut. Fortescue, 2nd Batn., arrived home from India on Saturday last in H.M.S. Euphrates. The Celer et Audax Gazette, of the 3rd Batn., published at Fort Napier on the 1st ult., says:—"Two companies, A and B, were despatched from this station to support the Harding detachment on Oct. 7. Major Terry commanded the combined companies, and will assume command, on arrival at Umzimkulu, of the detachment under Capt. Smith, thus having a force of about 300 men, or half a battalion, under his charge. All started off in excellent spirits, ready, if called upon, to quit them like riflemen; but it must have required all their cheerfulness and perseverance to render their first marches anything but a miserable drag through rain and slush, with conductors and drivers who appear to have been perfectly useless for the first 48 hours at least." Lieut. Bewicke, 1st Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, due at Portsmouth on Tuesday next.
